(c) Evidence given by the holder of a stop watch as to the time taken in travelling between two points is evidence of fact, and not of opinion (Planey v. Marks (1906), 70 J. P. 216). For decisions as to accuracy of timing and the measurement of distances, see Gorham v. Brice (1902), 18 T. L. R. 424, where evidence as to speed, though timed by an untested watch, was held admissible; Yeaman v. Jameson, [1910] S. C. (Justiciary) 8; Wright v. Dumbartonshire Procurator-Fiscal (1910), 47 Sc. L. R. 699.

(e) Warning that a prosecution will follow unless a comparison of times shows no offence to have been committed is sufficient (Jessop v. Clarke (1908), 72 J. P. 358).

(f) It has been held in Scotland that this notice should be a written one, and should state particulars of the alleged offence, giving place, date and hour (Hughes v. Nimmo, [1910] S. C. (Justiciary) 45). In Beresford v. St. Albans Justices (1905), 22 T. L. R. 1, it was held that, in the absence of any evidence that the defendant was misled, a notice alleging an offence between two towns ten miles apart was sufficient. As to service of such a notice on a hall porter at defendant's chambers, see Martin v. Brooman (1909), 73 J. P. 484.

(g) Motor Car Act, 1903 (3 Edw. 7, c. 36), s. 9 (2). The prosecution must prove that a warning or notice was given to the accused person (Dickson v. Stevenson, [1912] S. C. (Justiciary) 1).

(i) These words apparently reproduce the effect of the decisions under the earlier statute of Smith v. Boon (1901), 84 L. T. 593, and Mayhew v. Sutton (1901), 86 L. T. 18; as to excessive speed in a village street, see also Ex parte Stone (1909), 73 J. P. 444.

(j) 3 Edw. 7, c. 36, s. 1 (1). As to the penalty, see p. 329, post. The provision creates apparently four distinct offences, only one of which can be included in a single conviction (R. v. Wells (1904), 68 J. P. 392). In a driver who commits such an offence within his view, if he refuses to give his name and address, or produce his licence on demand, or if the car does not bear the identification marks (k). If a driver who commits such an offence refuses to give his name or address, or gives a false name or address, he is guilty of an offence under the Motor Car Act, 1903 (l); and even though he does not so refuse (m), it is the duty of the owner of the car, if required, to give any information which it is within his power to give, and which may lead to the identification and arrest of the driver; if he fails to do so, he is guilty of an offence under the Act (n).

SECT. 3.
Motor Cars
(or Light Locomotives).

An owner, who is sitting by his driver and does not interfere to check a speed which he must know to be improper, may be convicted as a principal offender (o).

684. A person driving or in charge of a motor car when used on any highway or roadway to which the public are granted access may not cause the motor car to travel backwards for any greater distance or time than may be requisite for the safety or convenience of the occupants and of the passenger and other traffic on the road (p); he may not when on the motor car be in such a position that he cannot have control over it, or cannot obtain a full view of the road and traffic ahead of it (q); he may not quit the motor car without having taken due precautions to prevent its being started in his absence (q); he may not allow the motor car or a vehicle drawn by it to stand on the road so as to cause any unnecessary obstruction thereof (q); he must whenever necessary give audible and sufficient Scotland a conviction for driving "recklessly or negligently" has been quashed for duplicity (Connell v. Mitchell, [1909] S.C. (Justiciary) 13). It would seem that the words "having regard etc." apply to all four offences (Troughton v. Manning (1905), 69 J. P. 207); further, the words "including the nature etc." appear to be mere surplusage; their omission from a conviction does not vitiate it, nor limit the evidence admissible on an appeal (R. (Cahill) v. Dublin Justices, [1904] 2 I. R. 698; Elwes v. Hopkins, [1906] 2 K. B. 1). The provision is intended to safeguard passengers on the highway; therefore, if proper regard is being paid to their safety, a driver ought not to be convicted merely because some one choosing to hang on to the car for his own purposes is thereby endangered (Troughton v. Manning, supra). Although driving at a dangerous speed is an offence in itself, evidence of excessive speed is admissible on a charge of driving in a dangerous manner (Hargreaves v. Baldwin (1905), 69 J. P. 397). If, in convicting a defendant of dangerous driving, the court takes into account the question of speed, there cannot on the same facts be a conviction for exceeding the speed limit (Wellon v. Taneborne (1908), 72 J. P. 419).

(m) If, for example, the driver does not stop and cannot be questioned (R. v. Hankey (1905), 69 J. P. 219). The owner's obligation only arises if the driver is alleged to have committed an offence under the Motor Car Act, 1903 (3 Edw. 7, c. 36), s. 1, and a conviction of the owner must contain such an allegation (R. v. Hankey, supra; R. v. Chancellor, Ex parte Haasall (1905), 69 J. P. 383); an allegation, however, of an offence under the Motor Car Act, 1903 (3 Edw. 7, c. 36), s. 1 (1), not specifying which of the four possible offences is sufficient (Ex parte Beecham, [1913] 3 K. B. 45).

This last-mentioned regulation applies only to a motor car propelled by an internal combustion engine (w).

Duty in case of accidents.

685. A person driving a motor car must in any case, if an accident occurs to any person (whether on foot or horseback, or in a vehicle), or to any horse or vehicle in charge of any person, owing to the presence of the motor car on the road, stop, and, if required, give his name and address, and also the name and address of the owner and the registration mark or number of the car. A person knowingly contravening these provisions is liable to a fine not exceeding £10 for a first offence, to a fine not exceeding £20 for a second offence, and to a fine not exceeding £20, or to imprisonment for a period not exceeding one month, for any subsequent offence (a).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Restrictions on Motor Car Traffic.

Regulations
 of Local Government Board.

686. The Local Government Board (b) may make regulations with respect to the use of motor cars and trailers on highways and roadways to which the public are granted access, their construction, and the conditions under which they may be used (c). Such regulations may be of a local nature and limited in their application to a particular area, and may, on the application of any local authority, prohibit or restrict the use of motor cars for purposes of traction in crowded streets, or in other places where such use may be attended roads or in case of heavy cars.

Use and construction
regulations.

687. The regulations made by the Local Government Board may (1) prohibit or restrict the driving of any motor cars, or motor cars of any special kind, on any specified highway or roadway to which the public are granted access, or any part thereof, which does not exceed 16 feet in width, or on which ordinary motor car traffic would, in the opinion of the Board, be especially dangerous (e); (2) impose restrictions as to speed in the case of motor cars exceeding 2 tons in weight unladen (f); (3) make provision generally for facilitating the identification of motor cars, and in particular for determining and regulating generally the size, shape and character of the identifying marks to be carried and the mode in which they are to be fixed and rendered easily distinguishable, whether by day or night, and with respect to the registration of cars, and the entry of particulars, including particulars of the ownership of the car, in the register, and the giving of those particulars, and for making any particulars contained in the register available for use by the police, and for making the registration of the car void if the regulations as to registration are not complied with (g); (4) make provision with respect to drivers' licences, and in particular with respect to the register to be kept of such licences, and the renewal of licences, and for providing special facilities for granting licences to persons not resident in the United Kingdom, and for communicating particulars thereof to adjoining and other county or county borough councils, and for making any particulars as to persons whose licences are suspended or indorsed available for use by the police, and for preventing a person holding more than one licence (h).

Licensing
regulations.

688. Upon the application of the local authority (i) for any area, the Local Government Board may, by regulations with a view to the safety of the public, limit to ten miles per hour the speed of motor cars within any limits or place in that area (j). The Board

(e) Motor Car Act, 1903 (3 Edw. 7, c. 36), s. 8. It seems that, notwithstanding the provision as to a ten-mile limit in ibid., s. 9 (see the text, infra), the Board may fix under this provision a lower limit on narrow and specially dangerous roads.

Notice of regulations etc.

689. Local authorities (l) must give public notice of any regulation of the Local Government Board prohibiting or restricting the use of motor cars on particular roads (m), or limiting their speed within any limits or place (n), and must place notices in conspicuous places on or near to the road, part of a road, limits, or place to which the regulation refers (o), and, subject to regulations (p) as to size and colour, they must within their areas cause to be set up sign-posts denoting dangerous corners, cross roads, and precipitous places, where such posts appear to them to be necessary (q).

Speed limit in royal parks.

690. By virtue of the Parks Regulation Act, 1872 (r), and a statutory rule made thereunder, the Commissioners of Works may make regulations as to the speed of motor cars in royal parks (s).

Motor cars on bridges.

691. The council of any county or borough may make bye-laws preventing or restricting the use of motor cars and trailers upon any bridge within its area, if satisfied that such use would be attended with damage to the bridge or danger to the public (t).

A motor car may not be driven on or over the Menai Bridge, except in accordance with regulations made by the Commissioners of Works (u).

If injury is done to a bridge repairable by individuals by a motor car or trailer, the same statutory provisions as to making good damage and consequential loss apply as in the case of heavy locomotives (a).

Penalties.

692. Any person infringing any provision of the Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896 (b), or any bye-law or regulation made thereunder, is liable to a penalty not exceeding £10 (c).

Any person guilty of an offence under the Motor Car Act, 1903 (d), for which no special penalty is provided is liable to a fine not exceeding £20, and in the case of a subsequent conviction to a fine not exceeding £50, or imprisonment for a period not exceeding three months (e).

693. Any court before which a person is convicted of an offence under the Motor Car Act, 1903 (d), or of any offence in connexion with the driving of a motor car (f), other than a first or second offence consisting solely of exceeding any limit of speed fixed under the Motor Car Act, 1903 (g), (1) may, if the offender holds a driver's licence, suspend it for such time as the court thinks fit, and may also declare him disqualified for obtaining a licence for such further time after the expiration of his licence as the court thinks fit; and (2) may, if he does not hold a driver's licence, declare him disqualified for obtaining a licence for such time as the court thinks fit; and (3) must (h), if he holds a driver's licence, cause particulars of the conviction, and of any order of the court made under the section, to be indorsed on the licence, and cause a copy of such particulars to be sent to the council granting such licence (i).

(e) Ibid., s. 11 (1). Previous convictions should not be referred to in the summons, but notice should be given to a defendant of the intention to charge them (R. v. Hankey (1910), 55 Sol. Jo. 77).

(f) It has been held that convictions for the following offences must be indorsed:—Driving with back lamp not burning (Brown v. Crossley, [1911] 1 K. B. 603); with head lamp not burning (Ex parte Symes (1910), 75 J. P. 33); identification mark with figures of insufficient size (R. v. Gill, Ex parte McKim (1909), 73 J. P. 290); third offence against speed limit in royal parks (R. v. Plowden, [1909] 2 K. B. 269); and that convictions for the following need not be indorsed:—Obstructing the highway by leaving car standing by kerb whilst delivering goods at some distance (R. v. Yorkshire (West Riding) Justices, Ex parte Shackleton, [1910] 1 K. B. 439; compare R. v. Lyndon, Ex parte Moffat (1908), 72 J. P. 227). The production of a licence is prima facie evidence that the person producing it is the person named in it, and that the particulars which it contains refer to him (Martin v. White, [1910] 1 K. B. 665); and secondary evidence of such particulars may be given although no notice to produce the licence at the hearing has been given (ibid.; Marshall v. Ford (1908), 72 J. P. 480). If the defendant is not present to be identified, his identity, for the purpose of proving previous convictions, may be established by showing that his name and address and other particulars stated in the licence correspond with those of a person previously convicted (Martin v. White, supra); but a warrant cannot be issued for the arrest of the defendant so that he may be present to be identified when he is represented (R. v. Montgomery, Ex parte Long (1910), 74 J. P. 110; R. v. Thompson, [1909] 2 K. B. 614).

(g) 3 Edw. 7, c. 36. Notwithstanding these words the offence of exceeding a speed limit fixed under the Parks Regulation Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 15), is within the exception, and cannot therefore be indorsed on the first or second occasion (R. v. Marham, Ex parte Chamberlain, [1907] 2 K. B. 638).

(h) Neither the justices nor the High Court have any discretion in the matter if they convict or uphold a conviction (Cromwell v. Renton, [1911] S. C. (Justiciary) 86).

Appeal.

A person so convicted must, if he holds a driver's licence, produce it within a reasonable time for the purpose of indorsement; failure to do so is an offence under the Motor Car Act, 1903 (j).

694. An appeal lies to quarter sessions against an order of suspension or disqualification, if the defendant did not plead guilty, and, pending the hearing of the appeal, the court may in their discretion defer the operation of the order (k).

Any person adjudged to pay a fine (l) exceeding 20s. under the Motor Car Act, 1903 (m), may, if he did not plead guilty, appeal against the conviction to quarter sessions (n).

There is apparently no general right of appeal to quarter sessions against a conviction under the Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896 (o), or bye-laws or regulations made thereunder (p).

In the Metropolis an appeal lies to quarter sessions in any case where the fine imposed exceeds £3 (q).

SUB-SECT. 6.—Heavy Motor Cars and Trailers thereto.

Registration.

695. In the case of a heavy motor car (r), the owner on applying for registration must declare the weight of the car unladen, the axle weight of each axle (s), and the diameter of each wheel, and must submit the car for inspection and verification. The register must record the weight unladen, the axle weight of each axle, the diameter of each wheel, the width and material of the tire of each wheel, and the highest rate of speed at which in conformity with

697. A heavy motor car must bear on its off side its registered weight unladen and the registered axle weight (d) of each axle, and on the near side the highest rate of speed at which in conformity with the regulations it may be driven without a trailer (e). It must be constructed with sufficient and suitable springs between each axle and its frame (f); the diameter of the wheels must not be less than two feet if fitted with a tire which is not pneumatic nor made of a soft or elastic material (g); if the tires are not pneumatic or made of a soft or elastic material, they must comply with certain requirements as to construction and width (h). The axle weight of an axle of a heavy motor car may not exceed the registered axle weight. The registered axle weight of an axle may not exceed 8 tons, and the sum of the registered axle weights of all the axles may not exceed 12 tons (i).

It must bear on the off side its weight unladen, and also, if its weight exceeds 1 ton, the axle weight of each axle (n). If its weight unladen exceeds 1 ton, the tires and wheels must be of a prescribed width and size (o).

SECT. 3.
Motor Cars
 (or Light Locomotives).

Contra-vention of regulations.
 Speed.

700. No person may on any highway or roadway to which the public are granted access cause or permit to be used, or drive, or have charge of a heavy motor car, or trailer drawn by it, which is not in all respects in accordance with the regulations relating thereto, or which is so used or driven as to contravene the regulations (q).

701. The speed at which a heavy motor car is driven on a highway or roadway to which the public are granted access may not exceed eight miles per hour, and it may not exceed five miles per hour if the weight unladen exceeds 3 tons, or if the registered axle weight of any axle exceeds 6 tons, or if it draws a trailer; if, however, the heavy motor car has all its wheels fitted with pneumatic tires or tires of a soft or elastic material, the maximum speed is twelve miles per hour if the registered axle weight of any axle does not exceed 6 tons, and eight miles per hour if the registered axle weight of any axle exceeds 6 tons (r).

Bridges.

702. In the case of an ordinary bridge(s) forming part of a highway, if the person liable for its repair states in a prescribed notice (t) (1) that the bridge is insufficient to carry a heavy motor car the registered axle weight of any axle of which exceeds 3 tons, or the registered axle weights of the several axles of which exceed in the aggregate 5 tons, or any greater weight specified in the notice; or (2) that the bridge is insufficient to carry a heavy motor car drawing a trailer if the registered axle weights of the several axles of the car and the axle weights of the several axles of the trailer exceed in the aggregate 5 tons or any greater weight specified in the notice, then the owner of any such heavy motor car may not cause or suffer it to be driven, and the person driving or in charge of it may not drive it upon the bridge without the consent of the person liable for the repair (a). Differences arising between persons liable to repair bridges and aggrieved owners of heavy motor cars as to the sufficiency of the bridges are to be determined by arbitration. If the person liable to repair refuses or neglects to join in referring the difference to arbitration, the restrictive notice will cease to be of effect, and he must remove it (b).

(q) Heavy Motor Car Order, 1904, art. 13. Penalty not exceeding £10 (Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 36), s. 7).

(r) Heavy Motor Car Order, 1904, art. 7.

(s) Heavy Motor Car Order, art. 14, 1904, as altered by the Heavy Motor Car (Amendment) Order, 1907 (Stat. R. & O., 1907, p. 428), art. 1, does not apply to (1) the Menai Bridge, or any bridge which crosses the Thames and of which any part is in the Metropolis, nor (2) to any bridge (i.) whereof the use is subject to a statutory restriction inconsistent with its use by such motor cars as are described in the article, and (ii.) whereon the effect of such restriction is notified in the prescribed way (ibid., art. 14 (5)). The validity of ibid., art. 14, was supported as being intra vires in Lloyd v. Rags, [1913] 2 K. B. 332. As to bridges, generally, and the persons liable for their repair, see title HIGHWAYS, STREETS, AND BRIDGES, Vol. XVI., pp. 184 et seq.

(t) The Heavy Motor Car Order, 1904, art. 14 (3), as amended by the Heavy Motor Car (Amendment) Order, 1907, art. 1, prescribes the form of notice and how it is to be displayed.

(a) Heavy Motor Car Order, 1904, art. 14 (1), as amended by the Heavy Motor Car (Amendment) Order, 1907, art. 1.

(b) Heavy Motor Car Order, 1904, art. 14 (2), as amended by the Heavy Motor Car (Amendment) Order, 1907, art. 1.

In the case of an ordinary bridge forming part of a highway, the owner of a heavy motor car the registered axle weights of the several axles of which, with the axle weights of the several axles of any trailer drawn by it, exceed in the aggregate 6 tons, may not cause or suffer it to be driven, and the person driving or in charge of it may not drive it, upon the bridge at any time when another heavy motor car, or a heavy locomotive, is on the bridge (c).

Locomotives).

SUB-SECT. 7.—Miscellaneous.

703. A motor car is to be deemed to be a carriage within the meaning of any statute or of any statutory regulation or bye-law, and, if used as a carriage of any particular class, to be a carriage of that class, and subject to the law relating thereto (d). It is liable to be requisitioned as a carriage for military purposes in case of emergency (e).

704. Nothing in the Locomotive Act, 1861 (f), is to authorise the use on any highway of a motor car constructed or used so as to be a public or private nuisance (g), and nothing in the Motor Car Act, 1903 (h), is to affect any statutory or common law liability of the driver or owner of a motor car (i).

In the case of motor cars which are "hackney carriages" (r) within the meaning of that provision there is payable an original licence duty of 15s. In each country (h) some authority (i) or association empowered by that authority (j), may issue (1) certificates of fitness in respect of motor cars intended to be taken into a foreign country; (2) drivers' certificates of competence; and (3) an international travelling pass for any motor car in respect of which a certificate of fitness has been granted; such pass will give particulars of the person or persons intending to drive the car, and each such person must hold a certificate of competence (k).

privileges. In the case of a car so brought into England, the chief customs officer of the port of landing can register the car and issue drivers' licences to the persons mentioned in the pass. The car will carry a special plate indicating its nationality, in addition to its own national number plate. Details of all cars registered and licences issued will be forwarded to Scotland Yard, where full registers are kept. Such registration, licences, and marks are treated as satisfying the provisions of the Motor Car Act, 1903 (l); and the necessary modifications are made in that statute for the purposes of its application to such cars and drivers (m). Such cars are in general exempt from carriage licence duty (n).

Part VI.—Cycles and Velocipedes.

711. All provisions in public or private Acts under which before 1888 bye-laws could be made for regulating the use of bicycles, tricycles, velocipedes and other similar machines are repealed (o). Such machines are "carriages" within the meaning of the Highway Acts (p); and, in addition to the provisions of those Acts as to carriages (q), the following regulations apply:—

Cycles are
"carriages."

(1) Every person riding or being upon a bicycle, tricycle, or velocipede during the period between one hour after sunset and one hour before sunrise (r) must carry attached to it a lamp so constructed and placed as to exhibit a light in the direction in which he is proceeding, and so lighted as to afford adequate means of signalling his approach or position (s);

(2) Every such person upon overtaking any cart or carriage, or any horse, mule, or other beast of burden, or any foot passenger being on or proceeding along the carriageway, must, within a reasonable distance from and before passing the same, by sounding a bell or whistle, or otherwise, give audible and sufficient warning of his approach (t).

summary conviction for each offence to a penalty not exceeding 40s. (u): he cannot, however, be arrested without a warrant (x).

Part VII.—Aircraft.

Prescribed areas.

712. A Secretary of State may for the purpose of protecting the public from danger (a), or for the purposes of the defence or safety of the realm (b), from time to time by order prohibit the navigation of aircraft over such areas as may be prescribed in the order. Such an order may apply either to all aircraft generally or to aircraft of specified classes and descriptions; and may prohibit the navigation of aircraft over any prescribed area either at all times or at specified times or on specified occasions, and either absolutely or subject to specified exceptions (c). When an order is made for the purposes of the defence or safety of the realm, the area prescribed may include the whole or any part of the coastline of the United Kingdom and the territorial waters adjacent thereto (d). The Secretary of State may also by order prescribe the areas within which aircraft coming from any place outside the United Kingdom are to land, and the other conditions to be complied with by such aircraft (e).

Any person navigating an aircraft over a prescribed area in contravention of an order, or contravening any provision of an order as to the landing or navigation of aircraft coming from abroad (f), is, unless he proves that he was compelled to do so by stress of weather or other circumstances over which he had no control, liable on conviction on indictment or on summary conviction to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months, or to a fine not exceeding £200, or to both imprisonment and fine (g).

If an aircraft flies, or attempts to fly, over any area prescribed by an order made for the purposes of the defence or safety of the realm, or in the case of an aircraft coming from abroad fails to comply with any of the prescribed conditions as to landing, an authorised official may cause signals to be made, and, if the Aircraft.

An order (i) made under the powers above referred to has prescribed certain areas as prohibited areas for all aircraft, and certain portions of the coastline and adjacent territorial waters as prohibited areas for aircraft coming from abroad; for such aircraft certain landing places are prescribed, and various conditions laid down for their navigation (k). British naval and military aircraft are not affected by the order. Foreign naval and military aircraft may not land in or pass over the United Kingdom except on the invitation of the Government. Special provision is made in respect of British airships returning from a voyage abroad. Nothing in the order is to be construed as conferring any right to land upon any spot as against the owner thereof or as interfering with any civil rights (l). Aircraft
abroad.

Espionage by a person in an aircraft is punishable with penal servitude for seven years (m).

An aircraft may be requisitioned for military purposes in case of emergency (n).

Part I.—Introductory.

SECT. 1.—Course and Scope of Telegraph Legislation.

Necessity for legislation.

713. The transmission of messages from a distance by means of wires was brought to the attention of Parliament soon after science rendered such means of communication commercially practicable (a). For the purpose of obtaining compulsory powers of interference with or purchase of property under public control, or the subject of private rights and interests, those who first undertook the business of telegraphy found it advisable to come to Parliament to legalise proceedings which otherwise would have been indictable or actionable (b). Accordingly by the year 1863, in virtue of various special Acts or charters, companies had been formed for purposes of telegraphy, armed with the necessary statutory authority, which was of course only conferred subject to necessary statutory restrictions; and many railway companies were in possession of telegraphs worked under agreements with such telegraph companies. In that year, therefore, it was considered that the time had come to initiate general legislation for the facilitation and control of the telegraphic undertakings of all such companies as then were, or thereafter might be, authorised by special Act to construct and maintain telegraphs, and the first of a long series of Telegraphs Acts was passed (c). In 1868 the importance of telegraphy as a source of public revenue, and therefore proper to be placed, as the postal service already had been, under the control of the State, was realised, and the Postmaster-General was accordingly empowered by Parliament to acquire certain specified telegraphic undertakings (d). In 1869 he was invested with the monopoly of transmitting telegrams, and the services incidental thereto, together with much larger and more general powers of purchase (e), followed by further powers and privileges in 1878 (f), 1892 (g), 1899 (h), 1908 (i) and 1911 (j). In 1899 telephones were for the first time specifically made the subject of legislation (k), and in 1904 provision was made for wireless telegraphy (l). The above represent the main stages in the course of telegraphic legislation, and the statutes of the years named, together with others of minor importance, constitute the Telegraph Acts, 1863—1911 (m).

(l) Wireless Telegraphy Act, 1904 (4 Edw. 7, c. 24). This Act was to be in force until the 31st July, 1906, but by the Wireless Telegraphy Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 13), and a succession of Expiring Laws Continuance Acts, it has been continued to the present time; see, e.g., Expiring Laws Continuance Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 15), s. 1 (1), Sched.

(m) Each of the statutes since 1863 contains a provision that it may be cited with its predecessors as the Telegraphs Act, 1863, to date. The remaining statutes are the following:—Telegraph Act Amendment Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 3); Telegraph Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 88); Telegraph Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 58); Telegraph (Isle of Man) Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 34); Post Office and Telegraph Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 41); Telegraph (Arbitration) Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 20); Telephone Transfer Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 26); Telephone Transfer Amendment Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 56). There are, in addition, certain Money Acts, as to which see p. 391, post.

- SECT. 2.
Definitions. — telegraphic communication (n), and also as meaning and including any apparatus for transmitting messages and other communications by means of electric signals (o). The fact that new methods of telegraphy have been invented since the date of the passing of the Acts containing the definition does not prevent the application of the Acts to such methods, provided that they answer the requirements and fall within the terms of the definition (p). The expression therefore includes telephones (a) and wireless telegraphy (b), each of which, however, is also the subject of special legislation (c). Pneumatic and other tubes (d) used for the purpose of transmitting telegraphic messages, or maintaining telegraphic communication, are expressly made subject to certain provisions of the Telegraph Acts (e), but submarine cables do not fall within the scope of the Telegraph Acts (f).
- Telegram. The term "telegram" means any message or other communication transmitted or intended for transmission by a telegraph (g).
- Post. The term "post" means any post, pole, standard, stay, strut, or other above-ground contrivance for carrying, suspending, or supporting a telegraph (h).
- Work. The term "work" includes telegraphs and posts (i).
- Telegraphic line. The term "telegraphic line" comprises telegraphs, posts, and any work, and also any cable, apparatus, pneumatic or other tube, pipe, or thing whatsoever used for the purpose of transmitting telegraphic messages or maintaining telegraphic communication, and any portion of such telegraphic line (k).
- Other definitions. 715. There are various descriptions of real property in relation to which certain public and local authorities and private individuals have rights, duties, and interests which are affected by the Acts. To these special statutory meanings are assigned. The principal terms defined are the following, namely:—

- (n) Telegraph Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 112), s. 3.
 (o) Telegraph Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 73), s. 3.
 (p) A.-G. v. Edison Telephone Co. of London (1880), 6 Q. B. D. 244.
 (a) Ibid. Further, the use either of wires without electricity, such as an arrangement of common bells, if intended as a code of signals (ibid., at p. 249), or of electricity without wires, such as a system of fire alarm signals etc. (Postmaster-General v. National Telephone Co., Ltd., [1909] A. C. 269, 274), is sufficient to bring the apparatus within the definition.
 (b) "Wireless telegraphy" is defined in the Wireless Telegraphy Act, 1904 (4 Edw. 7, c. 21), s. 1 (7), for the purposes of that Act; see p. 374, post; see also A.-G. v. Edison Telephone Co. of London, supra, at p. 249.
 (c) See pp. 371 et seq., post.
 (e) Telegraph Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 59), s. 8, applying the sections of the Telegraph Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 112), and of the Telegraph Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 76), which relate to underground telegraphs. As to the Telegraph Acts, see note (m), p. 349, ante.

 (k) Telegraph Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 76), s. 2.

The term "street" in the Telegraph Act, 1863 (l), is defined as meaning a public way, situate within a city, town, or village, or between lands continuously built upon on either side, and repaired at the public expense, or at the expense of any turnpike or other public trust, or ratione tenuræ, and as including the footpaths of such way, and any bridge forming part thereof (m). For the purposes of the Telegraph Act, 1878 (n), the expression includes any highway (o), and, for the purposes of the Telegraph Act, 1892 (p), any public way, though not repairable as above mentioned (q).

SECT. 2.
Definitions.
Street.

The term "public road" is defined in the Telegraph Act, 1863, as a public highway for carriages repaired at the public expense, or at the expense of any turnpike or other public trust, or ratione tenuræ, and not being a street, and as including its footpaths and any bridge forming part thereof (r). The expression, for the purposes of the Telegraph Act, 1878 (n), includes any highway (s), and, for the purposes of the Telegraph Act, 1892 (p), any public highway for carriages, though not repairable as above mentioned, and, if enclosed between hedges, water, or other fences, any public highway for horses, and any private road which is also a public footpath (t).

Public road.

The term "land" is defined as meaning any land, not being a street or public road, as above defined, and not being land by the side of and forming part of a public road; and it includes land laid out for, and proposed by the owner to be converted into, a street or public road (a). For the purposes of the Telegraph Act, 1863 (l), it further includes any term, estate, easement, right, or privilege, in, over, or affecting such land, and in the case of undertakings purchased or acquired by the Postmaster-General, the works, tubes, wires, posts, and other property so purchased or acquired (c).

Land.

The term "railway" includes any station, work, or building connected with a railway (d).

Railway.

"Canal" comprises navigation, navigable river, and any dock, basin, towing path, wharf, work, or building connected with a canal (e).

Canal.

The terms "hedge" and "bank" include, for the purposes of certain special enactments, a ditch adjoining thereto, and forming part of the boundary of a street or public road, as if such ditch formed part of the hedge or bank (f).

SECT. 3.—Persons to whom the Telegraph Acts Apply.

716. Telegraphic legislation regulates the relations between, on the one hand, persons, companies (g), and bodies (h) acquiring or carrying on telegraphic undertakings, and, on the other, persons, corporations, and bodies having the control of public property, namely, public, local, or road authorities, or owning private property or businesses, the exercise of whose powers, rights, and duties, whether statutory or not, affect, and are affected by, the exercise of statutory rights, powers, and duties under the Telegraph Acts (i).

717. As regards the former of the above two classes, the Telegraph Act, 1863 (k), applies only to companies then or thereafter to be authorised by special Act to construct and maintain telegraphs (l), and to the Postmaster-General (m). A company not so authorised by special Act, such as an ordinary limited company, is not entitled to the rights conferred, or subject to the liabilities imposed, by that statute (n). The persons and bodies whose telegraphic undertakings may be purchased by the Postmaster-General under later statutes (o), and who are otherwise affected thereby, comprise any company, corporation, or persons for the time being engaged in transmitting, or authorised by their instrument of incorporation to transmit, telegrams for money or other consideration (p). The Telegraph Act, 1878 (q), applies some of its provisions to the agents of the Postmaster-General and other persons concerned (a).

718. In conceding powers and facilities to telegraphic undertakers Parliament has been careful to give adequate protection to the necessarily, at times, conflicting rights, interests, and duties

(g) For a form of clause to be inserted in the memorandum of association of a company formed to acquire and carry on telegraphic undertakings, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. IV., p. 312.

(h) The term "body" is defined in the Telegraph Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 112), s. 3, as including "a body of trustees or commissioners, municipal corporation, grand jury, board, vestry, company, or society, whether incorporated or not," and any provision referring to a body applies to a person, as the case may require.

(p) The definition of "any company" in the Telegraph Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 110), s. 3, comprised only such companies as were then engaged in telegraphic business, but the Telegraph Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 73), s. 3, removed this limitation.

(q) 41 & 42 Vict. c. 76.

(a) The term "agents" is defined in the Telegraph Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 76), s. 2, as including contractors, and also the officers, engineers, workmen, or servants of the Postmaster-General, undertakers, bodies or persons, as well as of his or their contractors. of public authorities, such as the Board of Trade, in relation to the seashore (b); local and road authorities, in respect of streets and public roads and other matters under their control (c); companies engaged in undertakings, other than telegraphic, under parliamentary authority (d), such as railway, canal, water, gas, electric light, tramway, and other commercial companies (e); and the owners, lessees, and occupiers of lands and buildings (f). Such protection is also given by other legislation specially directed to the facilitation and regulation of the undertakings referred to, whilst at the same time according reciprocal protection to, amongst others, those engaged in telegraphic business (g).

SECT. 3.
Persons to Telegraph

Acts Apply.

SECT. 4.—Extent of the Telegraph Acts.

719. All the Telegraph Acts (h) extend to the whole of the United Kingdom. Most of the Acts extend to the Isle of Man, and many of them to the Channel Islands also, as well as to the United Kingdom (i); and special provision has been made in some of the Acts for the necessary modifications in the application of them to these islands (k). The wireless telegraphy legislation applies further to British and foreign ships in certain waters (l). The statutes relating to submarine cables, which are not included in the Telegraph Acts, extend to the whole of His Majesty's dominions (m). With reference to places outside His Majesty's dominions, where

(d) "Undertaking," for this purpose, is defined in the Telegraph Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 76), s. 2, as "the works or undertaking, of whatever nature, the execution of which is authorized by an Act of Parliament," and "undertakers" as "the parties, whether company, commissioners, trustees, corporations, or private persons, empowered by such Act of Parliament to execute an undertaking, and any lessee or tenant thereof."

(e) See pp. 365, 366, post. Certain railway and canal companies are excepted from the operation of certain of the statutes; see Telegraph Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 110), ss. 11, 12; Telegraph Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 76), ss. 13, 14; Telegraph Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 59), s. 7; Telegraph (Construction) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 33), s. 8; Telegraph (Construction) Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 39), ss. 4, 5, 6.

(i) The Telegraph Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 38), and the Telegraph (Construction) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 33), both of which relate largely to telephones, and the Telegraph (Construction) Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 39), are not expressed to extend beyond the United Kingdom. The following extend to the Isle of Man as well as the United Kingdom:—Telegraph Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 76); Telegraph (Isle of Man) Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 34); and Telegraph Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 59). The rest of the Telegraph Acts extend to the whole of the British Islands, i.e., the United Kingdom, the Isle of Man, and the Channel Islands (Jersey, Guernsey, Alderney, and Sark), either in virtue of the Telegraph Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 88), s. 3, which relates to all the previous Telegraph Acts, or by virtue of express provisions in the several Acts themselves. As to the United Kingdom, see title STATUTES, p. 162, note (p), ante.

His Majesty has jurisdiction, there is authority to make an Order in Council as to (inter alia) the installation and use of telegraphy (a).

720. Submarine cable legislation is based on an international convention which continues in force for successive periods, unless and until determined by notice at specified times on the part of any of the high contracting parties, in which case it is determined as regards that party only (b).

721. The wireless telegraphy legislation, the duration of which was, in the first instance, limited, has been continued periodically by successive statutes (c).

Part II.—Monopoly of the Postmaster-General.

SECT. 1.—Preferential Rights of the State.

Privileges.

722. The State has always claimed certain rights of control over telegraphs for the public service. In 1815 and in 1844 privileges of this character were conferred on the Admiralty (d) and on the Treasury (e) respectively. The Telegraph Acts (f) have preserved and extended such rights and privileges. Thus, any Secretary of State, or, in Ireland, the Lord Lieutenant, and any department of the Government, is entitled to priority for messages on His Majesty's service; any company authorised by special Act to construct and maintain telegraphs may be required by the Board of Trade to place and maintain a telegraph for the exclusive use of His Majesty; and any Secretary of State, or, in Ireland, the Lord Lieutenant, may by warrant require the works or business of any such company to be placed in the possession or under the control of the State (g).

(a) Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 37). Such an order has been made for the island of Cyprus; see Cyprus Telegraphs Order, 1904 (Stat. R. & O., 1904, p. 248).

(e) Railway Regulation Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict. c. 85), ss. 13, 14, empowering the Treasury to call upon any railway company to lay down a line of telegraph for the exclusive use of the Crown, and giving the Crown preferential rights to the use of all telegraphs of railway companies generally.

(f) As to the Telegraph Acts, see note (m), p. 349, ante.

(g) Telegraph Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 112), ss. 48—52, as amended by the Telegraph Act Amendment Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 3), ss. 1, 2, 3. Government messages are to be specially marked "priority" (Telegraph Act, 1863 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 110), s. 17). Compensation must be paid for the exclusive use of any telegraph required for the purposes of the State; as to this, see p. 382, post; and title CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, Vol. VII., p. 69, note (k).

SECT. 2.—*Monopoly and Exclusive Rights of the Postmaster-General.*SECT. 2.
Monopoly and Exclusive Rights of the Postmaster-General.Purchase of undertakings.
Exclusive transmission of telegrams.

723. The Postmaster-General (h) was empowered in 1868 and 1869 to purchase the telegraphic undertakings of any company, corporation, or persons for the time being engaged in transmitting, or by any instrument of incorporation authorised to transmit telegrams, for money or other consideration, on certain prescribed terms (i).

724. The Postmaster-General has, by himself or his deputies, subject to certain exceptions (k), the exclusive privilege of transmitting telegrams and of performing all the incidental services of receiving, collecting, or delivering them within the territorial limits of the Telegraph Acts (l), from which it results that, with the exceptions referred to, no one can lawfully conduct a telegraphic business otherwise than as his licensee, agent, or lessee (m).

725. The classes of excepted telegrams are six in number (n), namely:—(1) Telegrams in respect of the transmission of which no charge is made, transmitted by a telegraph maintained or used solely for private use, and relating to the business or private affairs of its owner (o); (2) telegrams transmitted without charge by a telegraph maintained for the private use of a corporation, company, or person (p); in this case, the telegraph need not invariably be used for the purposes of, nor need the telegrams invariably relate to, the private affairs of the corporation, company, or person, provided that the main object of the maintenance of the telegraph is to facilitate the conduct of such affairs (q); (3) telegrams transmitted Exceptions.

(h) As to the status, office, official name, and powers of the Postmaster-General, see titles CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, Vol. VII., pp. 105, 106; POST OFFICE, Vol. XXII., pp. 625 et seq.; see also Telegraph Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 76), s. 11; Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), s. 12 (11).

These powers as regards telegraphs in the popular sense of the word have long been exhausted. Telephones have, as from 31st December, 1911, been transferred to the Postmaster-General; see Telephone Transfer Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 26); Telephone Transfer Amendment Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 56); Postmaster-General v. National Telephone Co., Ltd., [1909] A. C. 269; National Telephone Co., Ltd. v. Postmaster-General, [1913] 2 K. B. 614, C. A. As to the territorial limits within which the powers of purchase may be exercised, see p. 353, ante. (l) As to the Telegraph Acts, see note (m), p. 349, ante.

(m) This monopoly, which, to a very limited extent, had been conferred by the Telegraph Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 110), s. 9 (9), was granted in the general and absolute terms stated in the text by the Telegraph Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 73), s. 4. with the written licence or consent, either special or general, of the Postmaster-General, under the hand of any officer of the Post Office authorised by him for that purpose (a); (4) telegrams transmitted by any company existing on the 22nd July, 1869, the undertaking of which has not been purchased by the Postmaster-General (b); (5) telegrams the transmission of which is authorised by the Telegraph Act, 1868 (c), or by any agreement confirmed thereby or made in pursuance thereof (d); (6) telegrams transmitted to or from any place outside the territorial limits of the Telegraph Acts (e).

valuable consideration. In neither case must any profit be made out of the use of the telegraphs by others. The distinctions between the two classes, owing to the cumbrous drafting of the enactment, are not easy to detect: see A.-G. v. Edison Telephone Co. of London (1880), 6 Q. B. D. 244, 259—262; Postmaster-General v. National Telephone Co., Ltd., [1909] A. C. 269. Both these cases related to telephones, which (see p. 350, ante) are a species of statutory "telegraph." In A.-G. v. Edison Telephone Co. of London, supra, it was thought that there was very little, if any, difference in substance between the two classes; but in Postmaster-General v. National Telephone Co., Ltd., supra, the following distinction was drawn: the first class contemplates both maintenance and user of the telegraph exclusively for the purpose of transmitting telegrams relating solely to the affairs of the owner of the telegraph, such as communications between the head office of a bank and its branches, or between a merchant's private residence and his office. The second class, on the other hand, is designed to cover the case of the maintenance of a telegraph for the private use of its owner; but it is not imperative that the telegraph should be maintained or used solely for his private use, or that the telegram transmitted should relate to his business, and the casual and gratuitous use of the telegraph by third persons for business in which its owner has no concern is not prohibited, as, for instance, where the telegraph is maintained for the main purpose of communications between a railway company and coal merchants or other traders, the very case mentioned as an exception in the Telegraph Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 110), s. 9 (8). Telegrams transmitted by such a telegraph may, on occasion, relate to the affairs of other persons, but not so frequently as to constitute it a practice, for, in that event, it could not be said that the telegraph was maintained for private use. The two classes are designed to cover different sets of circumstances, though the ground covered by them may, in many cases, overlap. All the kinds of telephonic communication, however, set out in the schedule to the special case there stated, appeared to the House of Lords to fall outside both classes. These included a system of fire-alarm signals between police, householders, and local authorities, and telephonic communications between a doctor and chemist, between a brewery and a distillery company, between a theatre-ticket agency and theatres or hotels, between an estate agent and a builder, between a bank and a firm of printers, between a steamship company and a tourist agency, and between a company and its solicitor. In none of these cases could it fairly be said that the telegraph was either maintained and used exclusively for the private purposes of its owner, or maintained, as a general practice, for the private purposes of one only of the companies or persons between whom it was used as a medium of communication.

As to the Telegraph Acts, see note (m), p. 349, ante; as to their territorial limits, see p. 353, ante.

726. The Postmaster-General has the exclusive privilege of applying to certain tribunals to dispense with the consents of bodies and persons which, in other cases, constitute a condition precedent to the construction or execution of certain telegraphic works, and to substitute therefor, in the event of the application being granted, the consents of such tribunals (f).

SECT. 3.—Special Exemptions of the Postmaster-General.

Dispensing with consents.
Exemptions from liability.

727. In addition to the above-mentioned exclusive rights and powers, the Postmaster-General is entitled, either under the Telegraph Acts (g) or by virtue of his office, to certain exemptions from liabilities and duties to which others engaged in the transmission of telegrams are subject. Thus, where he comes into the possession of a telegraphic line which has been constructed by his predecessor in title otherwise than in conformity with the Telegraph Acts in force for the time being, he is, in the first instance, exempt from the liability, which would attach in any other case, to have his property and undertaking treated as illegally held and exercised (h), and remains so exempt unless and until some road authority or landowner, who would have been entitled under the Acts to require the removal of the line, if it had been constructed in accordance therewith, gives notice to him to remove it (i).

Statutory exemptions.

The Postmaster-General is unaffected by any of the provisions for the prevention of danger or obstruction to the public from any of his posts or underground wires, tubes, or other apparatus or property which may be contained in bye-laws or regulations framed by urban authorities under the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890 (k), and also by any of the like provisions in certain local Acts (l).

The Postmaster-General is also exempted under the Telegraph Acts (g) from all stamp duties in the case of any instrument executed by him (m), and also from the necessity of finding sureties when giving the bond required by the Lands Clauses Acts (n) in certain cases of compensation (o).

(f) As to the circumstances and modes in which the Postmaster-General is authorised to exercise these rights, see pp. 377 et seq., post.

Licences.

728. Independently of the above immunities, which are the creation of the Telegraph Acts (p), the Postmaster-General is entitled to various exemptions by virtue of his office (q).

SECT. 4.—Delegation of Powers and Duties.

729. On acquiring the undertaking of any telegraph company, the Postmaster-General may, with the consent of the Treasury, lease the whole or part of the undertaking, or of any property acquired for telegraphic purposes, to any company or person (r), whereas other telegraph undertakers are prohibited, with certain specified exceptions, from transferring, selling, or leasing their undertaking or works, or any part thereof, without the consent of the Board of Trade (s).

730. The Postmaster-General may appoint deputies, officers, and agents to execute works, transact telegraphic business, make applications to the prescribed authorities or tribunals for necessary consents, serve notices, or grant licences, on his behalf (t).

731. The Postmaster-General is empowered to grant written licences on such pecuniary and other terms as he may deem proper, either generally or in the individual case, to any company, person or body, to transmit telegrams (u). By the same or another licence, offices or telegraph facilities at the request of the authority, see title Post Office, Vol. XXII., p. 650.

(p) As to the Telegraph Acts, see note (m), p. 349, ante.

(q) Thus, estoppel cannot be set up against him (Postmaster-General v. Green (1887), 51 J. P. 582, C. A. (where, a post office clerk having allowed the defendant to send a telegram, which was not a "press telegram," at "press telegram" rates, the Postmaster-General recovered the difference, and the defendants were not allowed to set up any estoppel against a public official discharging his statutory duty under the Telegraph Acts)). Again, in his official capacity, he is not responsible to third persons for the wrongful acts or defaults of those who are executing his directions, since they, like himself, are officers of the Crown (Bainbridge v. Postmaster-General, [1906] 1 K. B. 178, C. A.); nor does he incur any liability in his individual capacity (Jones v. Monsell (1872), 6 I. R. C. L. 153). The proper procedure in such cases is to present a petition of right to the Crown (St. James and Pall Mall Electric Light Co. v. R. (1904), 73 L. J. (K. B.) 518). Lastly, a debt due to him is a Crown debt, and therefore preferential, and not subject to the ordinary bankruptcy rule of rateable distribution amongst creditors (Re Niblock, [1907] 2 I. R. 559). As to the position of the Postmaster-General generally, see titles CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, Vol. VII., pp. 105, 106; Post Office, Vol. XXII., p. 628; PUBLIC AUTHORITIES AND PUBLIC OFFICERS, Vol. XXIII., pp. 299 et seq.

(t) By the Telegraph Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 110), s. 9 (7), the railway companies therein referred to are to act, in receiving and transmitting telegrams by their telegraphs, as the agents of the Postmaster-General. As to the Postmaster-General's powers generally of appointing officers, deputies, and agents for postal, including telegraphic, purposes, see title Post Office, Vol. XXII., pp. 628 et seq. As to the meaning of "agents" in the Telegraph Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 76), s. 2, see p. 362, ante; as to the granting of licences by an officer, see the text, infra.

(u) The Telegraph Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 73), s. 5, impliedly authorises the Postmaster-General, by himself or by an officer appointed by him for that he may authorise the licensee, during the time and within the area specified therein, to exercise any other of the powers, also to be specified therein, which are conferred upon him by certain enactments of the Telegraph Acts (a). The licensee is not to exercise any such powers except in an urban district, or such area adjoining an urban sanitary district as is described in the licence, or without the consent in London of the London County Council, and in any urban sanitary district outside London of the urban sanitary authority, and elsewhere of the county council (b); the licensee is to be subject to any terms and conditions which the county council or urban sanitary authority may attach to such consent, and must comply with any regulations of such council or authority from time to time in force in relation to telegraphic lines (c). There are special and elaborate provisions as to licences for telephonic communication and for wireless telegraphy respectively (d).

SECT. 4.
Delegation of Powers and Duties.

A licence to transmit telegrams, as distinct from a licence delegating any of the powers and duties above mentioned, merely operates to except the acts licensed from the Postmaster-General's purpose, to grant written licences or consents, either special or general, to any person to transmit telegrams, inasmuch as telegrams so transmitted are thereby excepted from his monopoly.

(a) Telegraph Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 59), s. 5 (1). The powers which may be so delegated are those conferred upon the Postmaster-General by any provision of the Telegraph Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 112), or of the Telegraph Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 76), or of the Telegraph Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 59), s. 2, as to which last see p. 378, post. In the Telegraph Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 59), s. 6 (1), the authority of a licensee in that behalf to enter into agreements with electric lighting companies is recognised. As to the Telegraph Acts, see note (m), p. 349, ante.

(b) As to urban districts and urban sanitary districts, see title LOCAL GOVERNMENT, Vol. XIX., pp. 262 et seq.; as to the extent of "London," as controlled by the London County Council, see title METROPOLIS, Vol. XX., pp. 393 et seq.

(c) Telegraph Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 59), s. 5 (2). The terms and regulations here referred to are such as regulate user, and not construction. Therefore, prima facie, it is for the Postmaster-General to require the proper authority to give its consent to the laying or placing of the telegraphs, or to submit the question to the prescribed tribunal (Postmaster-General v. Edinburgh Corporation (1899), 10 Ry. & Can. Tr. Cas. 247). No licensee has such right, unless given him in the clearest and most explicit terms by his licence; where it is not so given, and the licensee, notwithstanding, invokes the assistance of the statutory tribunal in case of any difference, prohibition will lie (National Telephone Co., Ltd. v. Tunbridge Wells Corporation (1901), 17 T. L. R. 459, C. A.; followed in National Telephone Co., Ltd. v. Huddersfield Corporation (1901), 17 T. L. R. 460, C. A.). As a further illustration of the strictness with which these licences must be construed, see South Eastern Railway v. National Telephone Co., Ltd., [1908] 2 Ch. 50 (affirmed on other grounds, and without expressing any opinion on the construction of the clause in question, [1908] 2 Ch. 514, C. A.), where the defendants had a telephone licence containing, amongst other restrictive clauses, a clause excepting from the delegated powers all powers of constructing works in, under, upon, along, over, or across any railway, and it was held by WARRINGTON, J., that they were not licensed to place a telegraph along a public road which crossed a railway, notwithstanding that, by a proviso to the Telegraph Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 112), s. 32, the placing of a telegraph along such a public road is authorised, the reason being that the statutory proviso was not repeated as a proviso to the clear and comprehensive prohibitory words of the clause in the licence. For a form of clause relating to the placing of telegraph wires, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. IV., p. 228.

statutory monopoly, and to render lawful that which otherwise would be illegal; the licensee is not a monopolist to the extent of the delegated privileges in place of the Postmaster-General, nor is he entitled to the rights or subject to the liabilities of such a monopolist, and he may therefore give a preference to one customer over another (e). In the case, however, of a licence delegating any of the above-mentioned statutory powers, the position is different. The licensee is something more than a bare licensee, and stands in the place of the Postmaster-General as regards all rights appearing clearly and expressly from the terms of the licence and the enactments authorising the delegation. Outside these precise limits the licence has no efficacy (f).

Part III.—Construction and Maintenance of Telegraphs.

SECT. 1.—Powers and Duties of Public Authorities.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Streets and Public Roads.

Interference with streets and roads.

732. Companies authorised by special Act to construct and maintain telegraphs, and the Postmaster-General (g), are, subject to certain conditions, empowered to execute the following works in streets and public roads (h), namely:—(1) to place and maintain any telegraph under, over, along, or across, or any post in or upon, any street or public road, and, when placed, alter or remove the same (i); (2) to alter the position, in any street or public road, of any pipe (not being a main) for the supply of water or gas (k); and (3), for any of the purposes mentioned above, to open or break up any street or public road (l).

Conditions
as to notices and consents.

733. Notice must be given before breaking up the street or public road to the body having control thereof, specifying the time for the commencement of the work (m); and before placing any telegraph, the consent of such body must be obtained (n), with this qualification, that in the case of the Postmaster-General the withholding of such consent is not final, but creates a difference, which thereupon becomes the subject of statutory adjustment (o); and before placing any telegraph underground, notice must be given to such body of the intended depth, course, and position thereof, which matters must either be agreed or form the subject of a counter-notice, any difference as to which is to be settled in the prescribed manner (p).

SECT. 1.
Powers and Duties of Public Authorities.

734. Upon breaking up any street or public road, (1) the work must be completed as soon as possible and the street or road reinstated, and in the meantime fenced, watched, and lighted (q); (2) payments must be made to the body having control for any increased expense for six months of repairing the street or road occasioned by the breaking up (r); (3) the body is entitled to do the work of opening the street or road instead of the company or the Postmaster-General, and, if it elects so to do, may recover the expenses from it or him (s); and (4) not more than a certain prescribed extent of the roadway may be opened up at one time (t).

Conditions
as to construction.

735. Upon placing the telegraph, (1) all underground tubes and pipes are to have distinguishing marks (a); (2) all above-ground telegraphs are to be placed at such a height as not to interfere with passage for any purpose in the street or public road (b); (3) any telegraph which is abandoned or falls into decay may be removed by the body having control of the street or road (c); (4) whenever any such body has occasion to alter the level of such street or road, the company or the Postmaster-General, as the case may be, must on one month's notice remove and replace any of their works as required by such notice, subject, however, to adjustment in the prescribed manner of any difference which may arise on the question (d); (5) any post in or upon a street or public road which such body may consider dangerous or inconvenient must be removed or placed in a different position on a fourteen days' notice, subject to a seven days' counter-notice if the Postmaster-General or the company object, whereupon a difference arises, to be adjusted as prescribed (e); and (6) any

- Consents. 737. The consent of all bodies and persons interested must first be obtained, such consent, in the case of the Crown, to be given in writing by the Commissioners of Woods, or one of them (k). If such consent is withheld a difference arises, which is the subject of statutory adjustment (l).

- Powers of Board of Trade. 738. Before constructing or placing any work or buoy or sea-mark connected therewith, a plan is to be submitted to the Board of Trade for its approval (m). The work must be done in accordance with the approved plans, otherwise it may be removed by the Board of Trade (n). Any such work, buoy, or sea-mark which falls into decay may also be so removed (o), and is subject to survey and examination from time to time by the Board of Trade at the expense of the company or Postmaster-General (p), such expenses being recoverable, with costs, as a penalty (q).

SECT. 2.—*Rights and Interests of Private Owners.*SUB-SECT. 1.—Land or Buildings.

739. Any company authorised by special Act to construct and maintain telegraphs, and the Postmaster-General, may place and maintain telegraphs and posts under, in, upon, over, along, or across any private land or building (r).

740. The consent of the owner, lessee, or occupier must be obtained before any work is placed in, upon, over, along, or across any such land or building, or by the side thereof, in such a position as to interfere with the landowner's access thereto; where, however, a work has been placed over, along, or across any building, or across any land, near a street or public road, and the consent of the body having control of such street or road has been obtained to the placing thereof over, across, or along the street or road, the consent of the landowner is not necessary, unless the land or building is Crown property, or the land is laid out as building ground, or as a garden or pleasure ground, or is dedicated to the recreation of the public, or unless the public road passes through or by the side of, or crosses or abuts on, any park or pleasure grounds or ornamental water, or private drive through the same, or to any mansion (s). No above-ground telegraph or post may be placed within ten yards of a dwelling-house, nor any above-ground telegraph across any avenue or approach to a dwelling-house, without the consent of the occupier, or, if none, the lessee, or, if neither, the owner (t). In cases where the consent of the body having control has been obtained, notice must be given to the landowner, or to the frontagers, as the case may be, in the prescribed manner, of the fact of such consent having been obtained, and of the proposed course of the telegraph, subject, in the case of frontagers, to a statutory settlement of any difference that may arise (a).

No telegraph can be placed less than six feet over a dwelling-house if the owner, lessee, or occupier objects (b).

Where any landowner or other person (c) is liable for the repair of any street or public road dedicated to the public, his consent, as well as that of the road authority, must be obtained to the placing of any work in, upon, over, along, or across such street or road (d). The provision in question contemplates the existence of two separate and distinct persons, the one being the road authority and the other the landowner or person liable to repair, not the case of a road authority which happens to be also the landowner; a road authority, therefore, in which these two characters are united, and which has no absolute or unappealable veto as a road authority, cannot assert that right in its other character as a landowner (e).

In all the above cases the withholding of any consent by any landowner as above mentioned creates, as between the Postmaster-General (f) and the landowner, a statutory difference, to be adjusted as prescribed (g).

741. The exercise of the statutory powers of interfering with private lands or buildings is subject to the payment of full compensation to every landowner whose land is injuriously affected, to be settled as prescribed (h).

If any landowner at any time after the placing of the telegraph desires to extend, vertically or laterally, any building owned or occupied by him over which such telegraph has been placed, or if any such landowner, or the lord of the manor, or other person interested in any land or building, in, upon, over, along, or across which, or any street or public road adjoining which, any telegraphic work has been placed, desires subsequently to build on or inclose such land, or to alter or improve, or apply to other uses, such land or building, and the continuance of the telegraphic work will interfere with the accomplishment of his desires, he may give notice of his intention, requiring, within fourteen days, the necessary raising or alteration in position of the telegraphic work, so as to obviate such interference; the company or the Postmaster-General, as the case may be, must then execute the required alterations within the fourteen days, unless the existence of the alleged intention is challenged, in which case a statutory means of deciding the question is provided; if the decision of the prescribed tribunal is in favour of the landowner, the alterations must be executed within fourteen

742. If the Postmaster-General desires to construct or is constructing a telegraphic line along a street or public road, the owner, lessee, or occupier of any hedge or bank forming the boundary of such street or road, or of any uninclosed land on the side and within twenty feet thereof, not being common land, or land dedicated to the recreation of the public, may be required to give his consent to the construction of the line, and if he fails to do so within a month, a difference is to be deemed to have arisen, which is the subject of statutory adjustment (k). Where a tree overhangs any street or road, and interferes with the maintenance or construction of any telegraphic line, the Postmaster-General may require the tree to be lopped, and if the owner or occupier of the land on which the tree is growing fails to comply within a month the Postmaster-General may cause the tree to be lopped, subject to compensation (l).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Commercial Undertakings.

743. The execution of telegraphic works may obviously affect the interests of those engaged in commercial undertakings for other than telegraphic purposes. Detailed provision is made in the Telegraph Acts (m), or in the Acts regulating such other undertakings, or in both, for the safeguarding of these interests, where they conflict with those of the Postmaster-General, or with those of any company authorised to construct and maintain telegraphs, (j) Ibid., s. 22 (2), (3), (4), (5). As to the mode of determining the "difference," see pp. 378 et seq., post. There are also provisions of a transitory nature, the object of which must long since have been exhausted, for the satisfaction of any objection by a private landowner to the continuance of telegraphic works constructed under, in, upon, over, along, or across any street or public road before the commencement of the Telegraph Acts (Telegraph Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 112), s. 31). (l) Telegraph (Construction) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 33), s. 5 (1), (3). The owner or the occupier may, under ibid., s. 5 (2), object by counter-notice, whereupon a difference arises, to be settled as prescribed, as to which see pp. 378 et seq., post. The Postmaster-General may execute the lopping himself if within the month no counter-notice is given, or if the authority having jurisdiction over the difference makes an order in that behalf (Telegraph (Construction) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 33), s. 5 (3)). He must instruct his officers to do the work in a husbandlike manner, and so as not to injure the growth of the tree (ibid., s. 5 (4)). As to the payment of compensation, see pp. 381 et seq., post.

(n) Any company authorised by special Act to construct and maintain telegraphs, to which the Postmaster-General was afterwards added (see pp. 352, 355, ante), may place and maintain a telegraph and posts under, in, upon, over, along, or across any railway or canal, and, when placed, may alter and remove the same (Telegraph Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 112), s. 6 (4)), but the consent of the owners or lessees of the railway or canal must first be obtained (ibid., s. 32). Should it be withheld, however, a statutory difference will arise between the parties where the Postmaster-General, not where a company, is concerned, which must be settled in the prescribed manner; see pp. 378 et seq., post. This consent is not required where the telegraph or post is merely to be placed under, in, upon, along, over, or across any street or public road which crosses, or is crossed by, a railway or canal, if no damage is done thereto, and its user, alteration, or improvement is not interfered with (Telegraph Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 112), s. 32). By the Telegraph (Construction) Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 39), ss. 1, 2, the Postmaster-General is invested with certain additional powers, subject to conditions specified in these provisions, of entering upon a railway or canal for the purpose of maintaining and altering any telegraphic line which he has already constructed along a street or public road, or over or under any land, including buildings, or for the purpose of placing any telegraphic line which he desires so to construct, either overhead or underground, and maintaining and altering the same, and executing the necessary works, except as regards any portion of a telegraphic line placed or intended to be placed along the course of a railway or canal for a greater distance than a quarter of a mile. When the Postmaster-General has acquired a telegraphic undertaking, and handed it over to a railway company to work as his agents, he and such railway company have reciprocal rights against each other to affix wires to existing posts at divided cost, and the railway company may, if necessary for the purposes of the railway traffic, from time to time require the Postmaster-General to shift his poles and wires at his expense, or, where the poles carry the wires of both, at an apportioned expense (Telegraph Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 110), s. 9 (4), (5)).

(o) In the case of canals it is provided by the Telegraph Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 112), s. 33, that if, upon the placing of the telegraph or post, any person having power to do so constructs any dock, basin, or other work upon any land adjoining or near to the telegraphic work, and is prevented thereby from having communication between the dock etc. and the canal for the convenient passage of vessels, or if the basin of the dock is interfered with, then, at the request of such person, and on his giving reasonable facilities for taking the telegraph round the dock through land belonging to him, the telegraph must be so moved and so placed accordingly, subject to the adjustment in the prescribed manner of any "difference" that may arise on this question, as to which see pp. 378 et seq., post. As to the further powers conferred on the Postmaster-General in relation to canals by the Telegraph (Construction) Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 39), see note (n), supra. For the statutory definition of "railway," "canal," "telegraph," "post," "telegraph line," "street," "public road," and "land," see pp. 349 et seq., ante.

(p) Any such company as is above mentioned (see note (n), supra), or the Postmaster-General, may, in placing a telegraph under any street or public road, alter the position therein of any pipe (not being a main) for the supply of gas or water, doing as little damage as need be, and giving the owner of such pipe notice of the intended operation, and executing it to his reasonable satisfaction and under his superintendence, the cost of which must be paid (Telegraph Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 112), s. 6 (3)). By ibid., s. 8, as amended by the Telegraph Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 76), s. 7, corresponding rights, with similar restrictions, are given to gas and water undertakers as against telegraph undertakers. See, generally, titles GAS, Vol. XV., p. 358; WATER SUPPLY.

(q) There is only one enactment in the Telegraph Acts (see note (m), p. 349, ante) relating specifically to electric light undertakings, namely, the Telegraph

744. Apart from, and without prejudice to, the above specific enactments, there are provisions in the Telegraph Acts (s) of a more general and comprehensive scope, relating to the reciprocal rights and liabilities of telegraphic and non-telegraphic undertakings and businesses. Besides the condition that, in the exercise of their statutory powers, both the Postmaster-General and any company authorised by special Act to construct and maintain telegraphs must pay compensation to all bodies and persons interested for all damage sustained by them by reason of the exercise of such power (t), it is expressly provided that, in the case of certain authorised classes of non-telegraphic undertakings (u), the Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 59), s. 6, whereby it is provided that any company or person authorised to lay an "electric line" may, with the approval of the Board of Trade and the consent of the local authority of the district, make an agreement with the Postmaster-General, or his licensee, that the latter shall be at liberty to place his telegraphs in the trenches, tubes, pipes, or apparatus used for the purposes of the "electric line," and all enactments relating to the laying of electric lines are, so far as applicable, to extend to anything done under this provision. In the Electric Lighting Acts (see title ELECTRIC LIGHTING AND POWER, Vol. XII., p. 542), however, there are elaborate provisions for the protection of the Postmaster-General's telegraphic works (no other telegraphic undertakings are protected or referred to); see Electric Lighting Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 56), ss. 26, 32, 35 (definitions of "electric line," "telegram," "street," "land" etc.); Electric Lighting Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 12), s. 4; Electric Lighting (Clauses) Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 19), Sched., clauses 1, 14, 62, 79; and see, generally, title ELECTRIC LIGHTING AND POWER, Vol. XII., p. 572. There is no protection, it is to be observed, in any of the Electric Lighting Acts for any licensee of the Postmaster-General; consequently a telegraph company, though holding such a licence, would not be protected, or not specially protected, from the statutory operations of an electric lighting company; compare National Telephone Co. v. Baker, [1893] 2 Ch. 186, where a similarly licensed company was held to be devoid of special protection against the statutory operations of a tramway company under a provisional order which only mentioned the Postmaster-General.

(r) There is nothing in the Telegraph Acts (see note (m), p. 349, ante) relating to street tramways, though the Telegraph Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 76), s. 6, mentions "tramways other than street tramways" as the subject of protection. But the Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), ss. 30, 32, 33, contain detailed provisions for the regulation of the reciprocal rights and duties of telegraph and tramway undertakers, in interfering with one another's works. The Act itself does not limit its protective enactments to the Postmaster-General alone, but the common form of provisional order framed thereunder does so; and under any such order only the Postmaster-General, but not any licensee, much less any telegraphic company, can take the benefit of such enactments (National Telephone Co. v. Baker, supra). The conditions subject to which any telegraphic wires or apparatus are authorised to be laid down by the Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 32, are all in the nature of conditions subsequent, relating to the maintenance and working of the telegraph, not conditions precedent to the placing thereof; thus, it was held in Bristol Tramways and Carriage Co. v. National Telephone Co., [1899] 2 Ch. 282, that it was no necessary for the telephone company to obtain the consent of the tramway company before laying down its telephone wires. Generally it may be added that, in the case of any tramway undertaking authorised by provisional order under the Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), or by special Act incorporating and varying its provisions, the language of the special, as well as the general, legislation must be closely observed; see, for instance, Re Rhondla Urban District Council and Taff Vale Rail. Co. (1907), 97 L. T. 892, C. A.; see also title TRAMWAYS AND LIGHT RAILWAYS, pp. 801, 802, post.

Postmaster-General, but no other person or company, may place and maintain telegraphic lines (v) in, under, upon, along, over, or across any such undertaking, and from time to time alter the same and enter upon the lands of the undertakers for those purposes, and for purposes of examination and repair and the execution of all other necessary works, subject to the following conditions and restrictions, namely:—(1) there is to be no obstacle to the undertakers' traffic or business; (2) not less than one month's notice must be given by the Postmaster-General of the proposed course and position of the telegraphic line, and if the undertakers notify their objection within that time a difference arises, to be settled in the prescribed manner; (3) all damage is to be made good, and the undertakers are to be indemnified against the consequences of any stoppage and delay in the conduct of their undertaking; and (4) any additional expense to which the undertakers may be put for repairs or maintenance must be made good (a).

alteration.

745. Corresponding rights of interference with the telegraphic lines of the Postmaster-General are given to any non-telegraphic undertakers for the necessary purposes of their undertaking of whatever kind, without restriction to the classes of undertaking with which alone the Postmaster-General is authorised to interfere, if the undertaking is authorised by any Act of Parliament passed after the 1st January, 1878 (b), subject to the following conditions, namely: (1) the undertakers must give not less than seven nor more than fourteen days' notice of the time and place at which the work is to be commenced, and the nature of the alterations which they require the Postmaster-General to execute; (2) within seven days of the receipt of such notice the Postmaster-General may serve a counter-notice, stating his intention to do the work himself, or requiring the undertakers to do it to his satisfaction and under his supervision; (3) in case of a counter-notice to the former effect, the Postmaster-General may do the work, by himself or his agents, and charge the expenses and all loss or damage to the undertakers; (4) in case of a counter-notice to the latter effect, the undertakers tramway, other than street tramway, railway or river embankment, subway, or aqueduct over or across a river, dock, harbour, or pier (Telegraph Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 76), s. 6). All such undertakings of the above character as should thereafter be authorised by special Act, and also the existing railway undertakings specifically mentioned in the schedule to the Telegraph Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 76), are the subject of the section, which, however, is not to apply to the railways of the companies named in the Telegraph Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 110), s. 9, or in the schedule thereto, so long as such companies are able and willing to construct and maintain telegraphic lines on the terms of that Act or any agreement thereunder; see note (n), p. 366, ante.

(a) Telegraph Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 76), s. 6. As to the statutory mode of settling differences, see pp. 378 et seq., post. Part IV.—The Conduct of Telegraphic Business.

SECT. 1.—Statutory Duties to the Public Using the Telegraphs.

746. Apart from their common law rights and liabilities, as agents, contractors and otherwise (d), those who are engaged in the business of transmitting telegrams are subject to the special duties and liabilities imposed by the statutes facilitating and regulating the conduct of such business.

Duties imposed by statute.

747. These statutory duties and liabilities are, in substance, as follows:—every telegraph is to be open for the messages of all persons alike, without favour or preference to any individual or class, either as regards charges, expedition, or otherwise (e), except so far as such preference is authorised by any statutory lease or agreement (f), or is given to the Crown or Government, pursuant to the requirements of the Acts (g), or to newspaper proprietors under special arrangements as to press telegrams (h). There must be no omission to transmit or deliver, or delay in the transmission or delivery of, any telegram (i). The purport or contents of any telegram or message entrusted to the Postmaster-General for transmission, must not, nor must any part of such contents, be divulged or intercepted (k), except when a court of justice by its

Transmission

(c) Telegraph Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 76), s. 7. Violation of these provisions is the subject of penalties; see p. 385, post. As regards railways and canals in particular, it is provided by the Telegraph (Construction) Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 39), s. 1 (2) (f), that the Postmaster-General, on being required to do so by the railway or canal company, must remove or alter any telegraphic line constructed or maintained by him under the authority of that Act which interferes with any existing or proposed works of the railway or canal company, unless within twenty-one days he signifies his objection to the removal or alteration, in which case a "difference" arises, to be determined in the prescribed manner; see pp. 378 et seq., post.

Regulations.

subpoena or order requires the production of a telegram, or batch of telegrams, in which case the disclosure must be made, and the documents produced (l). The conduct of telegraphic business by any telegraphic company renders such company liable for all accidents and damages arising therefrom by reason of the wrongful acts or defaults of its servants or agents (m); the Postmaster-General, however, in his official capacity, cannot be made responsible for the act or omission of any of the servants of the Post Office, for they, like himself, are officers of the Crown (n); but a petition of right may be presented to the Crown, when justice will be done to the suppliant (o).

The conduct of telegraphic business is subject to all regulations, as to the conditions on and purposes for which the use of the telegraph may be permitted, which the Postmaster-General may think fit to make (p).

SECT. 2.—Statutory Charges for the Use of the Telegraphs.

Uniform charges.

748. The Postmaster-General may fix the charges to be paid for the transmission of telegrams (q). Such charges for the transmission of written telegrams throughout the United Kingdom are to be made uniformly and without regard to distance, and are not to exceed the prescribed sums, which are regulated in accordance with the number of words used (r). The charge for each such written telegram covers the cost of delivery within the limits fixed by the Postmaster-General; and where the addressee does not reside within the limits of free delivery, and does not direct delivery by post (in which case free delivery must be made by the next post), the Postmaster-General may make an extra charge for delivery by special messenger, which must be prepaid; otherwise delivery by this means is not required to be made (s). As to (l) Telegraph Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 73), s. 23, which expressly provides that there shall be no distinction, in this respect, between the Postmaster-General and any other person. This provision applies to election cases (Coventry Election Petition, Ince's Case (1869), 20 L. T. 421; Tomline v. Tyler (Sir H.) (1880), 44 L. T. 187, 188); compare Re Smith, a Bankrupt (1881), 7 L. Telegraphs.

Part V.—Special Provisions as to Telephones.

749. For the purposes of the Telegraph Acts (u) a telephone is a telegraph, and a telephonic message is a telegram; it therefore follows that all their provisions apply to telephonic as much as to any other species of statutory telegraphy (v). The necessity, however, of adapting the general language of the Acts to the physical conditions of telephonic telegraphy, and the need for additional fiscal provision, induced Parliament in 1899 to legislate expressly for telephones (a).

Application of Telegraph
Acts.

750. The Telegraph Act, 1899 (b), provides expressly for the improvement of telephonic communication (c). In 1899 the Postmaster-General also issued regulations, not, however, under that statute, but under the general powers of the previous Telegraph Acts (c), regulating the conduct of telephonic business and the charges therefor, and containing definitions of "telephone" (d) and of other matters and things incidental to telephonic business (e).

Special
legislation.

(v) A.-G. v. Edison Telephone Co. of London (1880), 6 Q. B. D. 244; see p. 350, ante.

(a) Telephones were dealt with eo nomine by certain statutes other than Telegraph Acts before 1899; see, for instance, the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 59), ss. 13, 14, 15. But before the passing of the Telegraph Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 38), there were no enactments specially directed to telephones. Indeed, except in the Telegraph Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 59), there had been no reference by name to telephones, and then only in the preamble to a money provision (ibid., s. 1), or any implied reference, except in so far as the expression "written telegrams" in the Telegraph Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 58), s. 2 (1), necessarily presupposed the existence of "spoken telegrams" (or telephonic messages), and the application thereto of a distinct scale of charges. As to the money provision for telephones, see pp. 391, 392, post.

(c) As to the Telegraph Acts, see note (m), p. 349, ante.

(d) This is the first statutory definition of the word "telephone." Telephones are also referred to in the Telegraph (Construction) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 33), the "long title" of which refers to "the construction and maintenance of telegraphic lines for telephonic and other telegraphic purposes," and the PART V.

Special Provisions
as to

Licences.

751. The Telegraph Act, 1899 (f), apart from its money provisions (g), is devoted solely to the subject of telephonic licences. It recognises the statutory right of the Postmaster-General to grant such licences in respect of telephones, as in respect of any other form of statutory telegraph, and also the fact that such right had already been exercised, and proceeds to deal with the question of new licences within an exchange area already served by an existing company (h). Such new licences may be granted subject to certain conditions and restrictions, which are in substance as follows. Where a licence is granted to a local authority, or to a new company, proposing to provide a system of public telephonic communication in any exchange area in which an existing company has already provided such a system, then, if the existing company consents to its being made a condition of its licence that within the area of the new licence it will give no preference either as to charges or facilities, and will not demand more or less by way of charge than is authorised by the Postmaster-General, it must be a condition of the new licence that, if it is proved to the satisfaction of the Postmaster-General that, having acquired powers by agreement with the local authority to lay underground wires within the area of the new licence, the existing company has incurred material expense in the exercise of such powers, such powers shall continue for the period specified in the new licence for the duration thereof, subject, however, to the terms of the agreement with the local authority, including any condition for the determination thereof on the breach of any of its provisions (i).

Approval of local authority.

The Postmaster-General is not to grant any application for a new licence made by any person or body other than the council of a borough or urban district, unless it is established to his satisfaction that such council has approved the application (h).

New exchanges.

An existing company is prohibited from opening, without the consent of the Postmaster-General, any exchange in an exchange Telegraph (Arbitration) Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 20), which similarly, in its "long title," refers to "telegraphs (including telephones)." The Telephone Transfer Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 26), and the Telephone Transfer Amendment Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 56), are the first statutes in which the word "telephone" forms part of the statutory title.

Rev., Vol. XIII., Telegraph, p. 24), which have now been superseded by the substantially identical Telephone Regulations, 1910 (Stat. R. & O., 1910, p. 770), and formally purporting to have been issued under the Telegraph Acts, 1863—1909, and have been repealed by the Telephone Amendment (No. 1) Regulations, 1910 (Stat. R. & O., 1910, p. 776). As to these, see, further, pp. 388, 389, post.

(h) This term is expressed in the Telegraph Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 38), s. 3 (6), to mean "an exchange area as defined by any agreement made by an existing company with the Postmaster-General before the passing of the Act."

(i) Ibid., s. 3 (1). "For the duration thereof," in this provision, means "for the duration of the powers so acquired," not "for the duration of the new licence"; see National Telephone Co., Ltd. v. Kingston-upon-Hull Corporation (1903), 89 L. T. 291.

Competitive systems.

752. Where the grant of a new licence results in a competition within the same exchange area between the system of the new licensee and the system of an existing company acting under a licence which is unexpired at the date of the statute, the licence of such existing company, if it is willing to consent to conditions substantially similar to those above mentioned, is to be continued, subject to the provisions of the old licence, for the period of the new licence (m); but if this provision results, in any case, in the continuance of the old licence for a period of not less than eight years beyond the term existing at the passing of the Act, the existing company, at the request of any other licensee supplying a system of telephonic communication within the same exchange area, or any part thereof, and such other licensee, at the request of the existing company, must provide proper facilities for intercommunication between the two systems, under such conditions as may be prescribed by an order of the Postmaster-General (n). Such an order has been duly made (o).

Part VI.—Special Provisions as to Wireless Telegraphy.

753. Wireless telegraphy, if electricity be the agency employed, is within the terms of the Telegraph Acts (p), and all the provisions of those Acts apply to this as much as to any other species of statutory telegraphy (q). It has become necessary, however, for several reasons to legislate specially for the regulation and control, and also for the encouragement and facilitation, of wireless telegraphy.

Application of Telegraph
Acts.

Accordingly, the Wireless Telegraphy Act, 1904 (r), was passed for this purpose. It applies not only to all the British Islands, but also to all British ships in the territorial waters abutting on the coast thereof (s), and, within certain limits, to foreign ships whilst in territorial waters (t): it may also be applied to British ships whilst on the high seas (u). The Act (v) was limited in duration to a specified period, which, however, by subsequent Acts has been extended to the present time (w).

A., whether the facilities offered by one competing licensee to the other, under this order and the Telegraph Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 38), s. 3 (5), were proper, and the Court of Appeal, after receiving and adopting the report of an expert referee, settled the precise acts and operations which it deemed adequate in the circumstances of the case for the provision of such proper facilities.

754. "Wireless telegraphy" is defined in the Wireless Telegraphy Act, 1904 (v), as any system of communication by telegraph as defined in the Telegraph Acts, 1868—1904 (a), without the aid of any wire connecting the points from and on which the messages or other communications are sent and received (b).

Licences.

755. No person may establish any wireless telegraph station, or instal or work any apparatus for wireless telegraphy in any place, or on board any British ship, except under and in accordance with a licence from the Postmaster-General (c). Any such licence must be in such form, for such period, and on such terms as the Postmaster-General may determine, and it may include two or more stations, places, or ships (d); and he may make regulations as to the manner of application for licences, and, with the consent of the Treasury, as to the fees to be charged (e). Penalties are provided for the violation of these provisions (f).

free of rent.

756. A licence for wireless telegraphy may be granted free of rent or royalty, where, in the case of a licence for any other species of telegraphy, the purposes for which it is required would fall within either of the first two exceptions to the Postmaster-General's monopoly (g); also where it is required solely for experimental

The second of the two statutory meanings given to "telegraph" by the Telegraph Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 73), s. 3, is "any apparatus for transmitting messages and other communications by means of electric signals"; see p. 350, ante. Consequently, the definition of wireless telegraphy if written out in full would run—"any system of communication by any apparatus for transmitting messages and other communications by means of electric signals, without the aid of any wire connecting the points from and on which the messages or other communications are sent and received." It is important to remember that a system of communication where neither wires nor electric signals are used would not come within the statutory, though it might within the popular, or the etymological, signification of "wireless telegraphy."

purposes (h). Special licences may be granted on reduced terms for the establishment and working of wireless telegraph stations to be used exclusively for the transmission within the United Kingdom of news to public registered newspapers (i).

757. The Wireless Telegraphy Act, 1904 (k), may be applied by Order in Council to British ships when on the high seas (l), and an Order to this effect has been made (m). As to foreign ships in territorial waters, no apparatus for wireless telegraphy is to be used thereon except in accordance with regulations to be framed by the Postmaster-General (n). Such regulations have been issued (o).

Part VII.—Statutes Relating to Submarine Cables.

758. The Telegraph Acts (p) in no way affect, or deal with, submarine telegraphy between the British Islands and Foreign States (q), but so much of the business of transmitting foreign telegrams as is transacted within the territorial limits of the Acts is subject to their provisions (r). Until the 1st May, 1888, when the Submarine Telegraph Act, 1885 (s), came into force, the owners of such cables were entitled to the rights, and liable to the duties, which the common or Admiralty law conferred and imposed upon them (t), and, since that date, they have been entitled and liable to the same rights and duties as increased or varied by special legislation.

(q) Several enactments, indeed, are careful to except by express language the undertakings of submarine cable companies; see Telegraph Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 110), s. 7, as to the undertakings of the Atlantic Telegraph Co. and the Anglo-American Telegraph Co.; Telegraph Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 88), s. 7 (now repealed), as to the undertakings of the Submarine Telegraph Co. and of the Société Camichael et Cie. As to foreign telegrams generally, one of the exceptions to the Postmaster-General's monopoly set out in the Telegraph Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 73), s. 5, is the class of "telegrams transmitted to or from any place out of the United Kingdom"; see p. 356, ante. The control of the State over telegraphs (see p. 354, ante) does not extend beyond the territorial limits of the Acts.

International Convention.

759. On the 14th March, 1884, an International Convention was made between Great Britain and several other Powers with reference to submarine telegraph cables (a). Domestic legislation was thereupon required to be initiated by each of the signatory Powers to enforce the articles of the Convention within their respective dominions. Accordingly, the Submarine Telegraph Act, 1885 (b), and the Submarine Telegraph Act, 1886 (c), were passed for this purpose (d), applicable to the whole of His Majesty's Dominions, and to any place within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty, or where His Majesty has jurisdiction (e), which came into force on the 1st May, 1888, and were to remain operative for five years certain from that date, and thenceforth from year to year, until determined, on the agreed notice, by any of the high contracting parties, in which event the withdrawal is to take effect only so far as that party is concerned (f).

Protection
of cables.

760. The above-mentioned legislation is wholly concerned with the protection of submarine cables from the operations of vessels other than those engaged in repairing or laying the cables (g), and with the protection of such vessels, and particularly fishing vessels, and their property, from the operations of the owners of the cables (h). The violation of the provisions for this purpose is

(g) Submarine Telegraph Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 49), s. 3, Sched., art. II., which as explained by the Submarine Telegraph Act, 1886 (50 Vict. c. 3), s. 2, Sched. (now repealed), provides that a person shall not unlawfully or wilfully, or by culpable negligence, break or injure any cable to which the Convention for the time being applies, so as to interrupt or obstruct telegraphic communication; but such breakage or injury is not to be deemed unlawful or wilful for the purpose of any penal provision, if the act is done to preserve life, or limb, or vessel, and reasonable precautions have been taken, or in the bonâ fide attempt to repair another submarine cable, or accidentally.

(h) Submarine Telegraph Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 49), s. 6, providing that the master, or, if he was in fault, the owner, of any vessel engaged in laying or repairing a submarine cable is prohibited from interfering with or wilfully delaying the operations of vessels engaged in fishing, contrary to any article of the scheduled Convention, or to any regulations as to signals which may be in punishable as prescribed (i). Compensation for loss or injury is to be paid in certain cases, on furnishing proof of the prescribed character and in the prescribed manner (k). Officers in command of any warship or specially commissioned vessel of His Majesty may exercise the powers conferred, and are subject to the duties imposed, by the Convention (l); and penalties are provided for the obstruction of any such officer in the execution of his statutory powers and duties (m). On the other hand, there is distinct statutory recognition of the amenability of the officer to civil proceedings at common law in certain cases, but subject to prescribed conditions and restrictions (n).

SUB-SECT. 1.—What are Differences.

761. In a variety of cases differences arise, or are deemed to have arisen, under the Telegraph Acts (o) between the interested parties, which differences are the subject of special statutory methods of adjustment. Apart from questions of compensation (p), these statutory differences fall into two classes, namely: (1) differences which arise where any body or person having the power to grant or withhold consent (q) to the placing, construction, or maintenance of a telegraph or "work" refuses force. As to these regulations, see pp. 389, 390, post. On the other hand, when vessels engaged in laying or repairing cables show signals, other vessels, with, in the case of fishing vessels, their fishing nets and gear, must be withdrawn to the distance and within the time specified in the Submarine Telegraph Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 49), Sched., arts. V., VI.

(k) Owners of vessels who have sacrificed an anchor, net, or other fishing gear, to avoid injury to a cable are to be compensated by the owner of the cable for their loss, which is not necessarily limited to the mere cost of replacing the material: thus, it might include the value of a catch of fish in a net sacrificed. On the other hand, the loss does not extend to every damage remotely flowing from the sacrifice (Agincourt Steamship Co., Ltd. v. Eastern Extension, Australasia, and China Telegraph Co., Ltd., [1907] 2 K. B. 305, O. A., explaining Submarine Telegraph Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 49, Sched., art. VII.). Further, by ibid., s. 3 (4), any person who breaks or injures a cable, though not "unlawfully or willfully," so as to constitute an offence as above mentioned, must nevertheless pay the costs of repairing such cable. As to the prescribed mode of proving the necessary facts by statements and documents, see ibid., s. 8; as to forgery of such documents, see ibid., s. 8 (4), as amended by the Forgery Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 27), s. 20, Sched., Part I.

SUB-SECT. 2.—Procedure for Adjusting Differences.

Tribunal.

762. The prescribed procedure for the adjustment of differences applies, with three exceptions (d), to all cases of difference. The difference is to be referred for determination to a police or stipendiary magistrate of the district, if there is one, or, if not, to the county court judge (e). Either party may, if dissatisfied with the decision of such tribunal, by notice in writing within twenty-one days thereof require the difference to be referred to the Railway and Canal Commissioners (f), who are to hear and determine it de novo, and not by way of appeal (g).

(a) For the purposes of the Telegraph Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 59), this includes the withdrawal of a consent, or the annexing of conditions thereto, to which the Postmaster-General objects (Telegraph Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 59), s. 9).

(b) Telegraph Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 76), s. 3; Telegraph Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 59), s. 2, as extended by the Telegraph (Construction) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 33), s. 4. No person other than the Postmaster-General has the right to submit to the prescribed tribunal, as a difference, any statutory veto, which, as against any such other person, is absolute. Not even his licensee has this right (see note (c), p. 359, ante, and the cases there cited), nor would the Postmaster-General himself have it in any case where it could be proved that he was acting merely as the instrument of such licensee (Postmaster-General v. Edinburgh Corporation (1899), 10 Ry. & Can. Tr. Cas. 247 (where, however, the corporation failed to prove the facts)). The cases in which the veto is given by the Telegraph Acts are those mentioned in the Telegraph Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 112), ss. 9, 10, 12, 13, 32, 35, and in the Telegraph Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 59), s. 4 (1), as to all which see pp. 360 et seq., ante.

(c) Differences of this class are named or described as such in the following enactments:—Telegraph Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 112), ss. 15, 16, 21 (3), 22, 23—29, 30, 33; Telegraph Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 76), s. 6; Telegraph Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 59), s. 4 (2), extended as mentioned below; and Telegraph (Construction) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 33), ss. 1, 3, 5, 7 (the last section having the effect of extending the application of the Telegraph Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 59), s. 4 (2), to telegraphs placed and maintained under a street or public road); Telegraph (Construction) Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 39), s. 1 (2) (a), (d). The form and mode of serving the notices and counter-notices mentioned in the text are regulated by the Telegraph Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 112), s. 5, and the Telegraph Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 76), s. 12, which latter enactment is applied to the Telegraph (Construction) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 33), by ibid., s. 9 (2), and to the Telegraph (Construction) Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 39), by ibid., s. 7 (2).

tribunal.

Where it is a question of the refusal or failure of any body or person to give any consent required by the Postmaster-General, the authority determining the difference may give a substituted consent (k). Where conditions are attached to any consent, the question of their reasonableness or propriety is a question of fact (i). Any condition imposed by a body having control over streets or public works must be a condition which concerns that body as a road authority, or at least concerns the whole of the public using the telegraphs, and no condition can be proper which interferes with the Postmaster-General's free exercise of his public duties and rights, or which requires him to prohibit the use of the telegraphs in a manner sanctioned by law (k). The tribunal may impose its own terms independently of the conditions which have formed the subject of the difference (l). The magistrate, or county court judge, is to act, not as such, but as if he were an arbitrator appointed by the Board of Trade (m). There are elaborate provisions in the

(k) Postmaster-General v. London Corporation, supra (where the condition sought to be imposed by the corporation was that the Postmaster-General should exclude the National Telephone Co. from the user of the telephones unless they would provide an improved service at a reduced rent, which the Commissioners, agreeing with the county court judge, deemed to be a wholly improper condition); Postmaster-General v. Glasgow Corporation, supra (where the corporation attempted to clog their consent with a condition that it was not to be applicable to the purposes of any private company whose application, if made direct to the corporation (it being suggested that the Postmaster-General was merely applying for the consent on behalf of his licensees, the National Telephone Co.), would (as it could not in the case of the Postmaster-General) be met with an absolute and unappealable veto, and the Commissioners in Scotland, agreeing with the sheriff, held that this also was based on a misconception of the nature of the conditions contemplated by the statute). In exercising their discretion with reference to these conditions, the Commissioners will consider the character of the district, the feeling of the locality, the amount of existing or probable future traffic, and the relative danger, inconvenience, and expense involved in the conflicting proposals; see Wandsworth District Local Board v. Postmaster-General (1884), 4 Ry. & Can. Tr. Cas. 301; Postmaster-General v. Watford Urban District Council (1908), 13 Ry. & Can. Tr. Cas. 160; *Postmaster-General v. P. 424; Re a Difference between the Postmaster-General and the Tottenham Urban District Council (1910), 74 J. P. 434. It must always be shown, if disputed, that the body or person has the control of the street or public road, within the meaning of the Telegraph Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 112), s. 12. In Postmaster-General v. Hendon Urban District Council, [1913] W. N. 249, it was held that a body not liable for the repair of the road is not such a body.

pp. 688—690. It is to be noted that all statutory references, except where anything in the statute is inconsistent therewith, are made subject to the provisions of the Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49), by s. 24 thereof, as to which see title ARBITRATION, Vol. I., pp. 492, 493.

(n) Telegraph Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 76), ss. 4, 5; Telegraph (Arbitration) Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 20), s. 2. The statutes regulating the jurisdiction, constitution and procedure of the Railway and Canal Commission are the Regulation of Railways Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 48), and the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 25), by s. 1 whereof the two Acts may be cited together as the Railway and Canal Traffic Acts, 1873 and 1888. The procedure prescribed by these Acts is to govern the determination of any difference referred by consent to the Commissioners, under the Telegraph (Arbitration) Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 20), s. 2. As to the jurisdiction of the Railway and Canal Commission, see title RAILWAYS AND CANALS, Vol. XXIII., pp. 753 et seq.

(o) As to the appointed Commissioners, see title COURTS, Vol. IX., p. 217.

(s) Telegraph (Arbitration) Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 20), s. 1. In the discretion of the Commissioners, and with the consent of the parties, any matter of difference or any question arising before the Commissioners under the Act may be heard and determined by the two appointed Commissioners, whose order is to be deemed the order of the Commission (ibid., s. 2 (1)). It appears from the Telephone Transfer Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 26), and the Telephone Transfer Amendment Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 56), that questions arising as to the purchase by the Postmaster-General of the plant, property, and assets of the National Telephone Co., Ltd., under the two indentures therein mentioned had been agreed to be the subject of direct reference to the Commissioners. There has already been such a reference, and the Commissioners have decided it (National Telephone Co., Ltd. v. Postmaster-General (1913), 29 T. L. R. 190). It was held by the Court of Appeal, when the case was brought before them on the appeal of both parties, that the Commissioners deal with such a reference as a court, and not as mere contractual arbitrators, and that, therefore, there was jurisdiction to entertain the appeal (S. C., [1913] 2 K. B. 614, C. A.; affirmed on the preliminary question, 29 T. L. R. 637, H. L.).

(a) Telegraph Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 76), s. 5, which provides that all differences under that Act, namely, those relating to the interference of the Postmaster-General with certain other undertakings (ibid., s. 6), are to be referred direct to the Commissioners.

SECT. 1.
Adjustment of Differences.
order.

764. Where any differences arise on the refusal or failure of the owner, lessee, or occupier of any land or building, within twenty-one days of a requisition in that behalf, to give his consent to the construction or maintenance of any "work" by the Postmaster-General, and such refusal or failure results in the inhabitants of any district, or any public authority, being debarred from the public convenience of telegraphic communication, or in the impossibility of supplying such communication to any district or place except at an unreasonable cost or on unreasonable conditions, a special form of remedy, in addition to, and not in substitution for, the foregoing procedure, is accorded to the Postmaster-General, who may apply to the Railway and Canal Commissioners for a provisional order, which, if satisfied of the above facts, the Commissioners are empowered to make, that he be at liberty to place or maintain the telegraphic work, as prayed, with or without pecuniary or other conditions (c). For the purpose of determining the difference, the Commissioners may hold a local inquiry by one or two of their members, or by an officer appointed for that purpose (d), and may make an interlocutory order for the continuance of any work while proceedings are pending (e). If the provisional order is made, the landowner may, within one month of the service thereof upon him, petition the Commissioners that the order be laid before Parliament. If no such petition is presented within the month, or, having been so presented, is withdrawn, the Commissioners are to certify the fact, and the order is to take effect as from the date of the certificate (f); but, if such petition is so presented and not withdrawn, the order is to have no effect until confirmed by a public Bill, which the Postmaster-General is thereupon empowered to introduce, and which the landowner may petition against, in so far as it purports to confirm the order; and the Bill in that event must be referred to a Select Committee, and the landowner may appear and oppose it as in the case of any private Bill (g).

SECT. 2.—Statutory Compensation.

765. The Telegraph Acts (h) provide for the payment of statutory compensation in a great number of cases, which may be classified as follows, namely: (1) cases of compulsory acquisition of able.

(b) Telegraph Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 112), s. 34.

(c) Telegraph Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 59), s. 2 (1). "Failure or refusal" to consent includes withdrawal of consent, or the annexing thereto of unacceptable conditions (ibid., s. 9).

(d) Telegraph Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 59), s. 2 (5); and see the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 25), Parts I., IV.

(e) Telegraph Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 59), s. 2 (6).

(f) Ibid., s. 2 (2). This procedure, with the necessary adaptations (e.g., substitution of the Governor and Executive Council of the Isle for the Commissioners, and Tynwald for Parliament), applies to the Isle of Man (ibid., s. 12). As to the procedure in Parliament with reference to private Bills and Bills to confirm provisional orders, see title PARLIAMENT, Vol. XXI., pp. 727 et seq.

(h) As to the Telegraph Acts, see note (m), p. 349, ante.

SECT. 2.

undertakings, rights, interests, or property (i); (2) cases of damage and injury to the property or interests of others occasioned by the statutory execution or maintenance of telegraphic works (k); and (8) cases of loss of office and emoluments by officers and clerks of certain specified telegraph companies whose undertakings have been acquired by the Postmaster-General (l).

(i) In the following enactments compensation of this character is required to be paid: Telegraph Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 112), s. 51 (Treasury to pay telegraph company annual rent or gross sum for exclusive use of telegraph); Telegraph Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 110), ss. 4, 7, 9 (purchase of certain telegraphic undertakings by Postmaster-General is to be subject of compensation; also compensation to be paid to railway companies for perpetual right of way); Telegraph Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 73), s. 12 (compensation to be paid by Postmaster-General under arrangements for transmission of foreign telegrams within the United Kingdom, and for connexion of his wires and apparatus with cables of foreign telegraph company). By some of the above enactments the Postmaster-General is, under certain conditions, required, and not merely authorised, to purchase telegraphic undertakings. In all such cases no compensation is payable, unless all the prescribed conditions exist. For instance, on purchasing any one of the telegraph undertakings mentioned in the Telegraph Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 110), any other company having a telegraph undertaking established by special Act or Royal Charter, or any railway company possessed of a telegraph open to the use of the public on the 1st January, 1868, or having any beneficial interest in such telegraph, was, by ibid., s. 7, entitled, on written request within twelve months, to call upon the Postmaster-General to purchase, and pay compensation for, such undertaking or beneficial interest. This provision does not apply to a railway company which had no telegraph open to the public, or any beneficial interest in such a telegraph (Cowes and Newport Rail. Co. v. Board of Trade (1874), 43 L. J. (Q. B.) 242, in which case it also appeared that the request had not been made within the twelve months, and, but for the point having been waived, this omission would also have been fatal, as was held in R. v. Coleridge (Lord) (1876), 45 L. J. (Q. B.) 649). For a case of purchase by agreement, see this Telephone Transfer Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 26); and note (a), p. 380, ante.

(k) Telegraph Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 112), ss. 7 (compensation generally to all bodies and persons interested for damage occasioned by execution of statutory operations in streets, public roads, railways, canals, estuaries), 21 (4) (compensation for loss and damage to landowner extending his building etc.), 27 (2) (compensation to frontagers), 42 (responsibility for damage caused by acts and defaults of servants); Telegraph (Construction) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 33), which provides for compensation for damage occasioned by the exercise of the Postmaster-General's statutory powers of lopping overhanging trees. In St. James and Pall Mall Electric Light Co., Ltd. v. R. (1904), 73 L. J. (K. B.) 518, the suppliants established their right to statutory compensation to be assessed by the proper authority (in that case, a sheriff's jury) for a short circuit in their cables occasioned by the execution of a telegraphic work by the Postmaster-General.

(l) Any such officer or clerk, who had been in the service of one of the specified telegraph companies for not less than five years at a yearly salary, or not less than seven years with emoluments or remuneration equivalent to not less than £50 per annum, was, by the Telegraph Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 110), s. 8 (7), entitled to be paid by the Postmaster-General compensation for loss of office, unless any offer of an appointment in the postal service should be made to him which, in the opinion of an arbitrator to be agreed or named by the Recorder of London, should be equal in value to the lost office. The three telegraph companies specified were the Electric and International, the British and Irish Magnetic, and the United Kingdom Electric, Telegraph Companies. An officer or servant of a railway company, whose telegraphs have been taken over by the Postmaster-General, is not within the benefit of this provision, and is not entitled to any compensation whatever (R. v. Postmaster-General (1876), 32 L. T. 569).

766. The procedure required by the Telegraph Acts (m) to be adopted for the assessment of statutory compensation for property compulsorily acquired, or for damage or injury thereto, is, with certain exceptions (n), the procedure authorised by the Lands Clauses Acts (o).

SECT. 2.
Statutory Compensation.
Procedure.

(m) As to the Telegraph Acts, see note (m), p. 349, ante.

(n) These exceptions are the following:—(i.) it is provided by the Telegraph Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 76), s. 13, that, as regards all railways and canals then existing or authorised, the arbitrators are to be those appointed by that Act, and not those who would otherwise be appointed under the Lands Clauses Acts, pursuant to the Telegraph Acts, 1863 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 110) and 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 72). It is probable that the effect of this provision is to repeal the Telegraph Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 110), s. 9 (10), (11), and that there is no longer any jurisdiction in the Lord Chief Justice to appoint an umpire; see R. v. Coleridge (Lord) (1876), 45 L. J. (q. n.) 649, where, however, it was unnecessary to decide the point, as the Postmaster-General waived the objection; (ii.) by the Telegraph Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 73), s. 12, the mode of conducting the arbitration, in cases of agreements between the Postmaster-General and foreign telegraphic companies, is to be that prescribed by the arbitration provisions of the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 16), ss. 128—134; (iii.) the arbitration in relation to the amounts payable for the exclusive use of a telegraph for Government purposes under the Telegraph Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 112), ss. 51, 52, is to be conducted in the manner prescribed in those enactments; (iv.) the compensation payable to frontagers under the Telegraph Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 112), s. 27 (2), is to be settled by the Board of Trade, whose determination is to be final and conclusive (ibid., s. 23); the Board has power to deal with the costs (ibid., s. 29). It is to be observed that, in these arbitrations, though prima facie the arbitrator has no jurisdiction to deal with any question of compensation other than those submitted, he may include all questions, whether of annual rent or lump sums, in an award of one gross amount, if the parties are aware that he is taking into consideration all such matters, and make no objection; see R. v. Metropolitan Rail. Co. (1883), 50 L. T. 6, C. A., where two questions were dealt with by the arbitrator on a reference under the Telegraph Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 110), s. 9, only one of which had been formally submitted, namely, (i.) what was to be paid by the Postmaster-General to a railway company for the prospective loss of its right to grant wayleaves to others for telegraphs, and (ii.) what yearly rent was to be paid for the perpetual right of way which the Postmaster-General acquired for his posts and wires over the railway company's system, and the arbitrator awarded one gross sum to include (i.) and the capitalised value of (ii.); whereupon the company insisted that they were not bound, and they accordingly refused, to hand over their telegraphs except at an agreed or assessed annual rent, on the ground that the arbitrator had no jurisdiction to deal with, and had not dealt with, the question of rent, and that the sum awarded must be deemed to represent only compensation for the prospective loss above mentioned; but the court made absolute a rule for a mandamus to the company, on the prosecution of the Postmaster-General, to transfer the telegraphs, being of opinion that the company was in no way misled, and were perfectly aware that the arbitrator was in fact dealing with both questions, and intending to adjudicate on both.

(o) Telegraph Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 112), ss. 7, 21 (4); Telegraph Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 110), ss. 7—9; Telegraph Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 73), ss. 10—12; Telegraph Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 88), s. 4; Telegraph (Construction) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 33), s. 5 (3). The Lands Clauses Acts are defined in the Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), s. 23; see title COMPULSORY PURCHASE OF LAND AND COMPENSATION, Vol. VI., pp. 12 et seq. For a full account of the procedure under the Lands Clauses Acts, see ibid., pp. 5, et seq. In the case of compensation to officers and clerks of the telegraph companies referred to in note (l), p. 382, ante, the assessment was to be made on a basis expressly prescribed in the enactment relating thereto; see Telegraph Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 110), s. 8 (7); R. v. Postmaster-General (1875), 32

SECT. 3.
Other Remedies.
Civil
remedies.

SECT. 3.—Other Remedies.

767. For the violation of certain provisions of the Telegraph Acts (p) there are civil remedies provided other than those already mentioned (q). Thus, the Board of Trade, on executing any work which the owner of a telegraph placed or maintained in, under, or over any estuary or branch of the sea, or shore or bed of any tidal water, has failed to execute according to the statutory requirement in that behalf, is empowered to recover the expenses thereof from such owner with costs as a Crown debt, and is entitled to all the preferences and privileges attaching to that mode of recovery (r). The Postmaster-General may sue for any debt due to him as a private debt, instead of resorting to statutory penalties (s). On the other hand, in the case of submarine telegraphy, statutory restrictions are placed upon common law rights of action in respect of the act or default or neglect of any officer of a warship or specially commissioned vessel of His Majesty in the execution of his statutory duties, both as to the time within, and the tribunals before, which such action must be brought, and as to tender of amends, costs, and otherwise (t).

Part IX.—Penal Provisions Relating to Telegraphs.

SECT. 1.—Protection of the Postmaster-General.

SECT. 1.
Protection of the Postmaster-General.
protected.

768. Of the various offences in relation to telegraphs which are created by the Telegraph Acts (u) and other enactments, the first group concerns the property, rights, and interests of the Postmaster-General, and others authorised by statute to acquire, own, or work telegraphs and transmit telegrams. In this class are comprised the following statutory offences which are punishable as prescribed:— wilful or malicious injury to telegraphs or telegraphic posts or other works, or obstruction of telegraphic communication (v); violation of the exclusive privileges of the Postmaster-General in the transmission of telegrams, and services incidental thereto (a); refusal or failure on the part of non-telegraphic “undertakers,” when altering their works, to comply with the statutory requirements of the Postmaster-General (b); establishment, installation, or working of wireless telegraph stations, or apparatus, without a licence from the Postmaster-General, or in violation of the terms of any such licence (c); and wilful or culpably negligent breakage of submarine

(v) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), ss. 37, 38; see title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 787. By the Telegraph Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 76), ss. 8—11, penalties, recoverable summarily, are annexed to any destruction of, or injury to, any “telegraphic line” of the Postmaster-General, whereby telegraphic communication is carelessly or wilfully interrupted (the penalty being a daily fine of £20 maximum, or a gross penalty of £50 maximum, at the option of the Postmaster-General), and to any obstruction of the Postmaster-General or his agents in placing, maintaining, altering, removing, or repairing any such telegraphic line (the penalty being a fine not exceeding £10, or, if the offence is a continuing one, a daily penalty not exceeding £10). As to unauthorised fixing of notices to telegraph posts, see title POST OFFICE, Vol. XXII., p. 666. For the statutory meaning of “telegraphic line” and “post,” see p. 350, ante.

(a) Telegraph Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 73), s. 6. The offence is punishable summarily by a fine not exceeding £5 (ibid.). As to the “exclusive privileges” referred to, see pp. 355 et seq., ante.

(b) As to the statutory requirements of the Postmaster-General, see pp. 360 et seq., ante. Failure to give the prescribed notice to the Postmaster-General is punishable summarily with a penalty not exceeding £10 a day (Telegraph Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 76), s. 7 (6)); failure to comply with the requirements of the Postmaster-General’s counter-notice is punishable summarily with a penalty not exceeding £10 a day, or, if by reason of such failure telegraphic communication is interrupted, not exceeding £50 a day (ibid., s. 7 (7)). As to similar offences on the part of electric light undertakers, see title ELECTRIC LIGHTING AND POWER, Vol. XII., pp. 572, 577, 578, 640.

(c) Wireless Telegraphy Act, 1904 (4 Edw. 7, c. 24), s. 1 (3), (4), (5). The punishment is, on conviction on indictment, imprisonment for not exceeding twelve months, with or without hard labour, or a fine not exceeding £100, and on summary conviction a fine not exceeding £10, together with (in either case) forfeiture of the apparatus, which may be seized at any station, place, or ship, pursuant to a search warrant, which warrant any magistrate, on being satisfied of the facts by evidence on oath, may for that purpose grant to any police officer or officer appointed by the Postmaster-General, the Admiralty, the Army Council, or the Board of Trade; and in any such case the Merchant cables, or injury thereto in such manner as may interrupt or obstruct telegraphic communication (d).

SECT. 2.—Protection of Private Rights.

769. A second group of penal provisions consists of those which are designed to protect the property and safety of bodies and persons affected by the construction and maintenance of telegraphic works. This class comprises the following acts or omissions on the part of telegraph undertakers, which are statutory offences, punishable as prescribed:—failure to make good a street or public road, after having opened or broken it up, or to fence, watch, or light the part broken up during the operation (e); non-compliance with directions given by a court of summary jurisdiction for the protection of a landowner, where a telegraph has been placed above ground within a certain distance of his dwelling-house (f); non-payment of expenses incurred by the Board of Trade in relation to the placing and maintaining of telegraphs, buoys, or sea-marks in an estuary, or branch of the sea, or bed or shore of any tidal water (g); non-compliance, on the part of any telegraph undertakers, other than the Postmaster-General, with any bye-laws made by an urban authority for the prevention of danger and obstruction to the public from posts, wires, tubes, or other apparatus placed above, over, along, or across any street for the purposes of any telegraph or telephone (h); and, on the part of the Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), ss. 684, 686, 693, relating to the enforcement of penalties by distress on ships, apply. By the Wireless Telegraphy (Foreign Ships) Regulations, 1908 (Stat. R. & O., 1908, p. 961), r. 7, unlicensed wireless telegraphy for the purpose of making, or receiving, signals of distress is exempted from penalty, and by the Wireless Telegraphy Order, 1908 (Stat. R. & O., 1908, p. 960), reg. 1, it is provided that a person on board a British ship which is registered in any British possession, other than the Isle of Man or Channel Islands, or in any British Protectorate, if acting under a licence from a competent authority of any such place, commits no offence.

(d) Submarine Telegraph Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 49), s. 3 (2), (3), (5); see also ibid., ss. 7, 8 (evidence), 9 (person deemed to be in charge of a vessel), 12 (definitions). The offence is an indictable misdemeanour, punishable on conviction, if the act was wilful, by penal servitude for not exceeding five years or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not exceeding two years, or by a fine, or both; and if the act was due to culpable negligence only, by imprisonment without hard labour for not exceeding three months, or by a fine not exceeding £100, or both (ibid., s. 3 (2)). Any person aiding and abetting is punishable as a principal (ibid., s. 3 (5)). Further, any obstruction of an officer of a warship or specially commissioned vessel of His Majesty, or any neglect to comply with any order or direction of such officer, is an offence punishable on summary conviction by a fine not exceeding £30, or by imprisonment with or without hard labour for not exceeding two months (ibid., s. 6 (1), (2)).

(e) Telegraph Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 112), s. 18. The punishment is a penalty not exceeding £20, or, in case of a continuing offence, a maximum penalty not exceeding £5 a day, to go to the body having control of the street or public road (ibid.); compare title HIGHWAYS, STREETS, AND BRIDGES, Vol. XVI., p. 255.

(g) Ibid., s. 40. The expenses are recoverable as a penalty (ibid.).

(h) Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 59), ss. 13–15. The punishment is a penalty, recoverable summarily, not exceeding £5, and, in the case of a continuing offence, not exceeding 40s. a day, and the master of any vessel engaged in laying or repairing a submarine cable, violation of any collision regulations, or interference with any fishing vessel, or the operations thereof, contrary to any regulations made for the protection of such vessel (i).

SECT. 2.
Protection of Private Rights.

SECT. 3.—Protection of the Public Using the Telegraphs.

770. A third class of penal provisions is intended to enforce the duties of telegraph undertakers to the public using the telegraphs. This group includes the following acts and omissions which are made statutory offences punishable as prescribed: on the part of any person employed by a telegraph company, the improper divulging to any person of the contents of any telegram (k), and on the part of any person having official connexion with the Post Office, or acting on behalf of the Postmaster-General, the disclosure or interception, improperly or contrary to duty, of the whole or any part of the contents of any telegraphic message, or message intrusted to the Postmaster-General for transmission (l); on the part of any person in the employ of any telegraph undertakers, the wilful or negligent omission to transmit or deliver, or delay in the transmission or delivery of, any telegram (n); and, on the part of any person whatever, the forgery, or wilful and unauthorised alteration of a telegram, or the uttering of such telegram knowing it to be forged or altered, or the transmission by telegraph, or the uttering, as a telegram, of any message or communication known not to be a telegram, whether there was any intention to defraud or not (n).

magistrate has jurisdiction to make an order for the removal of the posts, wires, etc. (ibid.). As to such bye-laws, see p. 388, post. The Postmaster-General is exempt from these provisions; see ibid.

(k) Telegraph Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 112), s. 45; Post Office (Protection) Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 76), s. 11. Under the former provision the punishment is a penalty, recoverable summarily, not exceeding £20; under the latter the punishment is, on summary conviction, the like penalty; and on conviction on indictment, imprisonment with or without hard labour for not exceeding one year, or a fine not exceeding £100.

(l) Telegraph Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 110), s. 20; the punishment is imprisonment for not exceeding twelve calendar months (ibid.). SECT. 1.

Telegraph Regulations.

Telegraphs.

Postmaster-General.

Local authorities.

Telephones.

SECT. 1.—Telegraph Regulations.

771. For the purpose of carrying into effect statutory provisions relating to telegraphs, Parliament has confided to various public and local authorities the power and duty of subordinate or derivative legislation with respect to the several matters respectively mentioned below.

With reference to the conduct of telegraphic business, the Postmaster-General is authorised to frame regulations for the prevention of disclosure of the contents of telegrams (o), and for fixing the hours during which the offices shall be open, the terms upon which the telegraphs may be used, the charges to be made for the transmission of telegrams, and the conduct of telegraphic business generally (p).

As regards public safety and convenience, it is recognised in the Telegraph Acts (q) that any county council or urban sanitary authority may from time to time make regulations in relation to telegraphic lines to which any licensee of the Postmaster-General is to be subject in exercising the powers conferred on him by the licence (r); and any urban authority may make, alter, and repeal bye-laws, which, however, are not to affect the telegraphs of the Postmaster-General, for the prevention of danger and obstruction to the public from telegraphic posts, or from wires, or other telegraphic or telephonic apparatus placed over, along, or across any street, and for their inspection, and, if need be, prohibition (s).

772. With respect to telephones, inasmuch as a telephone is a species of statutory telegraph (t), all the powers above mentioned which have been conferred upon the Postmaster-General for the framing of regulations as to the conduct of telegraphic business generally involve a like power of subordinate or ancillary legislation

(p) Telegraph Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 58), s. 2. Numerous regulations have been issued hereunder, of which the following are now in force:—(i.) as to inland telegrams—Telegraph (Inland Written Telegram) Regulations, 1898 (Stat. R. & O. Rev., Vol. XIII., Telegraph, p. 11); Telegraph (Inland Written Telegram) Amendment (No. 1) Regulations, 1905 (Stat. R. & O., 1905, p. 1345); Telegraph (Inland Written Telegram) Amendment (No. 2) Regulations, 1906 (Stat. R. & O., 1906, p. 731); Telegraph (Inland Written Telegram) Amendment (No. 3) Regulations, 1910 (Stat. R. & O., 1910, p. 769); Telegraph (Inland Written Telegram) Amendment (No. 4) Regulations (Stat. R. & O., 1912, p. 1210); (ii.) as to foreign telegrams—Telegraph (Foreign Written Telegram) Regulations, 1900 (Stat. R. & O. Rev., Vol. XIII., Telegraph, p. 33); Telegraph (Foreign Written Telegram) Regulations, 1906 (Stat. R. & O., 1906, p. 735); Telegraph (Foreign Written Press Telegram) Regulations, 1906 (Stat. R. & O., 1906, p. 759); Telegraph (Foreign Written Press Telegram) Amendment (No. 1) Regulations, 1907 (Stat. R. & O., 1907, p. 1035). with reference to telephonic business. Accordingly, such of the Postmaster-General's regulations as relate to telephones specifically, purport, nevertheless, to have been issued under the authority of the Telegraph Acts (u) generally (v). There is one enactment, however, whereby the Postmaster-General, in relation to licences for the supply of public telephonic communication, co nomine, is charged with the duty of auxiliary legislation, in so far as he is thereby authorised to make an order, prescribing the conditions under which competing licensees are to afford one another facilities for the transmission of telephonic messages between their respective systems in the same "exchange area" (a). Such an order has been made accordingly (b).

773. With respect to wireless telegraphy, the Postmaster-General has power to make regulations as to the manner of application and the fees payable for licences (c), and also as to the conditions under which any apparatus may be worked on a foreign ship whilst in territorial waters, and imposing penalties for the violation thereof, including the forfeiture of any such apparatus (d). Such regulations have been made, and they contain a provision that the working of any apparatus on board a foreign ship when in any harbour in the British Islands shall be subject also to any rules issued by the Admiralty (e). (v) See the Telephone Regulations, 1910 (Stat. R. & O., 1910, p. 770). In ibid., r. 1, "telephone" is defined as "any transmitting or receiving instrument used or intended to be used at any office for the purpose of transmitting or receiving spoken messages or communications by means of electricity," and "telephonic message" as "a spoken message or communication transmitted by telephone." This regulation also defines the terms "office," "exchange," "exchange system," "subscriber," "caller," "call office," "trunk line," "branch line," "single period" etc. In the remaining regulations the charges and the conditions of user are dealt with.

and the Board of Trade, to make regulations for the prevention of marine collisions, and as to lights, fog signals, steering and sailing rules generally, extend to authorise regulations with reference to the relations between vessels engaged in laying or repairing cables and sea-fishing or other vessels (f).

SECT. 2.—Validity of Telegraph Regulations.

Intra vires.

775. In point of substance, the only condition of the validity of any regulation, rule, bye-law, or order purporting to be framed under parliamentary authority, is that it must not exceed the limits of the authority, or serve other purposes than those expressed in, or reasonably to be inferred from, the enactment from which alone the delegated legislation derives its vitality (g).

Formalities and procedure.

776. The conditions precedent or subsequent to the validity, or the continued validity, of such regulations, in point of formalities and procedure, are prescribed in the several enactments (h). In some cases Parliament requires the consent or concurrence of certain authorities other than the authority to which the regulation-making powers are confided, such as that of the Treasury (where it is a question of public money or revenue), or of the Board of Trade, or Admiralty (i). In other cases publication is required to be made in a particular manner before, or within a prescribed period after, the issue of the regulations (k). In nearly every XXII., and replaced by ibid., ss. 418–424, shall extend to authorise regulations for carrying into effect the Submarine Telegraph Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 49), Sched., arts. V., VI.; see, further, title SHIPPING AND NAVIGATION, Vol. XXVI., pp. 359 et seq.

(g) No question as to the validity, from this point of view, of any of the numerous regulations issued under the Telegraph Acts (see note (m), p. 349, ante) has yet arisen, or is likely to arise, inasmuch as the purposes which such regulations are to carry into effect and the authorities which are respectively to make them are in every case defined with sufficient precision. There is no provision in any enactment that any regulations are to be reasonable, as there had been in the special Acts of parliamentary telegraph companies incorporated before the commencement of the Telegraph Acts (see note (m), p. 349, ante), as, for instance, in the Electric Telegraph Company's Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. cciii.), s. 66. The question of the reasonableness of a regulation framed under this provision was debated in MacAndrew v. Electric Telegraph Co. (1855), 17 C. B. 3. No such question can ever arise in the case of any regulation under the Telegraph Acts (see note (m), p. 349, ante), to which the only possible objection, in point of substance, could be either that the regulation is ultra vires or that it was not made by the proper authority.

(i) As to the Treasury's consent, in cases of regulations with respect to fees, see Telegraph Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 38), s. 3 (5); Wireless Telegraphy Act, 1904 (4 Edw. 7, c. 24), s. 1 (6). As to the Admiralty and the Board of Trade, see the enactments cited in note (e), p. 389, ante, note (k), infra.

(k) See, for instance, the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 59), s. 13 (4), (5), (6), whereby it is provided that any proposed bye-laws, or any proposed alterations or repeals of existing bye-laws, must be submitted to, and approved by, the Board of Trade, and that reasonable notice thereof is to be served upon all persons interested in any telegraphic apparatus who may be affected thereby; whereupon any such person may lodge objections, and be case it is a condition subsequent to the continued validity of such rules that they be laid before both Houses of Parliament within specified limits of time (l). Unless a particular form or manner is prescribed, a regulation may be made in any form or published in any manner. For instance, a condition printed at the back of a telegraph form may constitute a valid regulation if the statute says nothing to the contrary (m).

Part XI.—Financial Provisions of the Telegraph Acts.

777. In many of the Telegraph Acts (n), and in all the Telegraph (Money) Acts (n), there are provisions for raising money, either within specified limits, or generally, for telegraphic purposes authorised by Parliament, stating in each case how the money is to be provided, appropriated, and repaid. Since a statutory telegraph includes a telephone (o), it follows that every parliamentary authority to raise money for general telegraphic purposes involves an authority to raise money for telephonic purposes; but in some cases it is expressly directed that the fund authorised to be raised shall be devoted to such last-mentioned purposes exclusively (p).

Any council of a borough, or of an urban district, having a licence from the Postmaster-General to provide a system of public telephonic communication, may defray the expenses of exercising the powers conferred by the licence, in the case of a borough, out of the borough fund or borough rate, and, in the case of an urban district, out of the general expenses rate, and for that purpose may borrow money in the prescribed manner; but, in the former case, the money is to be borrowed on the security of the borough fund or rate (a).

Part XII.—Telegraphy at Common Law.

SECT. 1.—Rights and Liabilities of Telegraph Undertakers.

General
principles.

779. Except in so far as protected or restricted by statute, or by any licence granted, or order or regulations made, pursuant to statutory authority, every person engaged in telegraphic business is subject to the ordinary law of the land. For example, if any such person opens or breaks up a street or another person's private land for the purpose of his intended works, or places or maintains a telegraph under or above such street or land, or interferes with the property, rights, duties or interests of any public or local authority, or landowner, or member of the public, so as to create an obstruction, nuisance or trespass, he is liable to the same extent, and in the same manner, as any other wrongdoer (b).

Streets.

A street is only vested by statute in a local or road authority to the extent of its area of user as a street; the authority owns only the surface, paving, or vesture of the land constituting the street, and so much of the soil below, and of the column of air above, as is required to enable it to discharge its duty of maintaining the street in proper repair for all ordinary street purposes (c). It follows that an unauthorised and unlicensed invasion of any subsoil, or stratum of air, which is outside this area of user as a street, for the purpose of placing or maintaining telegraphic wires or works, is not a trespass, or a violation of any proprietary rights of any local authority, whatever else it may be (d). If, however, the local authority chooses to take the law into its own hands, as, for instance, by cutting the unauthorised telegraph or telephone wires, the unlicensed company, on whom the burden then rests of justifying its action, is placed in a corresponding difficulty, and having no rights either at common law or by statute, may be unable to discharge that burden, or prove a trespass (e). On the other hand, a non-statutory telegraph company is as much exempt from statutory restrictions and conditions as it is devoid of statutory privileges, and any body or person complaining of its alleged wrongful acts cannot, at one and the same time, claim to treat such company as a common law trespasser and also as a violator of the provisions of a telegraphic enactment which, ex hypothesi on the former basis, does not apply to it (f). If such a company, though not acting under the protection of any of the Telegraph Acts (g), is not violating any of them, it is entitled to all its common law rights of property, and subject to the corresponding liabilities (a). In like manner, independently of legislation, the owners of submarine cables may resort to all common law remedies for injury or damage thereto, or for nuisance, whether at common law, or under the Admiralty jurisdiction (b).

(d) Wandsworth Board of Works v. United Telephone Co. (1884), 13 Q. B. D. 904, C. A. (overhead wires of a telephone company); followed in *Fareham Local Board and Fareham Electric Light Co. v. A., where it was further decided that the limited ownership of the local authority, as described in the text, is in no way extended or affected by the circumstance that their predecessors had an absolute ownership of the soil.

(e) National Telephone Co., Ltd. v. St. Peter Port (Constables), [1900] A. C. 317, P. C.

(f) Wandsworth Board of Works v. United Telephone Co., supra, at pp. 917, 918, 924, 928. Here the plaintiffs insisted that their consent, which had not been obtained, was a condition precedent to the placing of the telephonic wires over the street, pursuant to the Telegraph Act, 1868 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 112), s. 12, but it was held that they had no right to claim the benefit of that statute, which applied only to any company authorised by special Act to construct and maintain telegraphs (which admittedly the defendants were not), any more than the defendants had any right to avail themselves thereof for the purpose of excusing that which was alleged to be either a trespass or a nuisance.

(g) As to the Telegraph Acts, see note (m), p. 349, ante.

(a) Thus, in National Telephone Co. v. Baker, [1893] 2 Ch. 186, where the defendants had collected electrical energy on their land, and discharged it into the earth beyond their control, to the injury of the plaintiffs' property, it was held that the plaintiffs were entitled to rely on the common law doctrine of Rylands v. Fletcher (1868), L. R. 3 H. L. 330 (see title NEGLIGENCE, Vol. XXI., p. 401), and, but for the fact that the defendants were held protected by the terms of a tramway provisional order, the plaintiffs would have succeeded in the action. See also Eastern and South African Telegraph Co., Ltd. v. Cape Town Tramways Cos., Ltd., [1902] A. C. 381, P. C.

(b) Before the commencement of submarine cable legislation (see p. 375, ante) the owners of such cables were held entitled, in respect of injury to their cables by anchors, to common law relief, in Submarine Telegraph Co. v. Dickson (1864), 15 C. B. (N. s.) 759, and to admiralty relief in The Clara Killam (1870), L. R. 3 A. & E. 161. In *Eastern and South African Telegraph Co., Ltd. v. All companies and persons subject to the Telegraph Acts (c), and other enactments relating to telegraphs, are subject also to the common law, except in so far as those statutes and enactments expressly, or by reasonable implication, substitute statutory for common law rights, remedies, and liabilities. Certain provisions of the Acts (c), indeed, ex abundanti cautela, expressly preserve these rights and liabilities (d).

SECT. 2.—Relation between Telegraph Undertakers and their Customers.

781. Apart from the Postmaster-General, who stands in a peculiar position (e), persons engaged in telegraphic business are the agents of the parties handing in signed messages for transmission, for the purpose of making a contract, with the necessary formalities (when required by statute) as to signature (f); but they are only agents for the transmission of a message in the terms in which such message is delivered to them by the sender (g). For any omission, delay, or negligence, in the duty of transmitting or delivering telegrams, they are liable to the sender (h), with whom there is a contractual privity, but not to the person to whom it is sent, with whom there is none (i). They are not common carriers, even if carriers at all of the telegrams transmitted (k); nor are such SECT. 3.—Telegraphic and Telephonic Communications.

782. In any branch of the law which involves the consideration of what is necessary to constitute a communication, an offer, an acceptance, or a publication, it is obvious that, as instruments by which these are commonly made or conveyed, telegraphs and telephones must play an important part. These questions fall within the titles of this work devoted to such subjects respectively (m).

In general.

783. Notice of an injunction or order of a court may be given by telegram (n). In this case, the proper course is to telegraph to an agent at the place where the person affected by the order is to be found, with instructions to effect the service personally, and not to send the notice direct; otherwise, if a writ of attachment is afterwards applied for, the respondent may resist the application on the ground that he bonâ fide believed the telegram to be a bogus message, or a trick, and, if he is believed, the application will fail (o). Similarly, a banker to whom a telegram is sent, which purports to come from a customer, is not bound to accept it, if unauthenticated, as a genuine and valid countermand of his primâ facie duty and authority to pay that customer's cheque, when presented, though he may reasonably postpone payment of the cheque so that inquiries may be made (p).

SECT. 4.—Telegraphs and Telephones as the Subject of Demise.

SECT. 5.—Rates on Land Occupied for Telegraphic Purposes.

785. Any company or person who has the exclusive occupation of telegraphic wires or works is liable to pay rates in respect thereof; but exclusive enjoyment, without exclusive occupation, does not render the property rateable (r). An easement or right of way over land for telegraphic or telephonic posts or works is a rateable occupation of that land (s). It is expressly provided by the Telegraph Act, 1868 (t), that all land, property and undertakings purchased or acquired by the Postmaster-General thereunder shall be assessable and rateable in respect to local, municipal, and parochial rates, assessments, and charges, at sums not exceeding the rateable value at which such land, property, and undertakings were properly assessed or assessable at the time of such purchase or acquisition (a). This value is to be taken as the maximum, even where the Postmaster-General has let the property, and is no longer using it for telegraphic purposes (b).

SECT. 6.—Income Tax on Telegraphic Undertakings.*

Business in United Kingdom.

786. Telegraphic business is a source of income, and therefore, so far as it is carried on within the United Kingdom, is chargeable with income tax (c). Where a submarine telegraph company's cables communicate with telegraphic lines in the United Kingdom of the Postmaster-General, who collects the total charges in this country, and, after deducting what is due to himself, hands over the balance to the company, such company is, to that extent, carrying on business in the United Kingdom, and is chargeable to the income tax on the balance of profits which it earns therein (d). Any person who uses, or lets off premises for use, in telegraphic business, comes within the exemption from liability to inhabited house duty on the ground of the trade user of the premises, telegraphy being a trade for this purpose (e).

SECT. 7.—Telegraphic Addresses.

Part I.—Theatres.

SECT. 1.—Theatre Licences.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Places Requiring a Licence.

Places requiring letters patent.

788. Every house or other place (a) of public (b) resort (c) had or kept (d) for the public performance of stage plays (e) requires either the authority of letters patent (f) or a licence (g).

(a) As to structural requirements, see pp. 405, 406, post.

(b) Under the Revenue Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 33), s. 20, dealing with an occasional licence, a "public dinner or ball" is not less "public" because power is retained to exclude improper persons. If the dinner is solely for the promoter and his friends, the public not being admitted, it is private. Whether it is public or private is a question of fact (Maloney v. Lingard (1898), 42 Sol. Jo. 193); compare the decisions as to a "public place" cited in title GAMING AND WAGERING, Vol. XV., pp. 291 et seq.

(c) A place to which the public resort in fact, though not of right, is a "place of public resort" within a municipal bye-law for the prevention of betting (Kilson v. Ashe, [1899] 1 Q. B. 425); see also Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 59), s. 36 (6); and title PUBLIC HEALTH AND LOCAL ADMINISTRATION, Vol. XXIII., pp. 429, 430. A booth used by strolling players is not a place of public resort (Davys v. Douglas (1859), 4 H. & N. 180), nor a tenement had or kept under the Theatres Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 68), s. 2 (Fredericks v. Howie (1862), 1 H. & C. 381). A theatre or place of amusement does not come within the definition of a "shop" in the Shops Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 54), by reason only of the sale of programmes and catalogues and other similar sales (ibid., s. 14).

(d) "Habitual" having or keeping is not necessary (Shelley v. Bethell (1883), 12 Q. B. D. 11; Marks v. Benjamin (1839), 5 M. & W. 565). Where a man hires an unlicensed room for a few nights and performs

A music and dancing licence (h) is not sufficient for the production of stage plays (i). The Lord Chamberlain (k) grants licences, with special conditions and subject to special rules, to music-halls (l). A theatre licence may be required though the house or other place is not expressly used as a theatre, and though money is not taken at the doors (m).

A recreation room managed and conducted under the authority of a Secretary of State or of the Admiralty does not require any licence when kept or used for the public performance of stage plays (n).

(l) The conditions are—(1) the licence is an annual one; (2) the usual theatre licence prohibition of smoking in the auditorium is waived by the Lord Chamberlain; (3) no performance is to contain fewer than six distinct numbers, which are to appear on the programme; (4) the act-drop is to be lowered between each number; (5) if the conditions are broken, the stage play licence will not be renewed; (6) an applicant who has given the London County Council an undertaking that no intoxicating drinks shall be sold or consumed on the premises must not apply for an excise licence under the Lord Chamberlain's stage play licence; (7) all sketches require the Lord Chamberlain's licence. The Lord Chamberlain requires a written undertaking from each applicant that he will observe conditions (3) to (6) inclusive (letter from the Lord Chamberlain dated the 6th January, 1912 (Times, 9th January)).

Theatre
Licences.
The county council may delegate its authority either wholly or subject to conditions and restrictions to the justices in petty sessions or to a committee of the county council or to a district council (q).

Oxford and Cambridge.

Within fourteen miles of Oxford or Cambridge licences or rules for the management of theatres are devoid of authority without the consent of the university authorities (r).

Concurrent jurisdiction.

791. In those places where the Sovereign occasionally resides, not being the cities and boroughs above mentioned, both the Lord Chamberlain and the local authority may grant licences; but the licences granted by the local authority are inoperative during the period of the Sovereign's actual residence therein, and only theatres with the Lord Chamberlain's licence may be opened during such period (a).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Grant of Licence.

Conditions.

792. A licence is granted only to the actual and responsible manager of the theatre, and he must, together with two sureties, bind himself under penalties to observe all rules (b) for the regulation of his theatre which may be in force during the continuance of the licence (c).

A licence may be refused without any reason for the refusal being given, and there is no appeal from the decision (d). The granting of a licence may be made subject to conditions (e).

793. The London County Council (f) may grant a provisional licence for premises about to be constructed, or in course of construction, within the Metropolis (g). A provisional licence has no force till confirmed by the licensing authority. If satisfied that no

If notice of appeal against the order is given to the London County Council, the matter is referred to an arbitrator appointed by the First Commissioner of Works (q).

796. The London County Council may (r) from time to time make, alter, vary, and amend regulations for the protection from fire of theatres, howsoever licensed (s), and whether licensed or not (t). A copy of such regulations must be open to inspection by all persons, without charge, at the offices of the London County Council and a printed authenticated copy must be obtainable at a cost of not more than 5s. by every person applying for it (u).

A certificate in writing under seal of compliance with the regulations must be obtained by every person having or keeping open any such house, room, or other place of public resort under a penalty of £50 a day (v).

SECT. 4.—Offences in Respect of Theatres.

799. Every person who for hire (f) acts or presents, or causes (g), permits or suffers to be acted or presented, (1) any part of any stage play in an unlicensed place (h), or (2) an unlicensed part of any stage play in any theatre, whether licensed or not (i), commits an offence; in the first case he is liable to a fine not exceeding £10 for every day he offends (h), and in the second case every licence, if any, by or under which the theatre was opened becomes absolutely void (i).

Acting unlicensed play or in
place.

Every actor who acts in any theatre where money or reward is charged for the admission of any person to the theatre to see a stage play, or where the stage play is presented on premises where excisable liquor may be sold, is deemed to be acting for hire (k).

800. All penalties are recoverable in the High Court or summarily before two justices (l). There is an appeal to quarter sessions from any order of any justices (m). After payment of the expenses of the prosecution any residue of any penalty is to be paid to the Crown (n).

Penalties.

In any proceedings for keeping an unlicensed theatre, or for acting for hire in an unlicensed theatre, upon proof that such theatre is used for the public performance of stage plays, the burden of proof is on the accused to show the due licensing, and until that is proved the theatre is to be deemed to be unlicensed (o).

proof.

(f) The acting is "for hire," whether payment is made at the door or any other place (Fredericks v. Payne (1862), as reported 32 L. J. (M. C.) 14, per BRAMWELL, J., at p. 16).

(g) That a person is the acting manager of a theatre and pays the salaries of performers and dismisses them is sufficient proof that he caused the performances; if he caused the performances, it is immaterial whether he did so as the agent of others or not (Parsons v. Chapman (1831), 5 C. & P. 33).

SECT. 4.
Offences in Respect of Theatres.

Special provision in metropolis.

801. The Commissioner of Metropolitan Police (p) may, by order in writing, authorise a superintendent of the Metropolitan Police, with such constables as he may think necessary, to enter any house or room kept or used for stage plays or dramatic entertainments, into which admission is obtained by payment of money and which is not a licensed theatre, at any time when it is open for the reception of persons resorting thereto, and to take into custody all persons found there without lawful excuse (q). The penalty for keeping, using, or knowingly letting any house or other tenement (r) for the purpose of being so used as an unlicensed theatre is a fine not exceeding £20, or not more than two months' imprisonment with or without hard labour; the penalty for performing or being in such unlicensed theatre without lawful excuse is a fine not exceeding 40s. (s).

A conviction under this provision does not exempt any owner, keeper, or manager of such house, room, or tenement from any liability for keeping a disorderly house or for a nuisance occasioned thereby (t).

Theatre
 queue.

802. A theatre queue may be a nuisance, and the persons causing the queue to assemble may be restrained by injunction (u).

SECT. 5.—Rights of the Public.

 to seat.

803. Members of the public who are admitted to a theatre are mere licensees (x), and their rights depend upon the contract, if any, under which they have been admitted (x). A member of the public who has paid for admission to any part of a theatre is entitled, on finding no room in that particular part, to demand the return of his money, although the theatre bills expressly state that no money will be returned (y). He has no right, however, to occupy a seat in any other part of the theatre; if he does so the proprietor may remove him, using no more force than is necessary (a).

Letting boxes.

804. The right of admission to a theatre is not necessarily confined to admission on a single occasion. The proprietor of a theatre may let a box in his theatre, with the exclusive right of occupying it, for a period, subject, if he himself is a lessee, to any restrictions imposed by his own lease (b). In this case the relation between the parties is that of landlord and tenant, and the proprietor is not entitled to enter the box or to interfere with it except for the purpose of repairing it or for any other purpose mentioned in the agreement of letting (c), whilst, on the other hand, the lessee of the box may be liable to be rated in respect of it (d).

SECT. 5.
the Public.

805. The right of free admission to a theatre for a specified period may be reserved to the vendor (e) or lessor (f) on a sale or lease of a theatre, or it may be granted to any person by the proprietor (g). In this case the person possessing the right has no interest in land, but is merely a licensee for the period specified (h), and his exact position depends upon the terms of the particular instrument creating the right (i). In the absence of any provision to the contrary (k), the right does not bind an assignee (l) or sub-lessee (m) of the proprietor; and it applies only to the theatre existing at the date of the instrument and not to a theatre subsequently built on the same site (n).

admission.

806. An audience has the right to express, by applause or hisses, the sensations which naturally present themselves at the moment, and its unbiassed free opinions of the merits of the performers (o), but has no right to make such a prodigious noise as to prevent others from hearing what is going forward on the stage (p).

(p) Clifford v. Brandon, supra.

SECT. 5.
Rights of the Public.

If any body of men go to a theatre with the intention of hissing an actor, or even damning a piece, it amounts to a conspiracy, and persons to the number of three or more who execute such a purpose by tumult or disorder may be guilty of a riot (q).

SECT. 6.—Performers.

applicable.

807. The ordinary law of contract (r) applies to theatrical contracts, except in so far as varied or modified by theatrical usage; for instance, to be enforceable, the contract must be certain (s), it must not be illegal (t), and, whether for personal service (u) or not (w), it is subject to the ordinary rules of avoidance arising from impossibility of performance (x).

Construction of theatrical contracts.

808. The construction of theatrical contracts, their performance, and the remedies for the breach thereof are in general governed by the rules applicable to other contracts (y). There are, however,

(q) Gregory v. Brunswick (Duke) (1843), 6 Man. & G. 295. As to riot generally, see title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 471; see also p. 406, ante.

A.); Scott v. Macnaughton (1908), Times, 25th November (contracts to perform "sketches" or stage-plays at music-halls not having necessary licence).

(w) See Glincretti v. Rickards (1907), Times, 26th January, C. A. (contract by music-hall artist for his troupe to perform; contract not avoided by death of member of troupe; compare Harvey v. Tivoli, Manchester, Ltd., supra). The contract is not, on the part of the proprietor of the theatre, a personal contract; thus, where the contract is made with proprietors in partnership, the death of one of the proprietors does not terminate the engagement (Phillips v. Alhambra Palace Co., [1901] 1 K. B. 59); nor is the engagement affected by the sale of the theatre by mortgagees under a power of sale, though the contract provides for its termination on the happening of some "unforeseen calamity" (ibid.). Similarly, the manager of a theatre who contracts to allow the production of a play on a certain date is liable in damages if the theatre is not then ready owing to a contractor not having finished his work in time (Hardie v. Balmain (1902), 18 T. L. R. 539, C. A.), even though the cause of unreadiness is the reconstruction of the theatre in compliance with the requirements of a local authority, and the agreement contains a clause avoiding the contract in the event of the theatre being closed through fire, death in the Royal Family, "or any other cause whatsoever" (ibid.).

certain matters peculiar to theatrical contracts which have been the subject of judicial decision.

The term "re-engagement" has no definite legal meaning, and what is "re-engagement" as distinguished from "fresh engagement" is a question for the jury (z).

An agreement to pay commission on all future engagements at a named music-hall is not terminated by the music-hall being pulled down and rebuilt (a).

Failure through temporary illness to attend rehearsals for six days before the commencement of an engagement in accordance with the terms of an agreement has been held not to justify rescission by the employer (b), but a failure to attend final rehearsals and the first few performances of an opera may so go to the root of the consideration as to justify rescission (c).

Inability to perform the part for which the actor (d) has been engaged is a ground for dismissal, unless arising from illness or other temporary cause (e).

Failure of an actor to send in "bill matter" as provided by the contract is a ground for damages, but not for cancellation of the contract (f).

Performers. An option exercisable by a manager to retain an actor's services after employment at a rising annual salary for a fixed period implies, where no further salary is mentioned, employment at the salary paid during the last year of the fixed period (i).

Restraint of trade. 810. A contract by a dramatist not to write dramatic pieces for the proprietors of any other than a particular theatre, or by an actor not to act elsewhere, is not void as a contract in restraint of trade (k).

An agreement by an actor to perform at a particular theatre is not, it seems, enforceable by injunction unless it contains a negative clause prohibiting him from performing elsewhere (l), but the employer is left to his other remedies (m). A stipulation that the actor is not to "act, sing, or appear publicly at any other theatre or place of entertainment without special permission" is a sufficient negative restraining clause (n), but a contract to perform at one theatre exclusively is not (o).

As to such a clause being implied, see Fechter v. Montgomery (1863), 33 Beav. 22. A contract not to perform before or during her "engagement at any theatre, music-hall, club, concert, or place of entertainment" has been held not to debar an actress from performing, without remuneration, on Sunday at a club (*Kelly v. 811. Theatrical usages, like other usages (p), apply to contracts only where both parties were aware, or must be presumed to have been aware, of the existence of the usage and where the usage is certain, universal, reasonable, and not opposed to the general law (q). SECT. 6.
Performers.
Theatrical usages.

There is a usage that the engagement of an actor for three years means three theatrical seasons (r); that the proprietor of a theatre may within reasonable limits fix what is to be the length of the season (s); and that prominent artists are to be "starred" on a music-hall bill (t). Attempts have failed to establish a usage among theatrical persons that a "tour" means three weeks (a); that an acting manager has a right to a private box or to give free orders for admission (b); or that piano manufacturers lend pianos to lessees of theatres (c).

When an actress is called upon to resume a part which she has previously acted with success she is entitled to reasonable notice to learn the part; reasonable notice in such a case is proportionate to the reputation she has acquired (d).

Part II.—Stage Plays.

SECT. 1.—Definition.

812. Whether a particular entertainment is a stage play is a question of fact (e). A stage play is described for certain purposes (f) What is included.

Austin* (1908), Times, 16th December.

SECT. 1.
Definition. as including tragedy, comedy, farce, opera, burletta, interlude, melodrama, pantomime, or other entertainment of the stage (g), or any part thereof. This description does not apply to any theatrical representation in any booth or show allowed by the proper authority in any lawful fair, feast, or customary meeting (h).

A dialogue in costume (i), or a performance in which the actions of persons performing beneath the stage are shown to the audience by means of mirrors, is a stage play (k). A ballet depicting by gestures war, peace, and reconciliation may be a stage play (l).

Procedure. 813. The Lord Chamberlain (m) is the licensing authority for stage plays for Great Britain. One copy of every new stage play, or new act, scene or other part added to any old stage play, must be sent to him at least seven days before the first acting or production. The copy sent to the Lord Chamberlain must specify the theatre and time intended for the first presentation and be signed by the master or manager of the theatre. Until the expiration of the seven days the new play or new addition to the old play must not be acted or presented (n).

Offences. 814. Every person who for hire (o) acts, presents, or causes to be acted or presented, any stage play, or part thereof, before it has been allowed by the Lord Chamberlain, or which has been disallowed by him, or which has been prohibited by him, is liable on conviction to a fine not exceeding £50 (p).

(g) These words must be construed to mean entertainments such as those before expressed, namely, tragedy etc., which are all of a dramatic character (Wigan v. Strange (1865), L. R. 1 C. P. 175, per WILLES, J., at p. 184). "Tumbling" was held not to be an "entertainment of the stage" within the meaning of stat. (1736) 10 Geo. 2, c. 28 (repealed) (R. v. Handy (1795) 6 Term Rep. 286).

Part III.—Music and Dancing and Other Public Entertainments.

SECT. 1.—Places for which a Licence is Required.

815. The law relating to music and dancing licences varies as it relates to places—

- (1) In the cities of London and Westminster and within twenty miles thereof, excluding the administrative county of Middlesex (a);
- (2) In the administrative county of Middlesex (b);
- (3) In the rest of England and Wales.

816. Any house, room, garden, or other public place (c) kept or used for public dancing, music, or other public entertainment of the like kind, requires to be licensed if situated in the cities of London or Westminster, or within twenty miles thereof (d), including the administrative county of Middlesex (e), and if not so licensed is a disorderly house (f).

Elsewhere in England or Wales no licence is required, except under the provisions of a local Act, or unless the local authority has adopted the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890 (g), Part IV. (h), whereupon any house, room, garden, or other public place, kept or used for public dancing, singing, music, or other public entertainment of the like kind, requires to be licensed (i), and if not so licensed is a disorderly house (j).

A licence is required where music, singing, and dancing entertainment is provided in a tent pitched on waste land hired for the occasion (k).

SECT. 1. Places for which Licence is Required.

The law in different parts of the country.

Places requiring licence.

(a) Disorderly Houses Act, 1751 (25 Geo. 2, c. 36). Nothing in the Act is to affect the Theatres Royal at Drury Lane and Covent Garden, the King's Theatre, Haymarket, or any performances carried on under letters patent or licence of the Crown or the Lord Chamberlain's licence (ibid., s. 4).

(b) Music and Dancing Licences (Middlesex) Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 15). The powers conferred by this Act are in addition to, and not in derogation of, any of the powers of licensing already vested in the Middlesex County Council (ibid. s. 2 (14)).

(c) As to the meaning of "public place," see note (c), p. 402, ante.

(f) A house may be a "disorderly house" within the Disorderly Houses Act, 1751 (25 Geo. 2, c. 36), although in fact there is no disorder (R. v. Wolfe (1849), 13 J. P. 428; Green v. Botheroyd (1828), 3 C. & P. 471; see title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., pp. 541 et seq.). SECT. 1.

Places
for which Licence is Required.

"Keeping" and "using."

A public-house (l) in which is provided a piano to be gratuitously played by the customers for their own amusement, there being no charge for admission, is not a room kept or used for public singing or music (m).

817. The music and dancing in any entertainment must form a substantial part of the entertainment and not be merely subsidiary (n), but a place may be kept for two purposes, one requiring a licence and the other not (o), thus, a skating rink where music is performed while skating is proceeding requires a licence (p), although rinking is not dancing (p). It is not necessary to public dancing that the dancing should be by the public (q). An ordinary dancing class does not require a licence (r), and a tight-rope or other performance in a circus with rhythmic movements does not require a dancing licence (s).

user.

Knowledge of the use to which the house or other place is put must be brought home to the defendant; and the user must be more than occasional, a single entertainment or temporary use not being sufficient to justify a conviction (t).

A room used temporarily for dancing during a festival (q), or a room used for a lecture together with incidental music (b), does not require a licence.

Exclusive users.

Where a licence is otherwise required, it is immaterial that the house is not kept exclusively for dancing, music, or singing (c), or that the dancing, music, or singing was upon public-house premises (d). In the case of dancing, music, or singing in a public-house (e) a licence is required though no money is charged for admission (f).

Notices to be posted over entrance.

SECT. 1.
Places
for which Licence is Required.

819. No place licensed for public music, dancing, or singing within twenty miles of London and Westminster (k) or in Middlesex (l) may be kept open for such purposes before the hour of noon unless under an occasional licence of exemption (m).

SECT. 2.—Authorities for Grant of Licences.

821. The authorities for the grant and renewal of licences are, in the cities of London and Westminster and within twenty miles thereof (o), and in the administrative county of Middlesex (p), the county council; and elsewhere in England or Wales, the authority provided by the local Act, if any, which may be in force in the district (q), or if there is no local Act, and the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890 (r), has been adopted, the licensing justices (s).

for Grant of Licences.

Public swimming baths.

822. A public swimming bath, when closed for swimming, may be let for music and dancing, provided that a licence is obtained (t). In districts where the authorities above mentioned have jurisdiction, the licence must be obtained from them (a); in any other district the licence must be obtained from the county council of the county in which the district is situate (b).

SECT. 3.—Grant and Renewal of Licences.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Music and Dancing Licences.

Scope of
licences.

823. Music and dancing licences may be granted separately (c) and subject to conditions (d). A music licence does not authorise singing or dancing (e).

Middlesex.

824. In the administrative county of Middlesex a licence is in force for one year, or such less time as the council, on granting the licence, determines (f). It may, however, be revoked at any time on breach of any of its terms or conditions (g).

Fourteen days' notice of intention to apply for a licence or for transfer of a licence must be given to the clerk to the council and to the superintendent of police (h). No notice, however, need be given of an application for renewal of an existing licence (i), and the council may grant a licence for fourteen days or less notwithstanding that proper notice has not been given (k).

Grant and Renewal of Licences.

Fourteen days' notice of intention to apply for a licence or for the transfer of a licence must be given to the clerk to the justices and the chief officer of police of the police district (q). No notice, however, need be given of an application for a renewal of an existing licence (r); and the justices in petty sessions may grant a licence for fourteen days or less notwithstanding that proper notice has not been given (s).

826. Where a local Act is in force, the licensing authority must comply with its provisions and have no power to vary them (t). Where no period of duration is fixed by the local Act, the licensing authority may grant a licence for one year only (a).

Local Acts.

827. Where the necessary provisions are in force (b), an urban authority may make bye-laws for the prevention of danger from whirligigs and swings when such whirligigs and swings are driven by steam power, and for the prevention of danger from the use of firearms in shooting ranges and galleries (c).

regulations of the Secretary of State, as the council determines, and may, without prejudice to any other powers of delegation it may possess, delegate any of its powers to the justices in petty session (i).

A licence is for one year or such shorter period as the council, on the grant of the licence, determines (k), and any licence may be transferred by the council (l).

Seven days' notice in writing must be given to the county council and to the chief officer of police of the police area (m) in which the premises are situate of intention to apply for a licence or transfer, but no notice is required for a renewal (n).

Fees.

829. The fees payable on the grant, renewal, or transfer of a licence are to be fixed by the council. The maximum fee for the grant or renewal for one year is £1, or, where the licence is for less than one year, 5s. per month, the total not to exceed the maximum of £1; for a transfer the fee is 5s. (o).

Penalties.

830. If the owner of a cinematograph uses or allows it to be used, or if the occupier of any premises allows the premises to be used, in contravention of the statutory provisions, or the regulations or conditions made thereunder, regulating the user thereof, the penalties are, on summary conviction, a fine not exceeding £20, and, in the case of a continuing offence, £5 a day, and the licence, if any, may be revoked by the county council (p).

Entry by constable.

A constable or other officer appointed for the purpose by the council may at all reasonable times enter any premises, whether licensed or not, in which he has reason to believe that a cinematograph exhibition is being or is about to be given (q). The penalty for preventing or obstructing the entry of such constable or other officer is, on summary conviction, a fine not exceeding £20 (r).

Occasional user.

831. Premises only used exceptionally or occasionally for cinematograph exhibitions, and not on more than six days in any one year, need no licence, provided the occupier gives notice in writing to the county council and the chief officer of police (m) seven days before the intended exhibition and complies with the regulations and conditions of the Secretary of State and the county council (r).

SECT. 4.—Structural Requirements as to Places of Public Resort.

834. Every building outside the administrative county of London in a district in which the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890 (b), has been adopted (c), used as a place of public resort (d), must be substantially constructed to the satisfaction of the urban authority and be supplied with sufficient entrances and exits which, whilst the building is in use, must be kept unobstructed to such extent as the urban authority requires. An authorised official may at any reasonable time enter and inspect such building (e).

835. No house, room, or other place may be used on Sunday for public entertainment or amusement (f), or for publicly debating upon any subject, to which persons are admitted for money (g), or by tickets sold for money, or where refreshments are sold for a greater price than the normal price, or persons subscribe to the entertainment expenses and receive admittance tickets (h).

A hall, duly registered as a place of public worship, where meetings are held at which sacred music and addresses are given, no charge being made except for reserved seats, and the object of the meetings being not pecuniary gain, but genuine religious worship, is not within the statutory prohibition (i).

SECT. 6.—Offences.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Licensing Offences.

Under the Disorderly Houses Act,
1751.

836. Any place kept for public singing, dancing or music in the cities of London and Westminster and within twenty miles thereof, exclusive of the administrative county of Middlesex, without a licence is a disorderly house (k). In addition to being punishable criminally (l), the keeper is liable to forfeit £100 to any person suing for it (m). Only one forfeiture is incurred, though there may have been several performances on different days (n).

Under the Music and Dancing
Licences
(Middlesex)
Act, 1894.

A breach of a condition in the licence relating to the hours of opening and closing, or to the placing of the prescribed inscription over the entrance (o), forfeits the licence, which must be revoked by the justices at the next sessions, and must not be renewed (p), nor a new licence be granted to the same person either directly or indirectly (q).

(f) An aquarium where marine animals are exhibited and orchestral music performed, the public being admitted on payment, is within the statutory prohibition (Warner v. Brighton Aquarium Co. (1875), L. R. 10 Exch. 291; Terry v. Brighton Aquarium Co. (1875), L. R. 10 Q. B. 306).

(g) The fact that a charge is made for a reserved seat is not incompatible with the admission being free. The statute speaks of admission, not to a seat, but to the entertainment (Williams v. Wright (1897), 13 T. L. R. 551, per COLLINS, J., at p. 552).

837. Any place kept or used for public dancing, singing, music, or other public entertainment of the like kind in the administrative county of Middlesex without a licence is a disorderly house, and the person occupying or rated as occupying it is liable to a penalty of £5 for each day that it remains a disorderly house (r). Any constable authorised by warrant under the hand of one Middlesex justice may enter any such place and apprehend every person found therein (s).

SECT. 6.
Offences.
Entry by constables.

838. A failure to affix and keep up the inscription (t), or to observe the days and hours of opening and closing stated in the licence, renders the holder liable to a penalty not exceeding £20, and in the case of a continuing offence to a daily penalty of £5 (a).

Penalties.

839. Any place kept or used for public dancing, singing, music, or other public entertainment of the like kind, in a district in which the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890 (b), is in force, without a licence is a disorderly house (c); and the person occupying or rated as occupying it is liable to a penalty not exceeding £5 for each day that it remains a disorderly house (d).

Under the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890.

A failure to affix and keep up the prescribed inscription (e), or to observe the days and hours of opening and closing stated in the licence, renders the holder of the licence liable to a penalty not exceeding £20, and in the case of a continuing offence to a daily penalty not exceeding £5 (f).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Sunday Entertainments.

840. The keeper (g) of any place opened or used for public entertainment, amusement, or debate on Sunday, contrary to the statutory provisions in that behalf (h), is liable to forfeit to a common informer (i)

(h) See p. 422, ante.

Offences.
 Chairman. Any person acting as manager of such an entertainment or as chairman of such debate is liable to forfeit £100 to a common informer, and every doorkeeper, servant, or other person issuing or collecting tickets or receiving money from persons admitted to the same is liable to forfeit £50 (l). A person who acts as the chairman of a lecture to which the public are admitted on payment of small sums, but who has no control over the lecturer, is not liable as the chairman of a public debate, nor is he liable as a person managing or conducting such entertainment or amusement, nor as a master of ceremonies (m).
 Penalty for advertising. The penalty for advertising or printing any advertisement of such public entertainment, amusement, or debate is £50 for each offence (n). The recovery of a penalty by a friendly informer is no bar to the recovery of the penalty by a different informer (o).
 Time within which action must be brought. 841. An action may be brought to recover the penalties as a debt, but the action must be brought within six months (p). The Crown may remit any penalty either wholly or in part (q).

Part IV.—Billiards.

SECT. 1.—When a Licence is Required.

- 842. Every house, room, or place kept for public (r) billiard playing, or where a public billiard table (s) is kept, at which persons are admitted to play, requires a billiard licence (t), unless such house, room, or place is specified in a publican's licence (a).

SECT. 2.
Grant of Licence.

The justices have an absolute discretion as to granting or refusing a billiard licence, and there is no appeal against their decision (d).

844. Persons applying for a billiard licence or applying for the transfer of a billiard licence must give the same notices as are required by persons intending to apply for a licence for the sale of intoxicating liquors or as near thereto as circumstances admit; when applying for a renewal no notice is required (e). Notices.

SECT. 3.—Offences.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Keeping Table without Licence.

845. Every person keeping a public billiard table (f) for public use without a licence, and not having a publican's licence (g), is liable to be proceeded against as a keeper of a common gaming house (h); he is also liable on conviction before a magistrate or two justices to pay not more than £10 for every day on which such billiard table has been used, or he may be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, for not more than one calendar month (i). Penalties.

Every person holding a licence for billiards other than a publican's licence (k) must put and keep up the words "licensed for billiards" legibly printed in some conspicuous place near the door and on the outside of the house specified in the licence; if he fails to do so he is liable to the same penalties as for keeping an unlicensed billiard room (l). Inscription on outside of house.

SUB-SECT. 2.—Offences against Tenor of Licence.

846. Offences against the tenor of a billiard licence are punishable by a fine not exceeding for the first offence £40, and for subsequent offences £20 (m). Penalties.

a billiard licence, permits any person to play billiards between the hours of 1 a.m. and 8 a.m. on any day, or at all on Sundays, Christmas Day, Good-Friday, or any public fast or thanksgiving day (o), or where the holder of a publican's licence (p) allows any persons to play billiards when his premises are not allowed by law to be open for the sale of wine, spirits, or beer (a).

Play after closing hours.

Although guests staying on licensed premises are entitled to be supplied with beer, wine or spirits after the closing hours of the premises for the sale of liquor (b), the holder of a publican's licence may be convicted on information of an offence against the tenor of his licence if he allows guests staying on his licensed premises to play billiards after the closing hours of his premises for the sale of liquor, because such playing of billiards does not come within the exceptions relating to the sale of liquor after closing hours (c).

Players consuming beer.

The holder of a billiard licence which provides that the holder shall not knowingly allow the consumption of excisable liquors by persons resorting to his house for the purpose of playing billiards commits no offence against the tenor of such licence by allowing the consumption of beer (d), since beer is not an excisable liquor (e).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Appeal against Conviction.

Appeals.

847. There is an appeal to the next general or quarter sessions upon summary conviction (f). The convicting justices may bind over the witnesses to attend at the hearing of the appeal, and such witnesses are to be paid by the county. In case the appeal fails, the appellant must repay the witnesses' fees to the county (g).

SECT. 4.—Entry by Constables.

Right of entry.

848. All constables and officers may, when and as often as they think fit, enter any house, room, or place where a public billiard table is kept (h). Part V.—Racecourses.

SECT. 1.—When a Licence is Required.

SECT. 1.

849. Every place within ten miles of Charing Cross where it is desired to hold a horse race must be licensed (l). A horse race for this purpose means any race in which a horse runs in competition with any other horse or against time for any prize of whatever nature or kind, or for any bet or wager, and at which more than twenty persons are present (m).

850. The licence is granted by the county council of the district in which the place for which a licence is desired is situated, and is valid for twelve months from the 25th March following the date of application (n).

Licensing
authority.

The application is to be made in the same manner as for a music and dancing licence granted by the county council (o).

SECT. 2.—*Unlicensed Races.*SUB-SECT. 1.—Civil Liability.

851. Every horse race held in a place required by the Racecourses Licensing Act, 1879 (p), to be licensed which is unlicensed is to be deemed to be a nuisance, and any person injured or inconvenienced thereby has all rights and remedies against all persons taking part in such horse race, and against the owners, lessees, and occupiers of the land or place, as if the horse race were a nuisance at common law (q).

Nuisance.

SUB-SECT. 2.—Criminal Liability.

852. Any person who takes part in any horse race held in contravention of the Racecourses Licensing Act, 1879 (p), is liable, on summary conviction (r), to a fine of £10, or imprisonment not exceeding two months (s).

Punishable on summary conviction.

The owner, lessee, or person in possession or occupation of any land or place where any horse race is held in contravention of the Racecourses Licensing Act, 1879 (p), is guilty of a misdemeanour and liable to a fine of not less than £5 nor more than £25, or to imprisonment for not less than one month nor more than three months (t).

Part I.—The Calendar and Divisions of Time.

SECT. 1.—The Calendar.

Calendar
statutory.

853. The English calendar, which is part of the common law, is established by statute, being attached to the Book of Common Prayer (a).

SECT. 2.—The Calendar Year.

Length and

854. The common year begins on the 1st January and consists of 365 days. It is divided into twelve unequal parts, called calendar months. In ordinary years the month of February contains twenty-eight days: in leap year the same month contains twenty-nine days, and thus the total number of days in that year is increased to 366. Leap year occurs once in every four years, the year so designated being that of which the number is divisible by four, subject, however, to this exception, that the centennial year is leap year only when it is a multiple of 400 (b).

(a) Stat. (1662) 14 Car. 2, c. 4, s. 2; Calendar (New Style) Act, 1750 (24 Geo. 2, c. 23); R. v. Dyer (1703), 6 Mod. Rep. 41; Brough v. Parkings (1703), 2 Ld. Raym. 992; Tutton v. Darke, Nixon v. Freeman (1860), 5 H. & N. 647. It follows that judicial notice is taken of the day on which a feast mentioned in the calendar falls. As to the Book of Common Prayer, see title ECCLESIASTICAL LAW, Vol. XI., pp. 349 et seq.

(b) The calendar as it now exists was established by the Calendar (New Style) Act, 1750 (24 Geo. 2, c. 23), amended by the Calendar Act, 1751 (25 Geo. 2, c. 30), whereby the following three changes were introduced:—The year was, from the beginning of the year 1752, made to begin on the 1st January instead of beginning on the 25th March; the system of intercalation was altered by the introduction of the exception mentioned in the text, supra; and eleven days were suppressed, the day which would have been the 3rd September, 1752, being made the 14th. The necessity for these changes arose in the

In any period of a year which begins on the 29th February or on any prior day not before the next preceding first day of March there must be 366 days. Any child born on the 29th February or on any earlier day not before the next preceding first day of March must live 366 days before the anniversary of his birthday arrives. In a period of one calendar month which includes the last day of February there must be twenty-nine or twenty-eight days, according as the year is or is not leap year (c).

following way. Previously to 1582 the year was regulated throughout Christendom by the Julian Calendar. The problem being to adjust the civil year, consisting of so many complete days, to the solar year, consisting of the same number of days and something less than six hours in addition, and to preserve the same interval between the beginning of the year and the equinox, the system of intercalating a day in which the extra hours should be absorbed was devised. In every fourth year according to the Julian Calendar a day was interposed between the 24th and 25th days of February. The sixth day before the calends of March was made to consist of two days: "id biduum pro uno die habetur." This system of intercalation was in course of time discovered to be erroneous. It had the effect of making the year unduly long, so that, whereas in the year when the calendar was introduced the spring equinox fell on the 25th day of March, and in the year 325, the date of the Council of Nicæa, on the 21st of March, by the year 1582 it had come to fall on the 11th day of the same month. To restore the equinox to the position in the year which it occupied in the year 325, to rectify the error and to provide against its recurrence in the future, it was ordained by Pope Gregory XIII. that ten days should be suppressed, and that the number of intercalations in every 400 years should be reduced by three. The Gregorian Calendar was adopted in every country in Christendom, including Scotland, but excepting England and the countries in which the Orthodox or Greek Church was recognised. The consequence was that during the seventeenth century and the first half of the eighteenth there was an entire want of harmony between the system prevailing in England and that prevailing in the greater part of Europe. From the date when the Gregorian Calendar was introduced there was a difference of ten days between an English and a Continental almanac, and that difference was increased to eleven days when the eighteenth century began. The legislation of 1750, having for its object the assimilation of the English calendar to the calendar recognised in other parts of Europe, necessarily followed the lines of the Gregorian reform. The English calendar is now the Gregorian Calendar. The ecclesiastical year still begins on the 25th March; see R. v. Swyer (1830), 10 B. & C. 486, 488, note (a). All feast days, whether movable or fixed, are dated according to the new style (Calendar (New Style) Act, 1750 (24 Geo. 2, c. 23), s. 3; compare Calendar Act, 1751 (25 Geo. 2, c. 30), s. 2). As to when references to feast days in tenancy agreements are to be construed according to the old style, see title LANDLORD AND TENANT, Vol. XVIII., pp. 446, note (i), 471, note (i). By the Michaelmas Term Act, 1750 (24 Geo. 2, c. 48), the day for the swearing and admission of the Lord Mayor of London was changed from the 29th October to the 9th November.

(c) R. v. Worminghall (Inhabitants) (1817), 6 M. & S. 350 (where service beginning on the 13th October in the year before leap year and ending on the 11th October next succeeding was held not to be a service for one year, though it had lasted for 365 days). According to the Roman theory regarding the intercalated day, the anniversary of the birthday of a child born in leap year on the 24th or 25th February would in a common year fall on the 24th February, and so St. Matthias' Day is, in the Church of Rome, still kept in leap year on the 25th, not as in common years on the 24th February. The calendar in this respect was altered on the revision of the Prayer Book in 1662. The Statute De Anno Bisextili (1256), 40 Hen. 3 (21 Hen. 3 in Ruffhead), whereby the Roman theory of intercalation was adopted, was repealed by the Civil Procedure Acts Repeal Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 59).

Conventional Years.Financial year.SECT. 3.—The Financial and Other Conventional Years.

855. The term "year," besides noting the solar year of the calendar, may also mean any like period of time running from a date arbitrarily fixed by statute, contract, or otherwise.

For all matters connected with the public revenue the year means the twelve calendar months ending on the 31st March. That is the meaning of the term "financial year" when used in any Act of Parliament passed after the year 1889, with reference to the Consolidated Fund, or money provided by Parliament, or to the Exchequer or to Imperial taxes or finance (d).

It is with reference to the year so computed that the public accounts are made up, the budget is prepared, and the supplies are voted (e).

The same year ending with the 31st March is fixed as the local financial year (f).

For the purposes of assessment to income tax or the inhabited house duty in England, the year is defined as running from the 6th April to the following 5th April (g).

Savings bank

856. A "savings bank year" means, in the case of a trustee savings bank, the twelve months ending on the 20th November, and,

(e) The 31st March is the date fixed by the Public Revenue and Consolidated Fund Charges Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 94), s. 2, as the date up to which the annual finance accounts should be made. The history of the financial year before that time is as follows. From the earliest times on record the yearly accounts of public receipt and expenditure were made up to Michaelmas. The financial year ended on the 29th September till the year 1752, when, in consequence of the change of style, the 10th October was substituted; the other quarter days were the 5th January, the 5th April, and the 5th July. Just before the end of the eighteenth century a change was introduced with the view of establishing a uniform system with regard to the several branches of revenue and expenditure. It was then arranged that the year should end with the 5th January, and the first annual accounts on that system were for the year which ended on the 5th January, 1801. That is the date fixed by stat. (1802) 42 Geo. 3, c. 70 (now repealed). In 1832 another change was made, for, whereas previously the budget had been made up for the year ending 5th January, Lord Althorp presented his budget for the year ending 5th April, 1833, and at the same time supplies were taken up to the 31st March, 1833. There were thus three different terminations to the financial year, the 5th April, the 31st March, and the 5th January, which, being fixed by statute for the purpose of the financial accounts, could not be altered without legislation.⁵ This anomalous state of things was terminated by the Public Revenue and Consolidated Fund Charges Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 94), and thenceforward the financial year has uniformly terminated on the 31st March; see Parliamentary Papers on Public Income and Expenditure, printed by order of the House of Commons, 29th July, 1869, Part II., Appendix 13. As to the granting of supply, see title PARLIAMENT, Vol. XXI., pp. 768 et seq.

The year for land tax assessments runs from 25th March (Taxes Management Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 19), s. 48); see title LAND TAX, Vol. XVIII., p. 315.

in the case of the Post Office savings bank, the like period ending on the 31st December (l).

857. For the purposes of the Education Acts (i) a "school year" is defined as the period for which an annual parliamentary grant is paid or payable (k).

858. By the terms of a contract any date may be fixed for the beginning of a year, and, in the absence of any express definition of the term, it may appear from the contract that a period beginning or not beginning on the 1st January, as the case may be, was intended (l).

859. The term may even be used to denote a season or part of a year (m).

The expression "in any one year" or "in each year" may refer to the calendar year or to any period of twelve calendar months, according to the context in which the expression is used (n).

(l) Contracts of hiring are frequently made from a quarter day to the corresponding day of the next year; a hiring from one Whit Sunday to the next, though Whit Sunday is a movable feast and so the period may be less than 365 days, is deemed a hiring for a year (R. v. Newstead (Inhabitants) (1770), Burr. S. C. 669); but a hiring from Monday after Michaelmas, which fell on a Saturday, till next Michaelmas Day, was held not to be a hiring for a year (*R. v. (m) Grant v. Maddox (1846), 15 M. & W. 737 (where, in regard to an agreement to perform in a theatre for three years, evidence was admitted to show that "year" meant the season in which the theatre was open); R. v. Swyer (1830), 10 B. & C. 486 (where the three years mentioned in a charter were held to mean the three terms during which three successive mayors might hold office); and see titles CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 511; THEATRES AND OTHER PLACES OF PUBLIC ENTERTAINMENT, p. 413, ante.

Kirwood* (1853), 2 E. & B. 771 (Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 120, defining a year as the period ending on the 31st December); compare title ECCLESIASTICAL LAW, Vol. XI., pp. 430, 431. On the other hand, where a director was to receive a certain sum by way of remuneration "in each year" (Salton v. New Beeston Cycle Co., [1899] 1 Ch. 775), or where, under the Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89) (now repealed), a general meeting was to be held once at least in every year, it was held that a calendar year was contemplated (Gibson v. Burton (1875), L. R. 10 Q. B. 329); compare title COMPANIES, Vol. V., p. 249. A bequest to servants of a year's wages does not include those whose wages were paid by the week or month (Re Ravensworth, Ravensworth v. Tindale, [1905] 2 Ch. 1, 4, C. A.; *Blackwell v. reference is made to them in statutes as measures of time (o). Instead of terms there are now four sittings of the Court of Appeal and of the High Court in London and Middlesex (p)—the first, Michaelmas sitting, beginning on the 12th October and ending on the 21st December; the second, Hilary sitting, beginning on the 11th January and ending on the Wednesday before Easter; the third, Easter sitting, beginning on the Tuesday after Easter week and ending on the Friday before Whit Sunday; and the fourth, Trinity sitting, beginning on the Tuesday after Whitsun week and ending on the 31st July (q).

Vacations.

The vacations are likewise four in number—the Long Vacation, beginning on the 1st August and ending on the 11th October; the Christmas Vacation, beginning on the 24th December and ending on the 6th January; the Easter Vacation, beginning on Good Friday and ending on Easter Tuesday; and the Whitsun Vacation, beginning on the Saturday before Whit Sunday and ending on the Tuesday after Whit Sunday (r).

The days above mentioned are included in the several sittings and vacations respectively (s).

Offices open.

The offices of the Supreme Court are open throughout the year except on Sundays, Good Friday, Easter Eve, Monday and Tuesday in Easter week, Whit Monday, the first Monday in August, Christmas Day and the next working day, and all days appointed to be kept as days of general fast, humiliation or thanksgiving, and the King's birthday (t).

That rule was saved by the proviso to the Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 26, and the time could not be extended until special provision was made for the case in *R. S. Cambridge.

In the University of Cambridge there are three terms, containing at least 227 days, that is to say, Michaelmas Term, beginning on the 1st October; Lent Term, beginning on the 8th January and ending not later than the Thursday before Easter; and the Easter Term, which may begin on the Tuesday after Easter or a later day, and ends on the 24th June (v).

SECT. 5.—Quarters and Quarter Days.

862. For some purposes, and especially in the relations of landlord and tenant, the year is divided into four quarters, the four usual quarter days being the four feast days—Lady Day (25th March), Midsummer Day (24th June), Michaelmas Day (29th September), and Christmas Day (25th December) (w).

Mode of division.

The half-quarter days are the 2nd February, the 9th May, the 11th August, and Martinmas, the 11th November.

SECT. 6.—Month.

863. The term “month” is used in several senses. It may mean one of the twelve unequal parts into which the calendar year is divided; it may mean the period which, beginning on any day of a calendar month other than the first, ends on the day next before the corresponding day of the next month; or it may denote a lunar month, that is to say, a period consisting of twenty-eight days.

Lunar and
months.

A six months’ tenancy may mean a tenancy for 168 days or a tenancy for half a year or 182 days (a).

As a general rule, and in the absence of anything to indicate an intention to the contrary, where the term “month” is used in a contract or in a statute enacted before the year 1850, it is taken to mean a lunar month (b). The question whether it was intended to use the word in another sense must be decided according to the ordinary rules of construction; it may be shown that in a particular

 London.

864. An exception from the general rule obtains in regard to mercantile transactions in the City of London; according to the custom there prevailing a month is in such transaction deemed to be a calendar month (d).

Ecclesiastical usage.

865. In ecclesiastical matters the general rule in favour of the lunar month does not prevail. Primarily the computation has to be made according to the calendar, and thus a six months' notice is taken to mean six calendar months (e).

Statutory meaning.

866. In the construction of statutes, the presumption in favour of the lunar month is reversed, it being provided by statute that, unless the contrary intention appears, the term "month" used in every statute after the year 1850 is to mean calendar month (f).

In several other statutes similar provision has been made with regard to the construction to be put on the term for the purposes showing a contrary intention, so many lunar months' notice (Rogers v. Kingston-on-Hull Dock Co. (1864), 11 L. T. 42). In R. v. Chawton (Inhabitants) (1841), 1 Q. B. 247, the lease being given for six months and so on from six months to six months until either party should give six calendar months' notice, it was held that the context showed that the lease was intended to be for calendar months. In Lung v. Gale (1813), 1 M. & S. 111, from the conditions of sale it appeared that calendar months were intended. Calendar months were taken to be intended in Biddulph v. St. John and Keffe (1805), 2 Sch. & Lef. 521; Dowling v. Foxall (1809), 1 Ball & B. 193; Hipwell v. Knight (1835), 1 Y. & C. (Ex.) 401, 419. On the other hand, the general rule in favour of lunar months was upheld in Simpson v. Margitson (1847), 11 Q. B. 23 (action by agent for commission claimed in respect of sale of land); Crooke v. M'Tavish (1828), 1 Bing. 307 (construction of a statute); Tullet v. Linfield (1764), 3 Burr. 1455 (the expression "a month to plead"); Walcot v. Botfield (1854), 2 Eq. Barlow* (1863), 3 F. & F. 946 (where the contract related to work to be done by the defendant as an engraver, and it was held that the transaction was not a mercantile one, and that accordingly the general rule applied). The exception does not extend to commercial documents elsewhere than in the City (Bruner v. Moore, supra). In Webb v. Fairmaner (1838), 3 M. & W. 473, commented on in Simpson v. Margitson (1847), 11 Q. B. 23, it was apparently assumed that calendar months were intended; see Re an Indenture etc., Marshall (Sir Herbert) & Sons, Ltd. v. Brinsmead (John) & Sons, Ltd. (1912), 106 L. T. 460; see also titles CUSTOM AND USAGES, Vol. X., p. 265; DEEDS AND OTHER INSTRUMENTS, Vol. X., p. 437.

867. When the period prescribed is a calendar month running from any arbitrary date, and not coinciding with any particular month in the calendar, the period cannot exceed in length the number of days in the month in which it starts; and where the second of the two months in which the period falls is a month containing fewer days than those contained in the first month, the number of days in the period may be less than that of those in the first month (i). Such a period can never extend into a third month (j). Calendar month.

SECT. 7.—Week.

868. A week is properly the time between midnight on Saturday and the same hour on the next succeeding Saturday, but the term is also applied to any period of seven successive days (k). Different meanings.

Subject to certain exceptions, the general rule is that, when an act may be done or a benefit enjoyed during a certain period, the act may be done or the benefit enjoyed up to the last moment of the last day of that period. Hence, a notice required to be given within so many days from or before a given date must be at the latest given on the last of such days (c). Similarly, when an act may be done only on the expiration of a given period, it cannot be done at any time before midnight of the last day (d).

see title SHIPPING AND NAVIGATION, Vol. XXVI., pp. 122, 123. As to fractions of a day, see p. 454, post.

(a) In Cornfoot v. Royal Exchange Assurance Association, [1904] 1 K. B. 40, C. A., the question was whether the policy of insurance on a ship for thirty days after arrival in port covered an accident which occurred in the afternoon of the 1st September, the ship having arrived on the 2nd August; and it was held that, as it could not have been meant that the ship should remain uninsured during the first twenty-four hours, it must have been intended that the period should run from the moment of the arrival till the corresponding moment of the thirtieth day; see also Mercantile Marine Insurance Co. v. Titherington (1864), 5 B. & S. 765; Yeoman v. R., [1904] 2 K. B. 429, C. A. (charterparty). On the other hand, in The Katy, [1895] P. 56, C. A., where fourteen running days (Sundays and holidays excluded) were allowed for loading and unloading, and the ship arrived in her port of discharge and was cleared by 10 a.m. on Saturday, it was held that the intention was to give the charterer so many entire days, and that therefore he was not bound to begin the discharge or count the lay days till the Monday. In the Unemployment Insurance Regulations, reg. 2, the term "day" means "any period of twenty-four hours but does not include any part of a day being a Sunday, except in relation to a workman who when in employment is employed on Sundays" ([1912] W. N., Part II., 194); see title WORK AND LABOUR. As to the meaning of "clear" days, see pp. 448, 449, post.

(b) For the purpose of distress the day ends with sunset, and any distraint of goods after sunset and before sunrise is illegal (Tulton v. Darke, Nizon v. Freeman (1860), 5 H. & N. 647); see title DISTRESS, Vol. XI., p. 149. So also for the purpose of the Night Poaching Act, 1828 (9 Geo. 4, c. 69), s. 12, and the Game Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32), s. 34, the definition of night being the complement of the definition of day; in the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), night is similarly defined; see titles CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 668; GAME, Vol. XV., p. 233, note (t). For the purposes of the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), night is deemed to commence at 9 p.m. and to end at 6 a.m. of the ensuing day. By the South Metropolitan Gaslight and Coke Co.'s Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. cxxx.), a day is defined as running from 9 a.m.; see London County Council v. South Metropolitan Gas Co., [1904] 1 Ch. 76, C. A. In the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 72), s. 9, and the Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), s. 141, "day" is defined as the period between 6 a.m. and 9 p.m.

(c) Elliott v. Popular Playhouses, Ltd. (1909), Times, 1st April; Chambon v. Heighway (1890), 54 J. P. 520; Steedman v. Hakim (1888), 22 Q. B. D. 16, C. A.

(d) Page v. More (1851), 15 Q. B. 684. For instance, when seven days' notice to quit is required in order to determine a tenancy, a notice given on Monday, although given before noon, requiring the tenant to quit on the next Monday at noon is not good (Weston v. Fidler (1903), 47 Sol. Jo. 587; and see title LANDLORD AND TENANT, Vol. XVIII., p. 447).

Thus, the rule that twenty-one days' residence in a parish shall be required before an irregular Scottish marriage can be solemnised (e) is not satisfied by a residence which begins on the early morning of the first of the month and ends on the 21st day of the same month at noon (f).

SECT. 8.
Day.

SECT. 9.—Hour.

871. An hour may mean any one of the twenty-four parts of a day or any period of sixty minutes. Different meanings.

872. Apart from statute or special convention, the hour of the day has to be ascertained by reference to the sun in the particular place. At a given moment, therefore, the time is different in different places. The hour at which a court is fixed to sit means prima facie the hour at the locality where the particular court is to sit, and not Greenwich time (g). Local time.

873. For the purpose of statutes, deeds or other legal instruments, it is provided by statute that expressions referring to time shall, unless the contrary is expressed, be taken to refer to Greenwich and not to local time (h). Regard must be had to this enactment in applying the numerous statutes (i) in which certain hours of the day are specified within which acts may or may not be done. It is apprehended that Greenwich, and not local, time must be considered in fixing the hour or day of an event with regard to which provision is made in an instrument such as a policy of insurance, and that on the other hand the statutory rule should not be applied in a case where the instrument was executed or the event was expected to happen or did happen in a foreign country. Greenwich time.

874. It has been held that "sunset" is not an expression referring to time within the meaning of the enactment in question (k). Sunset.

(h) Statutes (Definition of Time) Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 9).

(i) As, for instance, Employment of Children Act, 1903 (3 Edw. 7, c. 45); Factory and Workshop Acts, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 22), and 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 39); Marriage Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 14); Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910 (10 Edw. 7 & 1 Geo. 5, c. 24); see titles INFANTS AND CHILDREN, Vol. XVII., pp. 150 et seq.; FACTORIES AND WORKSHOPS, Vol. XIV., pp. 433 et seq.; HUSBAND AND WIFE, Vol. XVI., p. 302; INTOXICATING LIQUORS, Vol. XVIII., p. 89.

T. 20 (where the obligation imposed by the Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 85, to light a carriage used on the road an hour after sunset was in question, and it was held that regard must be had to the actual hour of sunset at the particular place); compare Curtis v. March (1858), 3 H. & N. 866 (Night Poaching Act, 1828 (9 Geo. 4, c. 69)).

Part II.—Holidays.

SECT. 1.

Holidays at Common Law and by Statute.

Meaning of "holiday."

SECT. 1.—Holidays at Common Law and by Statute.

875. The term "holidays" used in the larger sense includes the common law holidays, Sundays, Good Friday, and Christmas Day, and the statutory holidays, of which the chief are those established by the Bank Holidays Act, 1871 (l), and the Holidays Extension Act, 1875 (m), and by statutes and rules relating to legal procedure (n).

The following days, apart from the common law holidays, are appointed to be kept in all banks and custom houses, bonding warehouses, and docks as close holidays :—

Easter Monday.

The Monday in Whitsun week.

The first Monday in August.

The 26th day of December, if not a Sunday, and when the 26th of December falls on a Sunday the 27th of December.

Power is also given to appoint by royal proclamation as a bank holiday any day which may be appointed as a day of public fast or thanksgiving (o).

SECT. 2.—Sundays.

SUB-SECT. 1.—General Rule as to Observance of Sunday.

Acts done on Sunday.

876. Sunday is dies non juridicus, a day on which no judicial act ought to be done (a).

Generally, however, the common law does not prohibit the doing on a Sunday of any act which otherwise is lawful or render void the act so done (b).

(l) 34 & 35 Vict. c. 17.

(n) As to holidays in the Royal Courts of Justice, see p. 436, ante.

(o) Bank Holidays Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 17); Holidays Extension Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 13). In the Shops Act, 1912 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 3), s. 19, "bank holiday" is used as including any public holiday or day of public rejoicing or mourning. As to compulsory holidays in factories and workshops, see title FACTORIES AND SHOPS, Vol. XIV., pp. 496, 507, 508; as to the effect of holidays on the computation of weekly earnings under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 58), see title MASTER AND SERVANT, Vol. XX., p. 206.

(a) Ashmole v. Goodwin (1699), 2 Salk. 624; Mackalley's Case (1611), 9 Co. Rep. 65 b, 66 b (where an inquisition was held bad on its appearing that the inquest was held on Sunday). Ministerial acts may be lawfully executed on the Sunday (ibid.); see title MAGISTRATES, Vol. XIX., p. 635; and compare title DISTRESS, Vol. XI. p. 149. Subject to the provisions of the Sunday Observance Act, 1677 (29 Car. 2, c. 7), this is still the law. A writ of summons dated on a Sunday is a nullity, and the court takes notice of the fact that it was dated on that day (Hanson v. Shackleton (1835), 4 Dowl. 48 (citing the following passage from Shepherd's Abridgment, Vol. III., p. 181 :—"If any part of the proceedings in a suit of law be entered and recorded to be done on Sunday, it makes the whole void"); Taylor v. Phillips (1802), 3 East, 155). The taking of sureties and commitment to prison in default are judicial acts which cannot be done on Sunday (R. v. Ramsay (1867), 16 W. R. 191; Taylor v. Phillips, supra); see title PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE, Vol. XXIII., p. 115.

(b) Drury v. Defontaine (1808), 1 Taunt. 131; Begbie v. Levi (1830), 877. The exercise on Sunday by tradesmen, artificers, workmen, labourers, or others of their ordinary calling is, subject to certain exceptions (c), prohibited by statute (d). The effect of the statute is to render unenforceable by the tradesman or other person any contract made by him on a Sunday in the ordinary course of his business (e), whether the same be made in public or not. The workman who has contracted to do and has done work on a Sunday can claim no lien for his remuneration in respect of it (f). Such a contract is, however, enforceable by the other party to it when it appears that he was ignorant that the person with whom he dealt was a tradesman acting in the ordinary exercise of his calling (g).

SECT. 2.
Sundays.
Statutory prohibition.

878. The statute has received a strict interpretation, and the expression "or others" has been construed in accordance with the ejusdem generis rule. A person who does not carry on the business of buying and selling things is not a tradesman; a man who does not make anything is not an artificer; a man who is not employed to work for another is not a workman or labourer within the

of the statute.

(c) See p. 444, post.

(d) Sunday Observance Act, 1677 (29 Car. 2, c. 7). The penalty is 5s. for each offence, and forfeiture of any goods exposed for sale (ibid., s. 1); in default of distress the offender is to be set in the stocks for two hours (ibid., s. 2; see R. v. Barton (1849), 13 Q. B. 389); quare, whether repealed by Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 43), s. 3). Only one penalty can be incurred on the same day (Orepps v. Durdan (1777), 2 Cowp. 640; 1 Smith, L. C., 11th ed., p. 651); see also Connor v. Quest (1906), 96 L. T. 28; Billingham v. Menhinick (1909), 73 J. P. 384. Proceedings must be taken within ten days after the commission of the offence (Sunday Observance Act, 1677 (29 Car. 2, c. 7), s. 4). The consent in writing of the chief officer of the police district in which the offence was committed, or of two justices or of a stipendiary magistrate having jurisdiction in the place where the offence was committed, must also be obtained: the justices or stipendiary magistrate signing the consent cannot adjudicate (Sunday Observation Prosecution Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 87), s. 1); see title MAGISTRATES, Vol., XIX., p. 590. As to the prohibition in specific cases, see titles FACTORIES AND SHOPS, Vol. XIV., p. 490; FOOD AND DRUGS, Vol. XV., pp. 46, 47; INTOXICATING LIQUORS, Vol. XVIII., pp. 87 et seq.; THEATRES AND OTHER PLACES OF ENTERTAINMENT, pp. 422 et seq., ante.

(e) Fennell v. Ridler (1826), 5 B. & C. 406; Smith v. Sparrow (1827), 4 Bing. 84. On the other hand, a contract made on a Sunday is valid if in making it the party is not acting in the ordinary course of his business (Drury v. Defontaine (1808), 1 Taunt. 131, 135 (sale of goods); R. v. Whitnash (Inhabitants) (1827), 7 B. & C. 596 (hire of services); Peate v. Dioken (1834), 1 Cr. Powell* (1842), 4 Man. & G. 42 (tradesman giving a guarantee to another tradesman on behalf of a traveller); see title MASTER AND SERVANT, Vol. XX., p. 90; and compare title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 402, 403.

(f) Scarfe v. Morgan, supra; see title LIEN, Vol. XIX., p. 4.

Sparrow*, supra; Beaumont v. Brengeri (1847), 5 C. B. 301; as to the liability of a person who has bought a thing on Sunday and kept it, see Williams v. Paul (1830),

SECT. 2. statute; accordingly a farmer (h), or a solicitor (i), or a barber (j), Sundays. or the driver of a stage-coach (k), or a soldier engaged in enlisting — men for the army (l), does not come within the statute (m).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Work Permitted on Sundays for Public Convenience.

Works of necessity.

879. The statutory prohibition does not apply to works of necessity and charity, to the preparation of food for such persons as otherwise cannot be provided for, and to the selling of milk before 9 a.m. and after 4 p.m. (n).

Public⁶
 convenience.

Express provision is also made in several statutes for cases in which public convenience requires that work shall be done on Sunday.
 These include the statutes relating to bread (o), hackney carriages (p), the supply of water (q) and gas (r) in the Metropolis, railways (s), drugs (t), and intoxicating liquors (u).

Observance of Sundays
and Holidays in Regard to Particular Matters.

880. The following are the principal instances in which acts which are otherwise lawful are prohibited by statute on Sundays or other holidays (w):—

The assembly of persons for sport out of their own parishes on the Lord's Day, as well as bull-baiting or other unlawful pastimes practised by persons within their parishes, is prohibited (a).

Carriers and drovers are forbidden to ply their trade (b) and butchers to kill or sell meat on Sunday (c).

Service of any writ or process (d) is prohibited on a Sunday, Good Friday or Christmas Day (e), except in the case of arrest for indictable offences (f); but ordinarily the service of a notice is not rendered void by its being effected on a Sunday (g).

No meeting of any corporation, ecclesiastical or civil, or any

acts.

public company may be held on Sunday, and every matter transacted at such a meeting is void (h).

The sale of methylated spirits between 10 p.m. on Saturday and 8 a.m. on the following Monday is prohibited (i).

Part III.—Computation of Time.

SECT. 1.—In General.

Days included or excluded.

881. When a period of time running from a given day or event to another day or event is prescribed by law or fixed by contract, and the question arises whether the computation is to be made inclusively or exclusively of the first-mentioned or of the last-mentioned day, regard must be had to the context and to the purposes for which the computation has to be made (k). Where there is room for doubt, the enactment or instrument ought to be so construed as to effectuate and not to defeat the intention of Parliament or of the parties, as the case may be (l). Expressions such as “from such a day” or “until such a day” are equivocal, since they do not make it clear whether the inclusion or the exclusion of the day named may be intended (m). As a general rule, however, the effect of defining a period in such a manner is to exclude the first day and to include the last day (n).

SECT. 2.—Period Fixed for Duration of Interest or Benefit.

benefit.

availing for a certain period, the rule is that prima facie the day of the date of the instrument (o) being the date on which it was delivered or issued, or the day on which the deed is delivered (a), is included in the term (b).

SECT. 2.
Period
Fixed for Duration of Interest or Benefit.

From the context, however, it may appear that the anniversary of the initial day, and not the initial day itself, was intended to be included (c). An indication to this effect is afforded by a provision in a lease that rent is to be paid on the usual quarter days, since it is presumed that rent is intended to be paid during the continuance of the term (d).

883. In the case of a tenancy terminable by notice the day to be specified in the notice to quit given by a landlord must depend on the method of computation adopted. According as the day from which a tenancy from year to year has to run is included or excluded in the year, so the day before the anniversary of that day or the anniversary of that day is the last day of the tenancy (e).

885. In the same way the period of twenty-one years from the testator's death during which the will directs that the income of property passing under it shall be accumulated includes the whole of the anniversary of the date of death (g).

SECT. 3.—Period on Expiration of which an Act may be Done.

886. When a period is fixed before the expiration of which an act may not be done the person for whose benefit the delay is prescribed has the benefit of the entire period, and accordingly in computing it the day from which it runs as well as the day on which action is taken against him must be excluded (h).

On the other hand, in computing the ten days required for the notice of an appeal to the sessions, it has been held that, while the day of service should be excluded, the first day of the sessions should be included (i).

On the other hand, in Re Starkey, Ex parte Farquhar (1826), Mont. & M. 7, it was held that in counting the two months between the day on which a mortgage was executed and that on which a commission in bankruptcy issued, the former day should be included; see also R. v. Shropshire Justices (1838), 8 Ad. & El. 173, 175; Mitchell v. Foster (1840), 12 Ad. & El. 472; *Young v. B. 212 (order giving leave to proceed on expiration of three days after service; the only point decided was that the first day should be excluded). Where justices, on an information laid at special sessions under statute, have made an order for payment of money by parties who had notice of such intended information, the time for appealing against the order runs from the date of the order, not from the date of service (R. v. Derbyshire Justices (1845), 7 Q. B. 193); compare title MAGISTRATES, Vol. XIX., pp. 643 et seq.

the intention to exclude both days and to give the person affected a clear interval of time between the two is put beyond all doubt by the insertion of words such as "clear days" or so many days "at least" (n).

SECT. 3.
Period on Expiration of which an Act may be Done.

SECT. 4.—Period within which an Act must be Done.

888. The general rule in cases in which a period is fixed within which a person must act or take the consequences is that the day of the act or event from which the period runs should not be counted against him. This rule is especially reasonable in the case in which that person is not necessarily cognisant of the act or event (o); and further in support of it there is the consideration that, in case the period allowed was one day only, the consequence of including that day would be to reduce to a few hours or minutes the time within which the person affected should take action (p).

Exclusion of first day.

889. In view of these considerations the general rule is that, as well in cases where the limitation of time is imposed by the act of a party as in those where it is imposed by statute, the day from which the time begins to run is excluded; thus, where a period is fixed within which a criminal prosecution or a civil action may be commenced, the day on which the offence is committed or the cause of action arises is excluded in the computation (q), and many other instances may be cited (r). In particular, the rule of excluding the day from which the period runs has been applied in construing the statutory provision whereby the fact that goods seized by the sheriff are allowed to remain in his hands for twenty-one days constitutes an act of bankruptcy on the part of the owner, the date of the seizure being omitted in the computation (s).

890. Where a period is fixed by contract within which work is to be done or goods delivered, the day from which the period is made to run is generally excluded, and therefore the corresponding day at the end of the period is included (a).

891. Similarly, where a testator has by his will imposed on a person who is to take a benefit under it the performance of some condition within a limited time, the day of the testator's death is not included in the computation (b).

892. In computing the period of a year and a day with reference to a charge of murder, it is clearly established that the day on which the hurt was done should be included (c).

893. The fact that the last day of a prescribed period is a Sunday or other holiday does not generally give the person who is called upon to act an extra day; it is no excuse for his omission to do the act on some prior day (d).

SECT. 4.
Period within which an Act must be Done.

894. The general rule does not hold good where the effect of it would be to render performance of the act impossible. This would be the case if it happened that the whole period during which the act could be done consisted of holidays, in which case the act may lawfully be done on the next possible day (e).

Sundays and holidays.
Exceptions to general rule.

Again, the general rule does not hold good where the last day is a Sunday and the act to be done is one the performance of which on a Sunday is prohibited by the Sunday Observance Act, 1677 (f), or where the act to be done has to be done, not by the party only, but by the court or by the party in conjunction with the court. In such cases the act may, when the last day limited for the performance of it happens to be a day when the court or its office is closed, be done on the next practicable day (g).

895. By various Acts of Parliament and statutory rules provision is made for cases in which the day or the last day on which an act may be done falls on a Sunday or other holiday and for the exclusion of such days in the computation of prescribed periods.

Special
provisions.

When the day prescribed for the meeting of a corporation or public company happens to be a Sunday, it is provided that the cases in which the rule of a year and a day prevailed are mentioned in Constable's (Sir Henry) Case (1602), 5 Co. Rep. 106 a, 107 b; see also 1 Hawk. P. C. 162.

S.) 264; Ex parte Simpkin (1859), 2 E. & E. 392; Déchéne v. Montreal City, [1894] A. C. 640, P. C. In all these cases the period limited for the doing of an act by one of the parties to a legal proceeding expired on a Sunday or other nonjuridical day, and it was held that the doing of the act could not be postponed till the next day; compare title COUNTY COURTS, Vol. VIII., p. 620. In Child v. Edwards, [1909] 2 K. B. 753, it was held that distress levied on Monday in respect of rent which fell due on the preceding Sunday was lawfully levied; see titles DISTRESS, Vol. XI., pp. 123, 149; LANDLORD AND TENANT, Vol. XVIII., p. 471, note (p).

Corporations and public companies.	In the case of a municipal corporation, however, and other local authorities, it is provided that when any act or proceeding is directed to be done or taken on a certain day and that day happens to be a Sunday, Christmas Day, or Good Friday, or Monday or Tuesday in Easter week, or a day appointed for public fast, humiliation, or thanksgiving, the act or proceeding may be done or taken on the next day, not being one of those days, and provision is also made for cases in which the last day of a limited time allowed happens to be one of the days specified (i).
Bills of exchange.	A bill of exchange which falls due on a bank holiday (not a common law holiday) or on a Sunday preceding a bank holiday becomes payable on the next succeeding business day (j).
Offices of Royal Courts of Justice.	When the time limited for any act which is affected by the offices of the Royal Courts of Justice being closed expires on Sunday or on any other day when the offices are closed, and by reason thereof such act cannot be done on such day, the act must be done on the next day on which the offices are open (k), and provision to the same effect is made as regards bankruptcy matters (l).

The rule was the same at common law: the foundation of the custom on which it rested was that on Sundays men could not be expected to attend to their business (Wright v. Shawcross (1819), 2 B. & Ald. 501, n.).

(k) R. S. C., Ord. 64, r. 3. The rule does not affect the operation of the Statute of Limitations (Morris v. Richards (1881), 45 L. T. 210; Gelmini v. Moriggia, [1913] 2 K. B. 549); nor does it apply to acts not affected by the offices being closed (E. v. Lambert, Ex parte Saffery (1877), 5 Ch. D. 365, C. A.; Chambon v. Heighway (1890), 54 J. P. 520). When the last day for moving for appeal from an order in chambers to a divisional court under R. S. C., Ord. 54, r. 24, is a Sunday, notice of motion should be given for the following day (Taylor v. Jones (1875), 34 L. T. 131). Sundays and holidays are not to be reckoned in computing any time less than six days limited for doing any act (R. S. C., Ord. 64, r. 2); see Re Yeoland Consols, Ltd. (1888), 58 L. T. 108 (time for filing an affidavit in support of petition to wind up a company). As to the former practice, see *Morris v. next preceding (m). Sundays do not count in calculating the days during which a casual pauper may be detained (n).

SECT. 5.—Computation of Period when Holidays Intervene.

896. Where a period is fixed within which some act must be done, Sundays and holidays in general count like other days (o), and it makes no difference that the last day of the period falls on a Sunday (p).

In a charterparty or other contract in which it is stipulated that a thing shall be done in so many days, consecutive days are intended, and holidays or non-working days are not excluded unless there is something in the context to show that working days only were to be included (q).

897. In the Parliamentary Elections Act, 1868 (r), and the Ballot Act, 1872 (s), provision is made to the effect that Sunday, Christmas Day, Good Friday, and any day set apart for public fast or thanksgiving shall be excluded in reckoning any time for the purposes of those Acts (t).

The term "daily" as applied to inspection by gas examiners in the Metropolis includes Sundays (u).

In assessing compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (v), due allowance is to be made for holidays embraced within the period on which the assessment is based (w).

SECT. 6.—Fractions of Divisions of Time.

898. In computing a period of time, at any rate when counted in years or months, no regard is, as a general rule, paid to fractions of a day, in this sense, that the period is regarded as complete although it is short to the extent of a fraction of a day (a). In cases in which the day of the date of an instrument of lease is included in the term it is immaterial that the tenant's enjoyment cannot begin with the beginning of that day (b). Similarly, in calculating a person's age the day of his birth counts as a whole day; and he comes of age on the midnight of the day next before the anniversary of his birthday (c).

In contracts where payment has to be made at a certain rate per diem a part of a day counts as a whole day, unless it appears from the context that the contrary was intended (d). Where it is stipulated that money shall be paid at a given hour, the whole period between that hour and the next hour is intended; the hour is considered as the twenty-fourth aliquot part of the day (e).

Priorities.

899. When conflicting claims depend on the question which of two events was first in order of time the particular hour when the events occurred may become material. On the same day rival claimants may have been born; on the same day execution may have been issued and the judgment debtor may have died (f) or committed an act of bankruptcy (g); on the same day two deeds may have been registered in the Middlesex Registry (h): in all these cases the rights of the parties have to be determined by the ascertainment of the particular moments of the same day at which the several events happened (i). The same principle applies where two writs in the same matter are issued against the same defendant on the same day, for the issuing of an original writ is an act of the party and not a judicial act, and therefore the doctrine according to which it is assumed that a judicial act is dated from the earliest moment of the day on which it is done has no application (k).

SECT. 6.
Fractions of Divisions of Time.

If on one and the same day an award is made and signed and a rule nisi obtained calling upon the arbitrator to show cause why a case for the opinion of the court should not be stated, it becomes necessary to discuss the question which of the two events occurred first, for the court has no jurisdiction to grant the rule nisi if previously thereto the award has been signed (l).

If on the same day a debt becomes payable and the creditor dies, it is presumed that the death took place after the debt should have been paid, so that the Statute of Limitations (m) will not run until letters of administration are taken out; but evidence is admissible to prove at what hour the creditor died (n).

SECT. 7.—Special Rules affecting Executive and Judicial Acts.

900. An exceptional rule prevails in regard to acts done on behalf of the Crown and judicial acts. When the title of the Crown and of a subject accrue on the same day the title of the Crown prevails (o). A writ of extent issued in respect of a Crown debt takes precedence of execution issued on the same day at the instance of a subject although the latter is issued at an earlier hour (p). Similarly with judicial acts, it is a general, perhaps not a universal, rule that the act is taken to date from the earliest moment of the day on which it is done (q). The fact, therefore, that at some earlier hour on the same day something has been done or has happened which if it had been done or had happened on the previous day would have nullified the act is immaterial (r).

901. A judgment must be dated as of the day on which it was pronounced, but by special leave it may be ante-dated or post-dated (s).

902. Any Act of Parliament passed since the 1st January, 1890, and any rule or order made thereunder, is construed as coming into operation immediately on the expiration of the day previous to that on which it is expressed to come into operation (t).

SECT. 8.—Construction of Expressions Limiting Time.

"Reasonable time."

903. Where anything is limited to be done within a "reasonable time" or at a "reasonable hour," the question what is a reasonable time or reasonable hour must necessarily depend on the circumstances of the particular case, and is, therefore, a question of fact to be determined by a jury (a); when the question arises with reference to ascertained or admitted facts it is one of law (b).

"Immediately";
"forthwith."

904. There appears to be no material difference between the terms "immediately" and "forthwith." A provision to the effect that a thing must be done "forthwith" or "immediately" means that

At common law a judgment related back to the first day of the term, and it was said that the priority of one of two judgments signed on the same day could not be averred (Porchester (Lord) v. Petrie (1783), 3 Doug. (K. B.) 261; Pugh v. Robinson (1786), 1 Term Rep. 116).

(t) Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), s. 36 (2). At common law the rule was that, in the absence of provision to the contrary, every Act was deemed to have been in force from the first day of the session in which it was passed. By the Acts of Parliament (Commencement) Act, 1793 (33 Geo. 3, c. 13), it was enacted that, in the absence of provision to the contrary, every Act should be considered as commencing from the date indorsed on it as the date of its receiving the Royal Assent. It was held with regard to this Act that a statute took effect from the earliest moment of the day on which the Royal Assent was obtained, and that therefore it was immaterial that some fact with reference to which the statute was to be applied had taken place at an hour earlier than that on which the Assent was given (Tomlinson v. Bullock (1879), 4 Q. B. D. 230); see also titles PARLIAMENT, Vol. XXI., pp. 616, 722, 776; STATUTES, pp. 155, 156, ante.

it must be done as soon as possible in the circumstances, the nature of the act to be done being taken into account (c).

"Directly" means speedily, or at least "as soon as practicable" (d).

The word "peremptory" is often used in regard to judicial proceedings, as, for instance, a peremptory plea as distinguished from a plea in abatement, a peremptory order, a peremptory mandamus.

Mitford* (1673), 2 Lev. 75, 77, it was said that, although the word "immediately" in strictness excludes all mesne time, yet to make good the deeds and intents of parties it should be construed to mean such convenient time as is requisite for doing the thing; see Burgess v. Boelefeur (1844), 7 Man. & G. 481, 493. In E. v. Worcester Justices (1839), 7 Dowl. 789, a provision to enter recognisances forthwith after notice of appeal was in question; "forthwith" was said to be less strict than "immediately"; see E. v. Berkshire Justices (1878), 4 Q. B. D. 469; R. v. Aston (1850), 19 L. J. (M. C.) 236; Ex parte Lowe (1846), 3 Dow. & L. 737. In Thompson v. Gibson (1841), 8 M. & W. 281, and Grace v. Clinch (1843), 4 Q. B. 606, the same expression was used; compare Roberts v. Brett (1865), 11 H. L. Cas. 337. The certificate for a special jury, required by the Juries Act, 1825 (6 Geo. 4, c. 50), s. 34, to be given immediately after the verdict, must be applied for and given at the time, unless special circumstances prevented the certificate being made or applied for, or unless the judge expressly reserved his decision on the point, in which cases it should be applied for at the first reasonable opportunity (Barker v. Lewis and Peat, [1913] 3 K. B. 34, C. A., following Forsdike v. Stone (1868), L. R. 3 C. P. 607). In Costar v. Hetherington (1859), 1 E. & E. 802, the direction that justices on dismissing a complaint should forthwith give a certificate was held to mean forthwith on demand, and not forthwith on the dismissal. As to cases of contract, see Doe d. Pittman v. Sutton (1841), 9 C. & P. 706 (covenant to put premises in repair forthwith); Simpson v. Henderson (1829), Mood. & M. 300 (contract to take cargo on board a vessel forthwith); Roberts v. Brett, supra; Staunton v. Wood (1851), 16 Q. B. 638 (contract for delivery of goods "forthwith" and for payment in fourteen days: held that delivery should be made within fourteen days. "As soon as possible" in a manufacturing contract means within a reasonable time, regard being had to the manufacturer's ability to produce the goods and the orders he already has in hand (Attwood v. Emery (1856), 1 C. B. (N. S.) 110); see also title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 412. As to the time for delivery of goods, see title SALE OF GOODS, Vol. XXV., pp. 208 et seq.; as to the meaning of the word "on" in the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), s. 32, empowering the court to make an order for permanent maintenance "on" the decree, see Robertson v. Robertson (1883), 8 P. D. 94, C. A., per JESSEL, M.R., at p. 96, holding that "on," if not confined to the time of making the decree, must mean shortly after; as to the meaning of "instantly," see E. v. Brownlow (1839), 11 Ad. & El. 119, 127, where, however, the decision appears to turn on the facts of the particular case: as to the meaning of "with all possible despatch," see title SHIPPING AND NAVIGATION, Vol. XXVI., pp. 92 et seq.

Part I.—Nature and Classification of Torts.

SECT. 1.—Nature of Torts.

906. Tort is a term which is used to describe a wrong (a) or a breach of duty (b) committed by some person (c) which is legally

SECT. 1.

Nature of Torts.

Tort, a wrong or breach of duty.

(a) A breach of contract is also a legal wrong (Allen v. Flood, [1898] A. C. 1, per Lord WATSON, at p. 96). As to the distinction between actions of tort and actions of contract, see note (d), p. 464, post; and p. 466, post.

(b) An act of negligence constituting such a breach of duty may consist of misfeasance or nonfeasance (McClelland v. Manchester Corporation, [1912] 1 K. B. 118; Butler (or Black) v. Fife Coal Co., Ltd., [1912] A. C. 149; and see titles CARRIERS, Vol. IV., p. 46; NEGLIGENCE, Vol. XXI., pp. 375 et seq., 421); but mere non-performance of a duty imposed, or omission to exercise a power bestowed, by statute is not such a breach of a duty owed to the individual injured as to give him a cause of action, unless Parliament has used language indicating an intention to impose such a liability (Pictou Municipality v. Geldert, [1893] A. C. 524. P. C.; Saunders v. Holborn District Board of Works, [1895] 1 Q. B. 64; Maguire v. Liverpool Corporation, [1905] 1 K. B. 767, C. A.; and see pp. 481, 482, post).

(c) "Person" as here used includes every person recognised by the law as capable of owing a duty to some other person and therefore capable of committing a breach of such duty. It includes, therefore, not only single individuals and bodies corporate, but also all persons associated together for any purpose which may involve a duty to other persons. Thus, it may include public bodies and officials, companies, trade unions, and persons acting by means of or on behalf of other persons, provided that they are so associated that the duty owed or the act committed by duty of fellow-citizens one to the other.

wrongful (d) as regards some other person (e). An act which constitutes such a breach of duty is called a tortious act (f), and the person committing such an act is called a tortfeasor.

The common law recognises that, in addition to the duty of every citizen to obey the law, a duty is owed by every citizen to each one of his fellow-citizens with whom he is brought into relationship (g) so to exercise his own rights and perform his own the one person or set of persons involves the responsibility of the other person or set of persons; see pp. 484 et seq., post. The term also includes not only any British subject, but also, when the act is committed in England, or is not justifiable where it is committed, and is actionable in England, every person whatever his nationality (see title CONFLICT OF LAWS, Vol. VI., p. 248; p. 479, post), but it does not include a foreign sovereign State (see title CONFLICT OF LAWS, Vol. VI., p. 249). As to the effect of the death of a person who has committed a tortious act, see p. 502, post. Husband and wife are one person, and neither can sue the other for a tortious act committed during coverture (see title HUSBAND AND WIFE, Vol. XVI., p. 460), excepting so far as is necessary for protection of the wife's property (Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 12; Larner v. Larner, [1905] 2 K. B. 539).

(d) Every act which infringes a public right or private right of some other person affords a cause of action; see title ACTION, Vol. I., pp. 7, 9. Where the basis of such action is in substance the wrong done, the action has been regarded as founded on tort (ibid., pp. 48 et seq.). Where the cause of action is based on a duty not embraced by the common law liability arising out of the relationship between the parties the action may be regarded as founded on contract (ibid., p. 50; and see note (s), p. 466, note (a), p. 472, post).

(e) Rogers v. Rajendro Dutt (1860), 13 Moo. P. C. C. 209; Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor, Gow & Co. (1889), 23 Q. B. D. 598, 613, C. A. Where the person suffering damage is a foreigner the act may be legally wrongful as regards him if it infringes a right allowed to him by the law of the place where it is committed, although no such right would be recognised by the law in England (Buron v. Denman (1848), 2 Exch. 167). Where several persons are injured by a tort it is not necessary that all should be joined as plaintiffs; see title PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE, Vol. XXIII., p. 100; but where several persons are injured by the same act or series of acts and there is a common question of fact and law, they may be joined as plaintiffs; see titles PLEADING, Vol. XXII., p. 443; PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE, Vol. XXIII., p. 104; TRADE AND TRADE UNIONS, p. 667, post. Where the duty owed is a duty to the public, the Attorney-General is a necessary party, except where there is a special interference with a private right of some person or special damage is suffered by some person over and above that suffered by the general public (see title PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE, Vol. XXIII., pp. 100, 101; Jones v. Llanrwst Urban Council, [1911] 1 Ch. 393). A partnership firm is not a "person" for all purposes, but where the partners suffer joint damage from a tort, they may, subject to exceptions, join in an action; see title PARTNERSHIP, Vol. XXII., p. 38. A corporation may sue for a tort not of a purely personal nature; see titles COMPANIES, Vol. V., p. 311; CORPORATIONS, Vol. VIII., p. 390. A bankrupt can though undischarged recover for a personal wrong (Ex Wilson, Ex parte Vine (1878)), 8 Ch. D. 364, C. A.; see p. 503, post).

(f) If special damage is necessary to make up a cause of action, a tort in the eye of the law is not disclosed until special damage is shown (White v. Mellin, [1895] A. C. 154, per Lord HERSCHELL, L.C., at p. 163). An act committed abroad may be treated as tortious here if it would be actionable if committed in England and is not justifiable by the lex loci; see titles CONFLICT OF LAWS, Vol. VI., p. 248; TRESPASS, pp. 864, 872, post.

(g) Such a duty may be imposed by the common law on every person included in some particular class; thus, there is a duty on a common carrier as such to deliver safely any goods entrusted to him, and a failure to perform such duty is a tort (see title CARRIERS, Vol. IV., p. 8), and a duty duties that he shall not without legal excuse injure the legal rights of others (h), and it gives a right of action (i) to every citizen whose legal rights are, without legal excuse (k), violated by one with whom he is brought into relationship against that person, whether loss results from such violation or not (l).

SECT. 1.

Nature of Torts.

The relationship out of which the duty arises may result from any or all of the following (m):—(1) the application of the law of the State to either or both of the parties (n); (2) the surrounding circumstances affecting the parties (o); (3) the voluntary acts of either or both of the parties (p).

How the duty may arise.

The voluntary acts resulting in the relationship out of which the duty arises may also result in a contract between the parties to

SECT. 1. perform such duty, and therefore the same act may be both a breach of contract and a tort (q).
Nature of Torts.

SECT. 2.—Distinction between Actions of Tort and Actions of Contract.

Action of tort. 907. An action of tort is an action based on facts which constitute a tort, that is, which constitute and are regarded as a breach of duty on the part of the tortfeasor, whether the relationship out of which the duty arises results from a contract or not (r); if, however, the relationship does not give rise to the duty which is broken, but it is necessary to refer to the contract in order to establish such duty, then the action is said to be founded on contract (s).

SECT. 3.—Distinction between Tort and Crime.

Tort and crime. 908. A tort, being a wrong to an individual which gives rise to a cause of action may be distinguished from a crime (t), but the duty which is not fulfilled by a tortfeasor may be a duty imposed for the benefit of the public, and a breach of such duty may be an offence against the public, rendering the person committing it liable to legal punishment, at the same time that it is an offence against an individual giving him a right of civil action, and therefore the same act may be both a crime and a tort (u).

Prosecution of crime and private remedy. It is the duty of every citizen to endeavour to bring criminals to justice, and no court of justice can properly connive at any failure to perform such duty. Therefore, when a civil action is commenced, the court before which the action is being heard may take judicial notice of the failure, if any, in the performance of such duty, which may be involved in proceeding with such action before the criminal has been punished, and may refuse to allow such action to proceed until criminal proceedings have been taken (a).

SECT. 4.—Relevancy of Intention of Alleged Tortfeasor.

SUB-SECT. 1.—In General.

How far intention of tortfeasor is relevant. 909. Having regard to the definition of a tort already given (b), the elements in the tortious act or the proceedings arising out of it to which the intention of the alleged tortfeasor may be relevant include (1) the resulting right of action, (2) the proceedings in an action in respect of such right, (3) the alleged tortious act regarded as an exercise of the alleged tortfeasor's own rights or

(s) See titles ACTION, Vol. I., pp. 48 et seq.; CARRIERS, Vol. IV., p. 96. If the claim of the plaintiff is for a breach of some particular stipulation of a contract, as distinguished from a breach of duty arising out of a relationship established by contract, the action is founded on contract.

(t) An act is a crime when it is a breach of duty on the part of the person doing it which is regarded by the law of the State as an offence against the public, and renders the person guilty of it liable to legal punishment; see title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 232. the performance of his own duties, and (4) the legal justification or excuse, if any, available to the alleged tortfeasor.

SECT. 4.
Relevancy of Intention of Alleged Tortfeasor.

SUB-SECT. 2.—Intention as Affecting the Cause of Action.

910. The fact that an act which causes loss to another was done with a malicious intention (c) may form an essential element of the cause of action arising from such act (d), which is equivalent (e) to saying that where this is the case there is no injury to the legal rights of the person who suffers damage unless such malicious intention exists.

Malice as an element of cause of action.

Even where malice does not form an essential element of the cause of action, the intention with which an act is done may be relevant to the question whether a cause of action exists where the intention indicates that an act, which, if accidental, would be too trivial to justify legal proceedings (f), is not so because the intention with which it is done gives it a more serious character or gives rise to reasonable fear of such repetition of it as will entitle the person injured to protection from the court (g).

Aggravation.

(c) "Malice" in common acceptance means ill-will against a person, but in a legal sense it is often used to mean some motive other than that which might be inferred from the doing of a similar act in a right way, and in this sense it may be inferred to exist from the doing of a wrongful act intentionally and without just cause or excuse, even though no malice in the common acceptance of the term can be shown to exist (Bromage v. Prosser (1825), 4 B. & C. 247; Abrath v. North Eastern Rail. Co. (1886), 11 App. Cas. 247; see titles TRADE AND TRADE UNIONS, pp. 650, 674, post; TROVER AND DETINUE, p. 892, post; TRESPASS, p. 871, post; compare title TRADE MARKS, TRADE NAMES, AND DESIGNS, pp. 746, 747, post).

(d) Tortious acts of which malice is an essential element are (i.) malicious prosecution, in which case the malice is not to be inferred from the act done, though it is done without just cause or excuse, but a malus animus must be established as existing in fact, indicating that the person instituting proceedings, whether criminal or civil, was actuated by spite or ill-will, or by indirect or improper motives (see title MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND PROCEDURE, Vol. XIX., pp. 679, 680, 684, 685, 690, 691); (ii.) slander of title, in which case actual malice must be established (see titles LIBEL AND SLANDER, Vol. XVIII., p. 736; TRADE AND TRADE UNIONS, pp. 672, 674, post), but may be inferred from the statement and the circumstances in which it was made (see title TRADE AND TRADE UNIONS, p. 674, post); (iii.) defamation, in which case legal malice is a necessary element of the cause of action, but may be inferred from the act done, i.e., from the publication of defamatory matter without lawful justification or excuse (Whitfield v. South Eastern Rail. Co. (1858), E. B. & E. 115), and the necessity of extrinsically establishing that malice exists in fact only arises when a case showing some legal justification or excuse has to be rebutted (Nevill v. Fine Arts and General Insurance Co., [1895] 2 Q. B. 156, C. A.; see title LIBEL AND SLANDER, Vol. XVIII., pp. 608, 609, 711 et seq.); (iv.) wilful and malicious damage to property (see title TRESPASS, p. 846, post; and, as to intent to convert, see also title TROVER AND DETINUE, pp. 892, 895, post). As to maintenance where a purpose to stir up strife is essential, see British Cash and Parcel Conveyors, Ltd. v. Lamson Store Service Co., Ltd., [1903] 1 K. B. 1006, C. A.; Scott v. National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children (1909), 25 T. L. R. 789; Holden v. Thompson, [1907] 2 K. B. 489.

(e) This equivalence results from the fact already stated that there is no injury to a legal right without a remedy.

(f) See title TRESPASS, p. 859, notes (v), (a), post.

SECT. 4.

SUB-SECT. 3.—*Intention as Affecting the Action.Relevancy of Intention of Alleged Tortfeasor.

Intention as bearing on conduct of the tortfeasor.

911. Even where malice does not form an essential element in the cause of action and the effect of the intention with which an act was done falls short of altering the legal effects of the act, it may be open to the court to take into its consideration the intention with which an act which is in issue was done, so far as such intention bears on the conduct of the parties (h), and affords a ground judicially cognisable for the exercise or refusal to exercise any discretion vested in the court (i).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Intention as affecting Acts Done in the Exercise of Rights or the Performance of Duties.

Act done in a particular capacity.

912. In general there is no effective distinction to be drawn between intention as affecting acts done in the exercise of rights or the performance of duties, and intention as affecting justification or excuse (j), since if an act was done in the exercise of the defendant's own rights, and still more if it was done in the performance of his own duties, the fact that it was so done in general either affords a legal justification or excuse, or affords no defence to the action, and the question to be determined is the same, but there are cases in which the alleged tortfeasor is capable of acting in more than one capacity (k), and a legal justification or excuse is available to him if he acts in one of those capacities and not if he acts in the other (l).

(h) As to the effect of fraudulent motives in passing-off cases, see title TRADE MARKS, TRADE NAMES, AND DESIGNS, pp. 746, 747, post. As to the bearing of the question whether the defendant's actions were "conscientious" on the exercise of equitable jurisdiction generally, see title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., pp. 6, 7, 72. The intention of the plaintiff may also be relevant, as, for instance, where the plaintiff, being compelled by a tortious act, has paid money involuntarily (Kanhaya Lal v. National Bank of India (1913), 29 T. L. R. 314, P. C.); see also title TRESPASS, p. 854, post.

(i) See titles INJUNCTION, Vol. XVII., pp. 209, 218 et seq., 234; SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE, p. 46, ante; Behrens v. Richards, [1905] 2 Ch. 614, 621, 622, where the question whether plaintiff's conduct was capricious was considered, as well as the question whether a trivial act would justify an injunction; Proctor v. Bayley (1889), 42 Ch. D. 390, C. A.; Mayfair Property Co. v. Johnston, [1894] 1 Ch. 508, 516; Dixon v. Dixon (1903), 73 L. J. (CH.) 103; Brigg v. Thornton, [1904] 1 Ch. 386, C. A.; Hunt v. Hunt (1884), 54 L. J. (CH.) 289; Thornhill v. Weeks, [1913] 1 Ch. 438; Smith v. Streetfield (1913), 109 L. T. 173 (intention of tortfeasor may be considered in deciding amount of damages); Lever Brothers, Ltd. v. Masbro' Equitable Pioneers Society, Ltd. (1912), 106 L. T. 472, C. A. (trap orders accepted by servants contrary to directions of company: injunction not granted). As to whether, and the extent to which the intention of a party to an action may be relevant in deciding for good cause to deprive the successful party of costs, see Jones v. Curling (1884), 13 Q. B. D. 262, C. A.; American Tobacco Co. v. Guest, [1892] 1 Ch. 630; Behrens v. Richards, supra; and title PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE, Vol. XXIII., pp. 178, 179. As to the remedy when a person habitually and persistently institutes vexatious legal proceedings, see title ACTION, Vol. I., p. 30; Re Boaler (1913), 29 T. L. R. 767.

(j) See pp. 469, 470, post.

(k) Denaby and Cadeby Main Collieries, Ltd. v. Yorkshire Miners' Association, [1906] A. C. 384 (acts done by officials of union: union held not liable); Oram v. Hutt, [1913] 1 Ch. 259.

(l) For examples of cases where the defendant in a nuisance action was held entitled to do the act complained of in the exercise of his own rights, see New Imperial and Windsor Hotel Co. v. Johnson, [1912] 1 I. R. 327; and title NUISANCE, Vol. XXI., p. 563.

In such cases it may be material to prove the intention to act in a particular capacity, and if it is shown that the tortfeasor acted maliciously and not in the exercise of his own rights or the performance of his own duties, the basis of any alleged justification or excuse may cease to be available to him (m).

of Intention
of Alleged Tortfeasor.

SUB-SECT. 5.—Intention as Affecting Justification or Excuse.

913. Where a person has in the exercise of his own rights or the performance of his own duties committed some act which is alleged to be tortious, and seeks to establish a legal justification or excuse on the ground that the act was done in the exercise of some power or in pursuance of some duty, the intention with which the act was done may be relevant as showing that it was or was not done in the exercise of such power or in pursuance of such duty, as the case may be, and therefore was or was not justified or excused (n).

914. A person who owes a duty arising out of his relation to another person to do or not to do a particular act may at the same time owe a duty equally binding on him to himself (o) or to such other person (p) or to a third person (a) or to the State (b), which conflicts with that duty, and in a legal sense requires him to do or refrain from doing the same act (c).

Conflict of duties.

In such circumstances the person who owes such conflicting duties does not commit a legal wrong, even though the result of what he does is to cause damage to another person, if he can establish a legal justification or excuse by proving that he honestly did that which he bonâ fide and reasonably believed to be his duty (d).

C. 239, 245; compare Livingston v. Hawker (1913). Times, 18th October, per Lord HALDANE (L.C.)), nor can a duty to do a tortious act created towards each other by the persons who do the act afford a justification (South Wales Miners' Federation v. Glamorgan Coal Co., supra, per Lord MACNAGHTEN, at p. 246). A legal duty to do what is illegal and known to be so is a contradiction in terms (ibid., per Lord LINDLEY, at p. 254).

Where a conflict of duties exists, and a person who has committed an act which adversely affects the legal rights of another person proves that he in committing such act was acting honestly and bonâ fide in pursuance of his duty, he establishes a legal excuse for his act, and no right of action results to the person whose rights have been affected (f).

When

917. Where the intention with which an act is done is not an essential element in the cause of action and no conflict of duties exists, and a person commits an act without legal excuse, which injures the rights of another person, the intention with which he committed such act is immaterial. If the overt act so committed is an injury to the legal right of such other person it gives a right of action, however good the motive and however innocent the intention may be (g).

Damnum
sine injuriâ.

If the overt act so committed is not an injury to any legal right of such other person, it does not give a right of action (h), however bad the motive or however guilty the intention (i), or however erroneous the view of his legal rights on which he purported to base his act (k).

SECT. 5.—Injury and Damage in Relation to the Wrongful Act.

*Injuria sine

918. A tortious act by which one person causes injury to a legal right of some other person gives rise to a cause of action whether loss results from such violation or not (l). Such action may take the form of an action for damages, and may succeed without proof of actual damage unless actual damage is of the essence of the action, in which case no injury to a legal right exists unless actual damage is proved (m).

919. Where a duty to another person is such that any breach of it imports an injury to some legal right of that other person, the injury arises so directly out of the breach that it is not necessary to separately establish a causal connexion between them; but where this is not the case the liability for injury resulting from a tortious act will only ensue if it is established that the act was the effective cause of the injury (n).

A tortious act is to be considered to be the effective cause of an injury whenever the injury may fairly and reasonably be considered as arising naturally (o), that is, according to the usual course of things, from the tortious act and the circumstances in which it took place (p). These circumstances will include all such incidents as cause.

stances constituting an cause.

(n) The existence of such a causal connexion is based on the induction from experience that in the ordinary course of nature every fact capable of being stated as having happened is also capable of being proved to have resulted from antecedently existing facts, if these can be ascertained with sufficient accuracy. The imposition of a liability on a tortfeasor for injuries resulting from a tortious act committed by him is based on the hypothesis that in the ordinary affairs of mankind the above induction is assumed to be sound, and that every person may reasonably be assumed (i.) to expect that where a reasonable inference from past experience has proved that a set of facts answering to a particular description is followed by a consequence capable of being described by reference only to the description of the antecedent facts a similar sequence will result in the future; and (ii.) to contemplate that such additional incidents may occur during and may affect the sequence from an antecedent set of facts to the ultimate consequence as in the ordinary course of nature a reasonable man might expect in similar circumstances (Sharp v. Powell (1872), L. R. 7 C. P. 253; Clark v. Chambers (1878), 3 Q. B. D. 327; Hadwell v. Righton, [1907] 2 K. B. 345; Rickards v. Lothian, [1913] A. C. 263, 274, P. C.). Accordingly, where a set of facts shows the existence of a duty on the part of A. towards B. to do or not to do a particular act, and a breach of that duty, and an injury to B. ensues, which is capable of being described by reference to the antecedent set of facts combined with such additional incidents as have occurred, and might reasonably be expected to have occurred in similar circumstances, and it is recognised that a reasonable inference from past experience would have led A. to expect that the breach of duty, together with such additional incidents, would be followed by the injury which in fact resulted, A. may reasonably be held responsible for such injury (Leitch v. Railway Passengers Assurance Co. (1889), 22 Q. B. D. 504, per WILLS, J., at p. 512); that is to say, a tortfeasor must be assumed to have contemplated and be liable for all those injuries which result from the tortious act together with such incidents as a reasonable man might in the circumstances have expected to result in the ordinary course of nature (Fletcher v. Smith (1877), 2 App. Cas. 781, 787, 788). Where the breach of duty involves an act of volition on the part of the tortfeasor, he is presumed to have contemplated all those facts which a reasonable man would have ascertained before deciding in favour of the act or omission which caused the injury (Ratcliffe v. Evans, [1892] 2 Q. B. 524, C. A., per BOWEN, L.J., at p. 529: "By the very fact that he has committed such a wrong the defendant is prepared for the proof that some general damage may have been done").

(o) Where the conscious act of a third person intervenes there may be no liability either because it and not the original act was the real cause of the injury (see title NEGLIGENCE, Vol. XXI., pp. 380 et seq.; Rickards v. Lothian, supra), or because the duty in question did not extend to protection against such a conscious act (ibid., at p. 278).

may reasonably be supposed to have been in the contemplation of the tortfeasor at the time when the wrongful act was done (q). When the injury results in pecuniary damage this proposition may be stated in the form that a tortfeasor is liable for such damages as flow directly and naturally or in the ordinary course of things from the wrongful act (r).

SECT. 6.—Classification of Torts.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Modes of Classification.

Different modes of classification.

920. Torts may be classified by reference to any one or more of the essential elements in a tort, namely:—the person wronged; the tortfeasor; the relationship between them; the duty arising out of that relationship (s); the injurious act; and the legal remedy. Classification by reference to the last-named element has been rendered obsolete by the Judicature Acts (a), and it is for practical purposes found convenient to consider torts under the following heads:—(1) wrongs affecting property; (2) wrongs affecting a person in respect of his property; and (3) wrongs affecting a person in respect of his person or his personal rights.

SUB-SECT. 2.—Nature of Rights Infringed.

(i.) Wrongs Primarily Affecting Property.

Torts in rem.

921. The existence of a tort implies the existence of a person injured, and the existence of property implies the existence of a person and of some legal right vested in such person, either of a corporeal or of an incorporeal nature, and where the thing owned is of a corporeal nature implies a relationship between the person and the thing owned (b). From each of these implications it follows that it is impossible that a tort should be completely defined by reference to the injury to a thing without reference to the person

(q) See title NEGLIGENCE, Vol. XXI., pp. 378 et seq.; London, Tilbury and Southend Railway v. Paterson (1913), 29 T. L. R. 413, H. L.; Latham v. Johnson (R.) and Nephew, Ltd., [1913] 1 K. B. 398, C. A.

(r) Steamship "Gracie" (Owners) v. Steamship "Argentino" (Owners), The "Argentino" (1889), 14 App. Cas. 519; see title NEGLIGENCE, Vol. XXI., p. 487; see also Jones v. Watney, Combe, Reid & Co., Ltd. (1912), 28 T. L. R. 399 (damages include any augmentation caused by act of plaintiff if done reasonably and carefully); compare Anglo-Algerian Steamship Co., Ltd. v. Houlder Line, Ltd., [1908] 1 K. B. 659, 666; Price v. Webb, [1913] 2 K. B. 367 (non-employment consequent on non-return of insurance cards held too remote).

(s) As to duties arising out of the ownership or occupation of property, see titles NEGLIGENCE, Vol. XXI., pp. 382 et seq.; NUISANCE, Vol. XXI., pp. 525 et seq.

(a) The forms of statements of claim given in R. S. C., Appendix C, ss. 5, 6, involve no distinction between torts, whether they arise or do not arise out of contract, and it is now settled that, when a plaintiff joins a claim for another remedy with a claim for damages in respect of a tort, the substance of the action is to be regarded in deciding whether it is an action of tort or not (Keates v. Woodward, [1902] 1 K. B. 532, C. A. (substantial claim for injunction, ancillary claim for trespass)), whatever the form of the claim may be (Bryant v. Herbert (1878), 3 C. P. D. 389, C. A.; Turner v. Stallibrass, [1898] 1 Q. B. 56, C. A.; Sachs v. Henderson, [1902] 1 K. B. 612, C. A.; Du Pasquier v. Cadbury, Jones & Co., Ltd., [1903] 1 K. B. 104, C. A.; and see title ACTION, Vol. I., pp. 40, 50).

owning the thing (c), but in some cases the thing injured, such as a ship, is so obviously the subject of ownership by some person who will be damaged by any injury of it that it is possible to regard the person merely in his capacity as owner of the thing, and to define the tort by reference only to the injury to the thing and to the owner considered as owner thereof (d). In such cases the tort may be regarded as a wrong primarily affecting the thing owned.

SECT. 6.
Classification of Torts.

922. When property, whether of a corporeal (e) or an incorporeal nature (f), is so injured by a wrongful act as to cause damage to a person in respect of his rights in such property, the wrongful act is a tort, and the person so suffering damage in respect of his rights has a right of action (g).

action.

The rights which such person so has may be created or varied by a contract between him and some other person (h), and any wrongful act consisting of an interference by a third person which prevents such other person from fulfilling his contract, and thereby causes damage in respect of the rights so created or varied, will give rise to a right of action (i).

property arising out of

923. Although no injury is caused to the actual thing constituting the subject-matter of property, yet the owner's rights of ownership

(c) Defries v. Milne, [1913] 1 Ch. 98, C. A.; Ryall v. Kidwell & Son, [1913] 3 K. B. 123; so also, where the actual instrument of a tort is property apart from its owner, the property is not regarded as the delinquent per se (Morgan v. Castleigate Steamship Co., The "Castleigate," [1893] A. C. 38, 52; The Tasmania (1888), 13 P. D. 110, 116).

(d) Thus, the owners of a ship or cargo in a ship may sue as such in respect of any wrong done to them in that capacity; see title ADMIRALTY, Vol. I., p. 81; The Seacombe, The Deronshire, [1912] P. 21, 38, C. A.; compare Ahmedbhai Habbibhai v. Bombay Fire and Marine Insurance Co., Ltd. (1912), L. R. 40 Ind. App. 10 (claim for damage by water to property in possession of insurance company for salvage after fire is not a claim in tort).

(f) The owner of a profit à prendre has rights of a possessory nature, and can bring an action of trespass (see title EASEMENTS AND PROFITS À PRENDRE, Vol. XI., p. 340; Fitzgerald v. Firkbank, [1897] 2 Ch. 96, C. A.), even though no entry is made on land in his possession (see title GAME, Vol. XV., p. 226); but trespass does not lie for disturbance of a mere incorporeal hereditament unless there is a right to exclusive possession; see title TRESPASS, p. 850, post.

(g) A patent is a franchise, so that an action for infringement of it cannot be brought in the county court (R. v. Halifax County Court, [1891] 2 Q. B. 263, C. A.; see title COUNTY COURTS, Vol. VIII., p. 431), and, although a registered trade mark is not a franchise (Bow v. Hart, [1905] 1 K. B. 592, 595, C. A.), the rights in it are analogous to patent rights, and in passing-off cases the court exercises its jurisdiction for the protection of property rather than of personal feelings; see title TRADE MARKS, TRADE NAMES, AND DESIGNS, p. 748, post.

(h) It was pointed out in Allen v. Flood, [1898] A. C. 1, per CAVE, J., at p. 34, that a right arising from purchase in the narrower sense is preceded by a right ex contractu.

(i) To break a contract is an unlawful act (South Wales Miners' Federation v. Glamorgan Coal Co., [1905] A. C. 239, 253), and anyone who induces and procures another to commit such an unlawful act also acts unlawfully and therefore wrongfully (ibid., at p. 250).

may be injuriously affected, and a tortious act is committed whenever a person wrongfully does that which injuriously affects the rights which another person has in property, whether the actual thing owned is injuriously affected or not. For instance, a person who maliciously (k) makes and publishes a false statement in disparagement of another person's title to property, whether real or personal (l), and thereby causes special damage to such other person, commits a tort which is recognised by the name "slander of title" (m), and gives a cause of action to such other person (n).

(iii.) Wrongs Affecting a Person in Respect of his Person.

Corporal injury.

924. Every person (o) is entitled to immunity from all corporal insults and injuries (p), such as an assault causing actual injury

(k) The malice proved must be actual malice, but such actual malice may be inferred from the circumstances in which the statement is made (Gerard v. Dickenson (1590), 4 Co. Rep. 18a (statement made against defendant's own knowledge); Waterer v. Freeman (1617), Hob. 205; Steward v. Young (1870), L. R. 5 C. P. 122 (mere information not amounting to knowledge of untruth is no evidence of malice); Dicks v. Brooks (1880), 15 Ch. D. 22, 40, C. A. (misstatement of fact may be evidence of malice when misstatement of law might not be); Pitt v. Donovan (1913), 1 M. & S. 639 (mere irrationality of statement is not sufficient to prove malice); Smith v. Spooner (1810), 3 Taunt. 246 (lessor having right to re-enter denying ownership of plaintiff held not malicious); Watson v. Reynolds (1826), Mood. & M. 1 (objection to title of property at auction by solicitor without express authority of client).

The term is not confined to slander of title strictly so called, but is used to describe actions of a similar description which can be brought "against anyone who maliciously decries the plaintiff's goods or some other thing belonging to him and thereby produces special damage to the plaintiff" (ibid., at p. 775; Ratcliffe v. Evans, supra). As to threats by a patentee, see title PATENTS AND INVENTIONS, Vol. XXII., pp. 227, 228; *Metro-politan Gas Meters, Ltd. v. As to the use of tradenames and passing-off actions, see title TRADE MARKS, TRADE NAMES, AND DESIGNS, pp. 744 et seq., post.

(n) In actions of slander of title it is essential for the plaintiff to allege and to prove that the statement is false (see title LIBEL AND SLANDER, Vol. XVIII., pp. 677, 719, 736); that it is made and published by the defendant of and concerning the plaintiff's title in disparagement thereof with actual malice, and that it caused special damage to the plaintiff (ibid., p. 736; Royal Baking Powder Co. v. Wright, Crossley & Co. (1900), 18 R. P. C. 95, H. L.; Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co. v. Maison Talbot (1904), 20 T. L. R. 579, C. A.; Barrett v. Associated Newspapers, Ltd. (1907), 23 T. L. (o) An infant cannot sue for a tort suffered while en ventre se mère (Walker v. Great Northern Rail. Co. of Ireland (1891), 28 L. R. Ir. 69).

(p) Such corporal insults and injuries include assault, whether there is or is not actual physical contact, and threats not amounting to an assault, provided that they cause damage; see title TRESPASS, p. 873, post; and as to the various descriptions of personal assault, see ibid., p. 871; and title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 606.

to the person or a tortious act resulting in personal injury, not necessarily by direct physical action, but by means connecting the act and the injury so directly that the act is the cause of the injury (q).

SECT. 6.
Classification of Torts.

925. Every person is also entitled to protection from wrongful and malicious attacks which injuriously affect his character and reputation, and it is a tort when anyone without justification or excuse falsely and maliciously states and publishes of another that which is untrue and thereby causes him damage (a).

Injury to
or reputation.

926. Every person is also entitled to personal liberty of action free from any restraint not imposed in the due course of law, and it is a tort for any person to interfere with such liberty of action by imposing on another to his prejudice any restraint otherwise than in the due course of law (b). Where such a restraint, whether by force or only by a show of force, prevents a person from freely moving outside limits imposed by the will of another, it amounts to an imprisonment, and if imposed without justification is a false imprisonment and is actionable (c). It is a tort for any person, without reasonable and probable cause, maliciously to cause the arrest or imprisonment of another by course of law (d).

Personal freedom.

927. Every person has a right to carry on his pursuits freely, safely, and without undue interference (e), and every other person is subject to the correlative duty arising therefrom, and is prohibited from any undue obstruction to the exercise of this right to the fullest extent compatible with the exercise of similar rights by others (f).

Eckersley* (1856), 6 E. & B. 47, 74, Ex. Ch.; see title TRADE AND TRADE UNIONS, pp. 525, 527, 529, 595, post). A person has a right to do as he chooses with his own, whether labour or capital, within the limits set by the law, and this right involves a prohibition against infringement thereof, and such prohibition involves a remedy for the violation thereof (Erle, Law relating to Trade Unions (1869), p. 13).

person by means of a contract which is enforceable at law (g). Where such a contractual relationship (h) exists, any person who wrongfully induces one of the parties to it to break the contract giving rise to the relationship so as to cause damage (i) to the other party to the contract commits a tort in respect of which such other party has a right of action (k), whether specific damage is proved to have actually accrued or not (l). It is a violation of legal right to interfere with contractual relations recognised by law if there is no sufficient justification for the interference (m).

Part II.—Liability for Torts.

SECT. 1.—General Liability of a Person or Body of Persons for his or their Own Torts.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Liability of Individual Committing the Act.

(i.) In General.

Actual tort-feasor generally liable.

928. The person who actually commits a tortious act is (g) It is an undue interference with the rights of A. to induce another person, B., with whom he has entered into a contract, to break such contract; see titles CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 345; MASTER AND SERVANT, Vol. XX., p. 267; TRADE AND TRADE UNIONS, pp. 649, 650, post.

(h) It is not every contract to do, or not to do, a particular act which constitutes a contractual relation such as that contemplated; the relation must be such that interference of an active nature with it causes more than nominal damage: see title ACTION, Vol. I., p. 11; National Phonograph Co., Ltd. v. Edison-Bell Consolidated Phonograph Co., Ltd., [1908] 1 Ch. 335, C. A. The illustrations given in ibid., per JOYCE, J., at p. 350 (namely, contract to marry; contract not to enter into employment in particular trade), even if they are in fact illustrations of what RIGBY, L.J., was referring to when he said "The nature of the contract broken must be considered" (Exchange Telegraph Co. v. Gregory & Co., [1896] 1 Q. B. 147, 157, C. A.), do not indicate any rule of general application for distinguishing contracts which do constitute such a contractual relation from those which do not. The answer to that question cannot depend on the nature of the contract, and must depend on the question whether the contract is such that a breach of it is capable of causing damage to one of the parties to it by prejudicially affecting the legal rights arising out of it, and, in particular, the legal right inherent in a contract (see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 331) to enforce it at law (National Phonograph Co., Ltd. v. Edison-Bell Consolidated Phonograph Co., Ltd., supra, at p. 361). For cases illustrating contractual relations in respect of which it has been held that an inducement to break the contract was a tort, see titles CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 345, note (v); TRADE AND TRADE UNIONS, p. 649, notes (s), (a), post.

(i) Actual damage is the gist of the action; see title TRADE AND TRADE UNIONS, p. 649, note (t), post.

(k) See ibid., pp. 648 et seq., post; and title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 345; compare Senten v. Busnach (1913), 29 T. L. R. 214, C. A.

(l) Exchange Telegraph Co. v. Gregory & Co., supra. Damage in such a case is essential to the cause of action, as it is the only thing which brings the tortfeasor into any relation with the aggrieved party (ibid., per RIGBY, L.J., at p. 156); but it is enough to show that the act complained of was done in such a way as to be likely to cause damage, though proof of specific damage is not given (ibid., per Lord ESHER, M.R., at p. 153).

responsible for it (n), notwithstanding that in committing it he was acting as agent for another person (o), unless the relation out of which the unaccomplished duty arises is, to the knowledge of the person suffering the wrong, a relation between him and the principal, and the agent is known by such person to be acting on behalf of the principal (p), or the act is committed by a servant or agent authorised by and acting for and on behalf of the Crown (q), or in some other way the act is such that the authority of the principal deprives it of its tortious character (a). There may, however, be defences open to the agent which are not open to the principal (b).

(ii.) In Special Cases.

(a) Qualifications of Liability.

929. In certain descriptions of individual persons the capacity, function or personal qualification of the individual may affect his liability either by affecting the capacity to undertake the duty which is broken or to commit the act which is a breach of it, or by affording a defence to an action for injuries brought in respect of such breach (c). Qualifications of liability.

(n) The Mentor (1799), 1 Ch. Rob. 179, 181. Thus, the liability of the building owner for injuries inflicted in the course of the work will not absolve the contractor (see title BUILDING CONTRACTS, ENGINEERS, AND ARCHITECTS, Vol. III., p. 317), unless judgment has been recovered against the building owner (ibid.).

(o) See titles AGENCY, Vol. I., pp. 224 et seq.; COMPANIES, Vol. V., p. 296; EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, Vol. XIV., p. 315; MASTER AND SERVANT, Vol. XX., pp. 276 et seq.; TRESPASS, p. 897, post. (p) The Tasmania (1888), 13 P. D. 110, 114.

(q) Since the King can neither do nor authorise a wrong, proceedings for a tort will not lie against the Crown, or any servant of the Crown alleged to be acting by the Crown's authority (see titles AGENCY, Vol. I., p. 213; CROWN PRACTICE, Vol. X., p. 28; MASTER AND SERVANT, Vol. XX., p. 261; PUBLIC AUTHORITIES AND PUBLIC OFFICERS, Vol. XXIII., p. 307), even though he had no authority so to act at the time, if the act is adopted afterwards (Buron v. Denman (1848), 2 Exch. 167). It is not enough that the person committing the tortious act is an official duly appointed by and purporting to act on behalf of the Crown, nor even that such person is acting directly under the orders of a higher official; see title PUBLIC AUTHORITIES AND PUBLIC OFFICERS, Vol. XXIII., p. 316. The court can inquire into the question whether the act is justified by any Act of Parliament or State authority; if it is so justified it is not a tort, and, if it is not so justified, the person actually committing it, or legally responsible for it, remains liable (Raleigh v. Goschen, [1898] 1 Ch. 73; Bainbridge v. Postmaster-General, [1906] 1 K. B. 178, C. A.; see title CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, Vol. VI., pp. 383, 386, 387, 415; see also Nireaha Tamaki v. Baker, [1901] A. C. 561, 575, P. C.; and title EXECUTION, Vol. XIV., p. 41). As against a foreigner the order of the Crown may justify a trespass although it would not do so as against a subject; see title TRESPASS, p. 847, post.

(a) No action can be brought against the agent of a foreign Government for an act done abroad under its authority; see title AGENCY, Vol. I., p. 222, note (i).

(c) See pp. 478 et seq., post.

SECT. 1.

General
Liability for Torts.Liability of infants.(b) Infants.

930. An infant above the age of seven years is liable in respect of a tortious act committed by him if such act is not directly founded upon a contract upon which the infant cannot be sued (d), but is not liable if such act is directly founded on such a contract. An infant below the age of seven years is not criminally responsible for acts of a criminal nature involving a malicious intention on the ground that there is an irrebuttable presumption that he is incapable of forming such a malicious intention (e), and accordingly an infant below that age would presumably not be held liable for a tortious act, such as libel and slander, which involves an inference that a malicious intention existed. The presumption of law that between the ages of seven and fourteen an infant has not sufficient capacity to know that what he did was criminally wrong may be rebutted, and in cases where the malicious intention required to constitute an actionable tort is similar to that required to constitute a crime, such malicious intention may presumably be established from the circumstances attending the act, but need not necessarily be inferred from the mere doing of it (f). An infant is not liable for a tort committed by his agent unless committed by his direct command (g).

(c) *Married Women.*Liability of married women.

931. A married woman is liable to any third person for injuries resulting from any tort committed by her (h), but judgment against her will be limited to her separate estate not subject to a restraint on anticipation (i).

(d) *Lunatics.*Liability of lunatics.

932. A lunatic is not necessarily free from liability for a tortious act committed by him (k). In cases where malicious intention is essential, but such intention may be inferred from the act done, the inference is not necessarily rebutted by proof that the person doing it was a lunatic (l), even though so found by inquisition (m). A., per Lord ESHER, M.R., at p. 560 ("Whenever a person did an act, which act if done by a person with a perfect mind would make him civilly or criminally responsible to the law, if the disease in the mind of the person was not so great as to make him unable to understand the nature and consequence of the act which he was doing, that was an act for which he would be civilly or criminally responsible"); see also Mordaunt v. Mordaunt (1872), L. R. 2 P. & D. 109, 382; Long v. Long and Johnson (1890), 15 P. D. 218; and title HUSBAND AND WIFE, Vol. XVI., pp. 484, 485.

fact that a person has been so found may, however, have a material bearing on the nature of the duty owed by him from breach of which injury has resulted, and might afford a ground of defence if such duty could only have arisen out of a valid contract which he was not capable of entering into (n), and where the tortious act alleged arises out of the ownership of property and the owner has been found to be lunatic or to be incapable of managing his affairs, the duty arising out of such ownership would prima facie rest on his committee or trustee, as the case might be (o).

SECT. 1.
General Liability
for Torts.

(c) Bankrupts.

933. The liability of a bankrupt for a tort committed by him, being a demand in the nature of unliquidated damages arising otherwise than by reason of a contract, promise or breach of trust, is not provable (a), and is, therefore, not discharged by the bankruptcy (b), but a person injured by a tortious act and having an equitable claim, or a claim in contract arising out of it, may waive the tort and prove (c), and where damages for a tort have become liquidated by a final judgment, award or compromise, they may be proved in the bankruptcy (d). Where the duty broken arises out of the possession or control of property which has vested in the trustee, there may be a liability on the estate and not on the bankrupt, and if the liability is not provable the trustee may by leave of the court be sued as representing the estate (e).

Liability of bankrupts.

(f) Foreigners and Foreign Ambassadors.

934. A foreigner is liable for a tort committed within the jurisdiction (f), and is liable for a tort committed outside the jurisdiction unless the tortious act is committed in respect of land outside the jurisdiction (g), or the law of the place where it was committed expressly permits the tortious act, and thereby takes away its tortious character, or gives exclusive jurisdiction over it to the courts having jurisdiction at the place where it was committed (h), or grants a discharge in respect of it (i).

Liability of foreigners.

A foreign ambassador cannot be made liable against his will for a tortious act (k).

SECT. 1.

General
Liability for Torts.Extent of liability of corporations.Responsibility of corporations
for agents.SUB-SECT. 2.—Liability of Corporations.

935. A corporation aggregate (l) or sole (m) is liable to be sued for a tort in respect of which an action would lie against it if it were an individual, unless the act complained of is one which the corporation could not in any circumstances be authorised by its constitution to commit, and a corporation may be made liable even though malice is an essential element in the cause of action (n). Even where the act done is an illegal act the corporation may be responsible for it, provided that it is not to such an extent ultra vires that it cannot reasonably be said to be the act of the corporation (a).

In general, a tortious act committed by a corporation aggregate is in fact committed by a servant or agent of the corporation (b) acting for or on behalf of the corporation, and the act being one which the corporation is itself competent to perform, the corporation is responsible for it (c). Where a corporation such as a joint-stock company carries on business, it is also responsible for a tortious act committed by a servant in the course of his employment or by an agent in the course of business done on behalf of the corporation (d), even though such act is not one which the corporation is by its constitution competent to perform, provided that it is one which it might possibly be authorised by its constitution to commit (e), and it may ratify such a tortious act (f).

SUB-SECT. 3.—*Public Bodies and Officers.*Liability of public bodies for acts of officers.

936. A public body, namely, a body endowed with powers to be exercised and duties to be performed for the benefit of the public, is responsible for any tortious act committed in the exercise of such powers or the performance of such duties (g) by any servant or agent, including any officer acting on behalf of the authority within the scope of his employment or in performance of duties or exercise of powers delegated to him by the authority, but is not responsible for such an act committed by an officer appointed by the authority merely on the ground that he is so appointed, if the duty which he performs or the power which he exercises in committing the tortious act is bestowed on him for the benefit of the public and not for the benefit or in aid of the authority (h).

SECT. 1.
General Liability
for Torts.

937. An act committed by a public body in carrying out a duty imposed upon it by Parliament is not tortious, even though it causes damage to an individual, if the act is a necessary result of the performance of the duty or if the doing of the act in the way in which it is done is expressly or impliedly authorised by Parliament (i). In such cases the individual injured is without a remedy unless a remedy is provided by the statute (j). Powers which when exercised may cause injury must not, however, be exercised arbitrarily, carelessly, or oppressively (k), but bonâ fide and with judgment and discretion (l), and if a public body having power to do a particular act does it negligently (m) or otherwise in breach of some legal right (n) in such a way as to cause damage to an individual, it is liable, although it was bonâ fide acting in the exercise of powers bestowed on it for the benefit of the public (o).

Exercise of statutory powers.

938. In actions arising out of torts, no sound distinction of general application can be drawn between "nonfeasance" and "misfeasance" (p). Where a duty towards the individual injured existed and misfeasance.

(m) For cases relating to acts alleged to be negligent, see title NEGLIGENCE, Vol. XXI., pp. 422 et seq.; Shrimpton v. Hertfordshire County Council (1911), 27 T. L. R. 251, H. L.

(n) For cases relating to nuisance, see title NUISANCE, Vol. XXI., pp. 557, 558.

(o) A public body doing a legal wrong, without legal justification or excuse, is in exactly the same position as a private person, excepting that, where Parliament has provided a particular remedy, that remedy must be followed (Mersey Docks Trustees v. Gibbs (1866), L. R. 1 H. L. 93, 107); thus, it cannot be compelled by a mandatory injunction, or by mandamus, when Parliament has provided another remedy (Glossop v. Heston and Isleworth Local Board (1879), 12 Ch. D. 102, C. A.); see titles ELECTRIC LIGHTING AND POWER, Vol. XII., pp. 563 et seq.; STATUTES, p. 173, ante.

(p) See titles PUBLIC AUTHORITIES AND PUBLIC OFFICERS, Vol. XXIII., pp. 316, 317, note (i); NEGLIGENCE, Vol. XXI., pp. 375, 376. A distinction has been drawn between nonfeasance of a gratuitous undertaking which does not impose liability and misfeasance which on the contrary does (Elsee v. Garward, (1793), 5 Term Rep. 143), and

SECT. 1.

Liability
for Torts.

to do the act by the omission whereof the injury is caused, the nonfeasance of such an act gives rise to a cause of action to the same extent as a misfeasance of some act which there is a duty to perform in a particular manner (q). In deciding the preliminary question, however, whether in the particular case or class of case a duty does exist towards the individual, and, if so, what the nature of the duty is, the distinction may be, and frequently is, vital (r), more especially when the duty alleged to have been not performed or wrongly performed is one which is imposed on a public authority to be performed gratuitously or at the public expense for the benefit of the public (s).

Transferred public duties.

Where such a duty exists and is clearly defined, the fact that it is transferred to and newly imposed on a new authority will not in itself affect the existence or the nature of the duty, and if the

in certain cases a distinction may exist between the commission of an act by a person which involves an act of conscious volition on his part and, if the act involves danger to others, imposes a duty on him to guard against such danger (as when a person sends an animal not known to be savage on to the highway and it does damage), and some mere omission which does not involve any act of conscious volition, and therefore does not necessarily involve the existence of a state of mind when it is the duty of a person to consider whether care is required or not, such as a mere omission to fence in such an animal, from which if there was no obligation to fence no liability will result; see title NEGLIGENCE, Vol. XXI., pp. 405 et seq. Similarly, where a public authority omits to perform some function, and in consequence of such omission damage results to an individual, the mere omission will not give rise to a liability to the individual unless Parliament intended to impose a duty towards him to perform the function omitted (Saunders v. Holborn District Board of Works, [1895] 1 Q. B. 64; see title STATUTES, pp. 175, 176, ante); but if the authority elects to do an act which it had a discretion to do or not to do, it comes under such duties as in the case of an individual would result from such an election; see note (o), p. 481, ante, notes (q), (r), infra, pp. 495, 496, post; and title STATUTES, p. 176, ante. As to the distinction between omission and commission in relation to waste; see title REAL PROPERTY AND CHATTELS REAL, Vol. XXIV., p. 175.

(q) Kelly v. Metropolitan Rail. Co., [1895] 1 Q. B. 944, C. A. "You cannot sever what was omitted or left undone from what was committed or actually done, and say that because the accident was caused by the omission therefore it was nonfeasance. . . . The omission to take precautions to do something that ought to have been done to finish the work is precisely the same thing in its legal consequence as the commission of something that ought not to have been done, and there is no similarity in point of law between such a case and a case where the local authority have chosen to do nothing at all" (McClelland v. Manchester Corporation, [1912] 1 K. B. 118, per LUSH, J., at p. 127); see also Dawson & Co. v. Bingley Urban Council, [1911] 2 K. B. 149, C. (r) Thus, although no distinction between nonfeasance and misfeasance exists in general, a distinction does exist in respect to the question whether an action will lie for that in respect of which an indictment may be preferred (Sydney Municipal Council v. Bourke, [1895] A. C. 433, 442, P. C.).

(s) Dawson & Co. v. Bingley Urban Council, supra, per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., at p. 154 ("Well-established authorities make it clear that public bodies representing the public are not liable to be sued by an individual member of the public who has sustained injury in consequence of the omission of such a body to perform a statutory duty created for the benefit of a class of which such person is one, yet the public body will be liable if by its acts it alters the normal condition of something which it has a statutory duty to provide or maintain, and in consequence some person duty of the original authority towards an individual was limited to doing properly that which was done, so that there was no liability unless there was misfeasance, the duty on the substituted authority will be similarly limited (t).

SECT. 1.
General Liability
for Torts,

939. If a duty is laid by statute on any person or authority, every member of the public who is concerned in the performance of it has the right to have that duty performed (u). Rights of public.

940. If a statute creates a new duty and provides the remedy for a breach of it, that remedy must be adopted (x), but if the remedy provided is for the infringement of a right of property, the jurisdiction of the court to protect that right by injunction is not excluded unless the statute expressly so provides (a). Statutory remedy.

941. If a statute creates a new duty for the benefit of the public (b) and not for the benefit of individuals, and does not provide a remedy, proceedings can only be taken in the name of the Attorney-General, unless the interference with the public right in question involves interference with some private right of the plaintiff, or the plaintiff in respect of his right as a member of the public suffers some special damage peculiar to himself from the interference with the public right (c). Where no special remedy provided.

942. Where a statute imposes a duty and a person is injured through a breach of such duty, and it appears to be within the purview of the statute (d) that there should be a right of action for the resulting damages against the person on whom the duty is imposed, the person injured may bring such an action (e). reason of a breach of the duty so owed to him may bring an action of tort in respect of it (f).

Where a duty is imposed on a public body for the benefit of the public, or even of a particular class of the public, and a remedy is provided for the failure to perform it, the mere non-performance does not, in the absence of special provisions in the statute, give rise to a right of action to the person injured even though he is a member of the particular class (g). Such body is, however, liable for misfeasance in the performance of such duty, even though the actual cause of the injury is an omission to do something, as, for example, when the authority having altered the normal condition of something has a duty to maintain it in the altered condition and omits to do so (h).

Judicial acts.

943. Persons exercising judicial functions in a court are exempt from all civil liability for anything done or said by them in their judicial capacity (i).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Trade Disputes and Liability of Trade Unions.

Freedom from liability.

944. Where a person induces another not to employ or to serve a third person, and accompanies such inducement by violence or threats, he commits a tort which is actionable (j), but if it is committed by or on behalf of a trade union, an action against the trade union in respect of it cannot be entertained by any court (k).

If without violence or threats a person induces another to break a contract of employment and thereby causes damage to the other party to the contract, he commits a tort which is actionable (l); but to this rule there are certain exceptions introduced by statute (m).

SECT. 2.—Liability in Tort for Acts of Others.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Master and Servant.

Liability of servant.

945. The person who actually commits a tort is liable although in committing it he is acting as servant of another person, and although he has no reason to know or suspect that the act is wrongful, unless the act is incapable of being regarded as a tort in the absence of actual or imputed knowledge (n).

The master of a person who commits a tort is liable wherever the person in committing the tort was acting as his servant, that is, where he commits the tort in the course of doing something which he is employed to do (o), or where the tort committed is an act done within the apparent scope of the servant's authority and in the course of his employment (p).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Principal and Agent.

946. A person is responsible for a tortious act, although it is not actually committed by him, if it is committed by a person who is, in committing the act, his agent for that purpose, that is, wherever the person is expressly authorised by him to do the particular act or some other act which necessarily results in the tortious act, or where the act is within the scope of the authority of the person committing it measured by reference to his ordinary employment or duties (q), or is afterwards ratified (a).

947. All the members of a firm are liable for torts committed by a partner in the ordinary course of business as carried on by the firm (b) or with the authority of the partners (c).

Liability of partners.

SUB-SECT. 4.—Independent Contractor.

948. Where a tortious act is committed in the performance of some term of a contract, that fact does not of itself render liable the person for whose benefit such performance enures. If the performance of that term is undertaken by an independent contractor (d) who acts as such, and not as a servant or agent of the other party to the contract, the liability attaches to such independent contractor, but if such other party retains in his own hands the control over or interferes with such performance he remains responsible (e).

a specified result, employing his own means to produce that result, and is in performing his contract entirely independent of any control by or interference from the person with whom he has contracted (f). An independent contractor is to be distinguished from a servant by the test whether or not the person with whom he contracts retains the power of directing what work is to be done and of controlling the manner of doing it (g), and from an agent by the test that he is not bound to obey instructions other than those which are expressed in or implied by the terms of his contract (h).

950. No one can be made liable for an act or breach of duty unless it is traceable to himself (i) or some person for whom he is in respect of it responsible (k), and where a person employs an independent contractor to do some lawful work which does not, and in the natural course of things will not, involve or result in any duty either towards the community or towards a third party, and a tort is committed in the course of such employment by such independent contractor, the employer is not liable, even though the tort is committed in the doing of work which will ultimately be for his benefit (a).

951. Where a person employs another to do work which does, or in the natural course of things will (b), involve or result in a duty on the employer either towards the community or towards a third party, the employer cannot escape the responsibility for the performance of that duty by employing someone else to perform it, however competent such person may be, even though such person is an independent contractor and has agreed to assume the whole responsibility (c).

SUB-SECT. 5.—*Husband and Wife.*SECT. 2.
Liability
in Tort for Acts of Others.

952. A husband is during coverture liable to be sued jointly with his wife for any tort committed by her during coverture (d), excepting where the tort is a fraud connected with a contract of the wife by means of which the wife obtains the contract (e).

Husband's liability to third persons.

A husband is also liable in respect of any tort committed before marriage by the wife to the extent of any property which he received from or through her (f).

The liability of a husband in respect of his wife's torts is terminated by the death of the wife, or by divorce or judicial separation (g).

953. A husband cannot during coverture sue his wife for a tort even in respect of his property. A wife cannot during coverture sue her husband for a tort except for the security and protection of her separate property (h).

Liability to each other.

SUB-SECT. 6.—Liability under Guarantee or Contract of Indemnity.

954. Although a tort involves the commission of some act of a wrongful nature, a contract guaranteeing another against, or indemnifying another in respect of, a tort or its consequences is not invalid in this respect (i) unless the giving of a guarantee or of an indemnity is contrary to public policy (j), or the guarantee is so framed that the commission of an illegal act is or may be presumed to be contemplated by the parties to the contract (k).

Indemnity against tort.

SECT. 3.—*Liability when Tort Committed by Several Persons.*SUB-SECT. 1.—Joint Tortfeasors.

955. Where two or more persons have so conducted themselves as to be liable to be jointly sued, each is responsible for the injury sustained by reason of their common act (l). Where several persons so concur in some act or default which is tortious that each of them is responsible for the breach of duty, they are called joint tortfeasors. A person whose legal right is injured by a tort so committed has a right of action against any or all of such joint tortfeasors (m), unless he stands in such a relation to one of them as to be responsible for his act or default (n). Each of such joint tortfeasors may be sued alone and compelled by execution to pay the damages compensating for the whole loss (o).

The fact that two or more persons have concurred or assisted in or contributed to an act which has caused damage is not of itself sufficient to make such persons jointly liable, unless by reason of a joint duty being owed to the person who has suffered damage, or on some other ground, relief may be claimed against such persons jointly (p).

Successive
torts.

956. The fact that a person has himself committed some tortious act which led up to and resulted in a tortious act committed by some other person renders the former person liable if his act was a part of the true cause of the injury, but not otherwise (q). Accordingly where between a tortious act and an injury consequent thereon some other tortious act intervenes, unless the intervention is such that the original act is not the true cause of the injury, both acts contribute to the tort, and the person doing the first act remains liable (r).

Judgment against joint tortfeasors.

957. Where two or more joint tortfeasors commit a tort there is only one cause of action, and judgment may be recovered against any or all of them for the whole amount of the damages (s).

If all are sued and judgment obtained against all, execution may go against one and the whole of the damages may be obtained from him, and in no case can any contribution among such tortfeasors be obtained by action at law (t).

SECT. 3.
Liability
when Tort Committed by Several Persons.

Acts amounting to conspiracy.

SUB-SECT. 2.—Conspiracy.

958. Conspiracy consists in two or more persons agreeing together to do something contrary to law or wrongful and harmful towards another person, or to use unlawful means in the carrying out of an object not otherwise unlawful (y). Where two or more persons thus conspire (a) to do, and in pursuance thereof do, an act which causes damage to another (b), they commit a tort for which they or any one of them can be sued (c).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Contribution between Joint Tortfeasors.

959. Wrongdoers cannot have redress or contribution against each other in respect of matters arising out of the wrong done (d), and accordingly one of several joint tortfeasors cannot recover contribution from another in respect of damages paid to the injured party if he knew, or must be presumed to have known, that in committing the tort he was doing an unlawful act (e).

A conclusive election to waive the tort may have the same effect, but a mere acceptance back of part of the proceeds is not necessarily such an election (Rice v. Reed, [1900] 1 Q. B. 54, C. A.). A covenant not to sue does not have the same effect (Duck v. Mayeu, [1892] 2 Q. B. 511, C. A.).

Part III.—Remedies for Tort.

SECT. 1.

Abatement.

Duty to minimise damage.

Consequent injury to

960. A person injured by a tortious act owes a duty to himself, and to any person liable for the injury, to take any reasonable step available to him for the purpose of minimising the resulting damage, and has a legal justification for any step which he bond fide and reasonably takes for that purpose (f). Where alternative methods exist he is bound to choose that which he reasonably believes to be the least injurious to others, and if by one of such alternative methods a wrong is done to an innocent third party or the public, he is not justified in adopting that method (g).

961. A person who is or has been engaged in committing a tortious act which is a legal wrong cannot bring an action in respect of any injury sustained by himself which arises to such an extent out of such act that his own tortious act would constitute an essential element in his cause of action (h). It follows that any other person can, without rendering himself liable to an action at the suit of the tortfeasor, take such steps as are necessary to limit the damage done by a tortious act, provided that such steps are so closely connected with the tortious act that when all the circumstances are stated the steps taken and the tortious act must be regarded as one transaction (i).

SECT. 2.—Action for Damages or Injunction.

Injunction
or damages.

962. Wherever a tortious act of a continuing nature which affects property, or which, if it does not affect property, is not merely criminal or illegal (j), is being committed or has been committed and a repetition of it is threatened, the court (k) has jurisdiction to grant an injunction on the application of any person aggrieved, and either before or after judgment has power to grant an injunction either upon or without terms as may be just (l), or may award damages in lieu of an injunction (m). Where a tortious act has not been committed, but there is a threat to commit such an act, the court has jurisdiction to grant an injunction (n), but cannot award damages in lieu thereof.

SECT. 2.
Action for Damages or Injunction

963. A bare right of action for damages for tort is not assignable (o), but where by virtue of an assignment of any property or rights, with notice thereof, the assignee is brought into such a relation with the party committing an act that the act involves a breach of duty to, and is therefore a tortious act as against, him as such assignee, he may be entitled to an injunction or damages as incident to such property or rights (p).

Injunction
only.
Rights of assignee.

964. Where a tortious act is committed abroad an action can be maintained in the English courts provided that the act complained of is actionable by the law of this country and not justifiable by the law of the country where it is committed (q). The jurisdiction of the English courts may, however, be ousted by proving an exclusive jurisdiction over the matter by the courts of the country where the tort was committed, or an act of the legislature of that country, whether retrospective or not, protecting the tortfeasor from proceedings in respect of it (r); and the jurisdiction of the English courts is ousted where a question of title to foreign land is involved, and can only be exercised by consent when the tortious act concerns foreign land without directly affecting the title to it (s).

SECT. 3.—Personal Disability for Suing in Tort.

965. Any person, natural or artificial (t), who is injured by a tort may bring an action, subject to the rules of procedure in the court in which the action is brought (u), excepting, in certain cases and circumstances, an alien enemy (a), a bankrupt (b), a convict (c), or a person who has habitually and persistently instituted vexatious legal proceedings without reasonable ground and has been restrained from instituting proceedings without leave (d).

SECT. 4.

Felonious Torts.

Act both tortious and felonious.

SECT. 4.—Felonious Torts.

966. A tortious act may be felonious either because the commission of it is the commission of a felony or because it is so intimately related to an accompanying felonious act as to be tainted with its felonious character, and the intimacy of this relationship may be affected by the questions whether the tortious act and the felony were committed by the same person and whether they caused injury to the same person (e). Where a felony has been committed and a tortious act is so intimately connected with it as to be tainted with a felonious character, a person injured by the tort may be precluded (f) from recovering in respect of it until such steps have been taken by him as it is his duty as a citizen to take to bring the felon to justice (g). The court will not necessarily refuse on this ground to allow a civil action to proceed where the plaintiff is not the person against whom the felony was committed (h), or where the defendant is not the felon (i), or where criminal proceedings have without negligence on the part of the plaintiff become impossible (j), or where criminal proceedings have already been commenced by another person.

Part IV.—Defences to Actions of Tort.

SECT. 1.—*Justification and Excuse.*SUB-SECT. 1.—In General.

Right of action where no justification or excuse.

967. The right of action in respect of a tort arises out of the duty of a citizen so to exercise his own rights and perform his own duties that he shall not without legal justification or excuse injure the legal rights of others, and is accordingly given to the person injured in respect of such violation of his rights as is without legal justification or excuse (k).

A person may justify or excuse an act or omission which, as being injurious to another, requires justification or excuse by pleading overwhelming necessity or a sufficiently urgent duty to do or to omit the doing of such act, as the case may be (l). The duty which is so pleaded may be owed to the State (m), or to the person himself, (e) White v. Spettigue (1845), 13 M. & W. 603.

(f) The claim is not demurrable (Koope v. d'Avigdor (1883), 10 Q. B. D. 412), but may be precluded by the rule already stated, that the court will not connive at a failure to perform the duty of bringing a criminal to justice. No right of action can arise from a felony or misdemeanour committed by the plaintiff himself (In the Estate of Hall, Hall v. Knight and Baxter (1913), 29 T. L. R. 769).

SECT. 1.
Justification
and

SUB-SECT. 2.—Act of God.

968. The laws of a civilised society are based on the supposition that natural phenomena will pursue an ordered course and that the ordinary sequences of cause and effect which may be reasonably expected in such ordered course will result unless some conscious act of a human being intervenes (n).

Ordinary course of nature.

When these ordinary sequences are broken, not by the conscious act of a human being (o), but by some event which is out of the ordinary course of nature (p), the supposition on which the laws are based may be departed from to such an extent that it will not be just to exact the performance of some duty imposed on or voluntarily undertaken by someone on the understanding that such a breach would not occur. Such a breach of the ordinary course of nature described as the act of God exists where the accident for which it is sought to make a person liable is solely due, not to human intervention, but to natural causes which could not have been foreseen and could not have been avoided by any amount of foresight and care reasonably to be expected from that person (a). The ordinary rule of law with regard to such occurrences is expressed in the maxim actus Dei nemini facit injuriam (b). This

The act of God is distinct from "inevitable accident" (Trent and Mersey Navigation v. Wood (1785), 4 Doug. (K. rule applies to duties created by the common law (c), or by a statute which confirms the common law (d), or arising out of implied contracts (e); but it does not apply to duties or obligations created by express contract (f), in respect of which the rule is that a party who undertakes a duty or obligation by express contract is bound to make it good notwithstanding that its performance is rendered impossible by an act of God (g), nor does it apply to an obligation created by a statute which without qualification requires the performance of it (h).

Act of God gives no right of action.

969. Accordingly a person who has not come of his own free will or been placed by law under an obligation to insure another against an injury, however caused (i), is not liable in respect of an injury which is caused by an act of nature of so irresistible a character principle, see 22 Lib. Ass. pl. 41; Anon. (1366), Y. B. 40 Edw. 3, 5, 6, pl. 11; Mouse's Case (1608), 12 Co. that by no reasonable precaution in the circumstances could the injury have been prevented (k), and where the injury following on an act which unless excused would be tortious is caused by such an act of nature no liability will result from it. Where, however, the tortious act contributes to bring about the injury, the tortfeasor is liable even though the injury would not have happened but for such an act of nature, and the extraordinary nature of the circumstances in such a case affords no excuse (l), except as regards such part of the damage as can be clearly and distinctly attributed to the act of God and not to the tortious act (m).

SECT. 1.
Justification
and Excuse.

SUB-SECT. 3.—Act of State.

970. An act which is done by the State itself (n), or, in other words, which is an act of the sovereign power, gives no right of action (o).

Act of sovereign power.

SUB-SECT. 4.—Statutory Authority.

971. An act which is ordered by the State itself gives no right of action unless the State directs that there shall be such a right (p). Accordingly, where Parliament has directed or authorised the doing of a particular thing which, but for such direction or authority, would be tortious, any damage directly resulting from doing it for the purpose indicated and not due to negligence or unreasonable conduct in the doing of it gives no right of action (q). In such cases, when the particular act authorised directly causes the injury, Parliament must be taken to have authorised the injury.

Act done under express statutory authority.

972. In addition to the cases where the particular thing which causes injury is directed or authorised, there are numerous and important duties imposed by statute which involve the possibility of committing acts which may or may not result in injury to individuals, and in these cases if injury ensues it is necessary to examine the nature of the duty imposed in order to see whether it justifies or excuses the injury.

Acts done in pursuance of statutory duties.

Such duties may be classified as being or arising out of (1) duties

SECT. 1. expressly imposed; (2) obligations; (3) powers; (4) property; Justification and Excuse. and (5) rights.

A duty or obligation imposed or a power given by statute to do something from which an injury ensues without being expressly authorised may be (1) a duty, obligation, or power to attain an end without defining the means by which that end is to be attained, or (2) a duty, obligation, or power to do a certain act or series of acts which may or may not result in an injury.

Injury resulting from performance of statutory duty.

973. Where a duty or obligation is imposed or a power or right is given to do some act which may or may not result in an injury, but does in fact cause the injury, the person committing such act has a legal excuse for the injury done if he proves that he committed it in, or that it necessarily resulted (in circumstances for which he is not responsible) from, the performance of such duty or obligation, or the exercise of such power or right (a).

Where by statute a duty or obligation is imposed to attain an end, or a power or right is given to exercise certain functions and the attainment of the end by the means ordinarily employed to attain that end, or the ordinary and reasonable exercise of the functions, as the case may be, necessarily involves an injury, then, in the absence of special provisions in the statute giving the authority, any injury so involved is covered by the authority given by the statute, and a person suffering such injury has no right of action in respect of it (b).

Liability for negligence.

In such cases Parliament must be assumed to have anticipated such injury, and the statutory authority affords a legal justification for the doing of the act, but does not cover any injury which results not from the doing of the act but from negligence in the doing of it (c).

Injury not necessarily resulting from performance of duty.

974. Where by statute a duty or obligation is imposed to attain an end or a power or right is given to exercise certain functions, and the attainment of that end by the means ordinarily employed for that purpose (d), or the ordinary and reasonable exercise of such functions, as the case may be, may, but does not necessarily, involve an injury to anyone (e), there is an obligation on the undertakers to take all reasonable steps to prevent the occurrence of such injury, and if in the course of attaining that end or exercising those functions a needless injury is caused by a tortious act the statutory authority affords no legal justification for it (f).

SECT. 1.
Justification
and Excuse.

975. Where the duty which involves the possibility of committing an act which may or may not cause injury arises merely out of the possession of property acquired pursuant to statutory powers, the fact that the property has been so acquired does not of itself afford any justification for the commission of a tortious act (g). Such justification, if it exists, must be sought for from some duty, obligation, power, or right (h).

Duty arising from possession of property.

(e) The doctrine of Rylands v. Fletcher (1868), L. R. 3 H. L. 330, may apply, for example, to paving by a tramway company (West v. Bristol Tramways Co., [1908] 2 K. B. 14, C. A.), or to a sewer owned by a local authority, where there is a common law duty to see that the sewage does not escape to the injury of others (Jones v. Llanrwst Urban Council, [1911] 1 Ch. 393; compare Lambert v. Loucestoft Corporation, [1901] 1 K. B. 590); see titles NEGLIGENCE, Vol. XXI., p. 467; NUISANCE, Vol. XXI., pp. 519 et seq., 529; SEWERS AND DRAINS, Vol. XXV., p. 741.

(i) The defence of "Not guilty" by statute is preserved by the Judicature Acts (see R. S. C., Ord. 19, r. 12), and, although repealed by the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61), s. 2 (e), so far as it was provided for public authorities by public general statutes, it still remains available to private persons (Lyles v. Southend-on-Sea Corporation, [1905] 2 K. B. 1, 13, C. A.), or under local and personal Acts, if passed since the 10th August, 1842 (Boden v. Smith (1849), 13 Jur. 428), but not if passed before that date (Limitations of Actions and Costs Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 97), s. 3). Subject to these limitations the defence applies in cases of illegal distress (see title DISTRESS, Vol. XI., p. 205), and to actions for penalties, arrest and imprisonment by persons having authority to arrest or imprison, and for acts done under the Highways, Metropolis Management, County Courts, or Customs and Excise Acts (see title PLEADING, Vol. XXII., pp. 448, 449). SECT. 1.

Justification
and Excuse.When justifiable.

SUB-SECT. 5.—Protection of Person or Property.

977. Every person is justified in taking all reasonable and proper steps to defend himself (l) and those under his care (m), and his or their property (n), from injury or imminent risk of injury, whether such injury or risk arises from an attack by or from any other act or omission of another person, or from a natural cause without the intervention of human agency (o), and if injury results to another person from the taking of such steps the fact that such injury or risk existed and that such steps were required and were taken for the purpose of obviating it may afford a justification or excuse (p).

Self-defence.

Where such injury or risk arises from an attack by or from any other act or omission of the person who is injured which is itself unlawful, all reasonable and proper steps required and taken for the purpose of obviating such injury or risk are justified (q), and form a good ground of defence against the person who is causing such

Vol. XXIII., pp. 338 et seq.; Shackleton v. Swift, [1913] 2 K. B. 304, C. A. (detention of alleged lunatic).

(l) The acts must be done "in necessary self-defence" (R. S. C., Appendix D, s. VI.). The defence that they were so done does not cover any excess (Dean v. Taylor (1855), 11 Exch. 68; see title TRESPASS, pp. 856, 868, 875, post).

(m) Thus, an assault may be justified if made by a husband in defence of his wife, a master in defence of his servant, or a parent in defence of his child, or vice versa in each case; see titles CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 609; INFANTS AND CHILDREN, Vol. XVII., p. 114; TRESPASS, pp. 861, 862, 890, post; Leigh v. Gladstone (1909), 26 T. L. R. 139. There may also be a duty on a person to take steps where there is danger to the lives of persons who are not under his care (Handcock v. Baker (1800), 2 Bos. & P. 260; and see title SHIPPING AND NAVIGATION, Vol. XXVI., pp. 95, 561, and Part XI.), but no such duty arises when property only is in danger (Scaramanga v. Stamp (1880), 5 C. P. D. 295, C. A.). As to arrest, see title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., pp. 296, 307.

(n) Deane v. Clayton (1817), 7 Taunt. 489, 530; Maxey Drainage Board v. Great Northern Railway (1912), 106 L. T. 429; Greyvenstejn v. Hattingh, [1911] A. C. 355, P. C.; and see title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 609. Including an incorporeal hereditament, such as a right of shooting (Harrison v. Rulland (Duke), [1893] 1 Q. B. 142, C. A.). The act, to be justified, must be reasonably necessary for the purpose of saving the property from the peril (Cope v. Sharpe (No. 2), [1912] 1 K. B. 496, C. A.; see title ANIMALS, Vol. I., pp. 395, 396), which would not be the case if much less injurious means were available for that purpose (Miles v. Hutchings, [1903], 2 K. B. 714; and see title GAME, Vol. XV., pp. 227, 228). For defence of property wounding is not justified (2 Co. Inst. 316).

(o) Where a person is charged with damage which he could not possibly prevent by the exercise of such ordinary care, caution and skill as may reasonably be required, he is entitled to say that such damage is the result of an inevitable accident (The Schwan, The Albano, [1892] P. 410, C. A.), whether such accident takes place at sea or on land (ibid., at p. 434); and if through the happening of events over which he has no control he is put into such a position that, in spite of the exercise of ordinary care, caution and skill, he does damage, he is not responsible for it (ibid.; see title SHIPPING AND NAVIGATION, Vol. XXVI., Part XI.).

injury or risk, even though the steps taken would, but for such excuse, have been tortious (r).

SECT. 1.
Justification
and Excuse.

Averting danger.

Where such risk arises from a natural cause without the intervention of human agency (s) or from an act or omission of a third party (t), or from an act, which is not in the circumstances unlawful, of the party injured, and the risk is still imminent, any act which is bonâ fide and reasonably done with the sole intention and in pursuance of the duty of obviating such risk (u) may be justified, although otherwise tortious, if that which would give the act its tortious character is a result of the performance of such duty.

SUB-SECT. 6.—Justification in Particular Classes of Cases.

978. In particular classes of cases of tort a justification or excuse may be available which arises out of the nature of the act alleged to be tortious (w) or out of the relations between the parties concerned (x).

Special cases.

979. A person may inflict an injury on another in the course of performing some duty owed to the person injured arising out of a personal, contractual, or other relationship between them, and when the act resulting in such injury is done in the performance of such duty and with the bonâ fide intention of benefiting the person injured, it is justified, and does not merely by reason of its otherwise tortious character give rise to a right of action (a).

Relation of parties.

In cases where the person occasioning and the person suffering an injury are fellow servants engaged in a common employment for and under the same master, the master is not, excepting under statute, liable for the consequences of the injury (b).

(u) See title NEGLIGENCE, Vol. XXI., p. 479. Where the danger is not common to the party committing and the party suffering the injury, the mere fact that what has happened already will, if not remedied, result in danger in the future does not justify an injury to another which results from a voluntary election to get rid of the danger by a step which causes such injury (Whalley v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Rail. Co., supra).

(a) As to the parent's duty to educate and right to chastise his child, see titles INFANTS AND CHILDREN, Vol. XVII., pp. 107, 115; TRESPASS, p. 876, post; as to the relations of master and scholar, see title EDUCATION, Vol. XII., p. 124; and of master and apprentice, see title MASTER AND SERVANT, Vol. XX., p. 106.

(b) See title MASTER AND SERVANT, Vol. XX., p. 132.

SECT. 1.
Justification
and Excuse.

Privilege.
Effect of release.

In cases of defamation (c) privilege which affords a ground of defence may arise either from the nature of the publication or from the relations between the parties (d).

SUB-SECT. 7.—Release.

980. If a person of full age and competent understanding who has suffered an injury by reason of a tortious act with full knowledge of all the facts which give him a right of action elects to release such right, such release, even though made without consideration, is binding if made by deed (e).

If made for any consideration, however small and however inadequate it may be as compensation for the injury suffered, it gives ground for a plea of accord and satisfaction (f), and if made with one of several joint tortfeasors may operate to discharge the right of action as against all (g).

SUB-SECT. 8.—Waiver and Consent.

Leave and licence.

981. Every person of full age and competent understanding being capable of binding himself not to pursue a right of action, even after such right has accrued, is a fortiori capable of so doing while such right is in course of accruing. Accordingly, where a tortious act is in course of being committed which may be expected to result in an injury to a person of full age and competent understanding, any words or acts of such person from which if accepted and acted on by a tortfeasor it might be inferred that he had agreed to forego his resulting right of action may afford a legal justification or excuse (h). Thus, if such a person to whom a duty is owed either expressly or impliedly authorises a departure from the duty owed to him and injury results to him from an act which is not contrary to law (i), but which would but for such authorisation give rise to a cause of action, such authorisation may afford ground for a defence based on leave and licence (j).

When a person who suffers injury from an act or default is capable of agreeing and has himself agreed to and invited that very act or default, he has no right of action in respect of it (k).

Waiver.

982. Even though the person injured has not expressly invited the very act or default, a defence may exist when waiver is proved. Waiver is the abandonment of a right, and may be express or may be implied from conduct which is inconsistent with the continuance of the right (l). A mere statement of an intention not to insist on a right does not suffice unless it is so made and acted on as to estop the party making it from relying on the right, that is, unless it operates as a release, and it cannot so operate unless the person making it has full knowledge of the rights which he releases (m).

(d) Ibid., pp. 685 et seq. Where there is a joint tort the express malice of one affects all the joint tortfeasors even though otherwise privileged (Smith v. Streatfeild (1913), 109 L. T. 173).

SECT. 1.
Justification
and Excuse.

983. If the person who suffers from the injury, being of competent age and understanding, has with, full knowledge of the duty owed to him and of the breach of it and the resulting risk, himself voluntarily incurred that risk so that the proximate cause of the injury may reasonably be said to have been his own voluntary act, then, whether the consent estops him from claiming or not, the person who has committed the breach of duty can defend himself on the ground that volenti non fit injuria (n).

Volenti non fit injuria.

SUB-SECT. 9.—Contributory Negligence.

984. If the person who suffers from the injury has in fact contributed to the injury by a wrongful act or default on his own part,* such contributory act or default may afford ground for a defence to an action by him. For example, if notwithstanding a wrongful act by an alleged tortfeasor the person injured might by the exercise of reasonable care have avoided the injury and negligently failed to avoid it, such contributory negligence may afford a ground of defence to an action (o). It does afford such a defence whenever it is the folly and recklessness of the plaintiff himself, and not the tortious act of the defendant, which was the real cause of the injury (p).

defence.

SECT. 2.—Statute of Limitations.

985. An action founded on a tort, in whatever court it may be brought (q), is within the spirit and meaning of the Statutes of Limitation (r). The period of time after which such action will be barred is not the same for all torts, being two years in an action of slander for the speaking of words which are actionable per se (s), four years in an action of trespass to the person (t), and six years in an action of libel or of slander if the words are not actionable per se (u).

The date from which time begins to run depends on the nature of the tort, and on the question whether the tort is or is not fraudulently concealed (v).

SECT. 3.—Death of Either Party.

Death of person injured.

986. The death of a person who has been injuriously affected in his personal capacity by a tortious act puts an end to the cause of action arising therefrom, but where a tortious act has injuriously affected the personal estate of a person who has since died, a right of action survives to his personal representatives in respect of the damage actually caused to such estate (x), and where the death has resulted from a tortious act, an action may be brought for the benefit of the wife, husband, parent, or child of the deceased for the injury resulting to them from such death (a).

Death of
tortfeasor.

987. The death of the person who has committed a tortious act affords a defence to his personal representative against a claim for unliquidated damages arising out of the tort (b); but an action may be brought for any wrong done to another in respect of his property within six months before the death against the personal representatives within six months after they have taken on themselves the administration (c), and the death of a tortfeasor does not afford a defence to a claim for such property as has been added to the estate of the tortfeasor as a result of the tort (d).

SECT. 4.—Bankruptcy.

Distinction between torts to property and to person.

988. It is a good defence to an action by a bankrupt that the entire cause of action has passed to the trustee in bankruptcy, and all rights of action, whether in contract or in tort, do so pass which relate directly to the bankrupt's property and can be turned into assets (e); but where a tort causes bodily or mental suffering or personal inconvenience to the bankrupt, or injury to his person or reputation, the right of action remains with the bankrupt (f), and the trustee cannot intercept the proceeds so far as they are required for the maintenance of the bankrupt or his family (g). When one tort causes damage both to the property and to the person of the bankrupt and results in distinct causes of action, the bankrupt may sue as well as the trustee (h).

Part I.—Meaning of “Trade” and “Business.”

PART I.
Meaning of “Trade”
and
Trade.

989. “Trade” in its primary meaning is the exchanging of goods for goods or goods for money; and in a secondary meaning it is any business carried on with a view to profit, whether manual or mercantile, as distinguished from the liberal arts or learned professions and from agriculture (a). The word, however, is one of very

(a) The statement in the text summarises the dictionary definitions; but as to the immateriality of “a view to profit” in the legal conception of the term, see note (n), p. 511, post. See Bank of India v. Wilson (1877), 3 Ex. D. 108, per POLLOCK, B., at p. 120; Taxation Commissioners v. Kirk, [1900] A. C. 588, 592, P. C. (“The word trade no doubt primarily means traffic by way of sale or exchange or commercial dealing, but may have a larger meaning so as to include manufactures”); Palmer v. Snow, [1900] 1 Q. B. 725, 727 (trade is buying and selling); Grainger & Son v. Gough, [1896] A. C. 325, per Lord HERSCHELL, at p. 336 (a wine merchant exercises his trade “by making or buying wine and selling it again with a view to profit”), per Lord DAVEY, at p. 345; Robinson v. Grosccourt (1695), 5 Mod. Rep. 104, 108 (music and dancing are not trades, but professions; compare Wannell v. London (City Chamberlain) (1725), 1 Stra. 675); Speak v. Powell (1873), L. R. 9 Exch. 25, 27 (the occupation of a circus proprietor is not a trade; nor is that of an actor or professional gymnast or theatre proprietor); Harris v. Amery (1865), L. R. 1 C. P. 148, 154 (banking is not a trade); Hall v. Franklin (1838), 3 M. & W. 259 (banking is included in the words “dealing for profit”); compare the distinction between trade and profession in relation to inhabited house duty, as to which see title INHABITED HOUSE DUTY, Vol. XVII., pp. 192, 193. Where statutes enacted that everyone might sell commodities in any city by gross or retail, they were held not to apply to artificers or manufacturers (City of London’s Case (1610), 8 Co. Rep. 121 b, 128 a). The making and using of a decoy for ducks was treated as trade (Keeble v. Hickeringill (1706), 11 East, 574, n.), but not the mere chance of capturing or enjoyment of the presence of animals feræ naturæ which come to a place of their own accord and are not fit for human food, such as rooks (Hannam v. Mockett (1824), 2 B. & C. 934; but see Read v. Edwards (1864), 17 C. B. (N. s.) 245, 258; Allen v. Flood, [1898] A. C. 1, per CAVE, J., at p. 36); see title GAME, Vol. XV., p. 252, note (l). As to the question where a trade is carried on, see Grainger & Son v. Gough, supra (a person does not necessarily carry on a trade in a country by exporting to that country or by merely soliciting orders through an agent in that country); San Paulo (Brazilian) Rail. Co. v. Carter, [1896] A. C. 31, 38; Crookston Brothers v. Inland Revenue, [1911] S. C. 217; and see titles CORPORATIONS, Vol. VIII., p. 395; INCOME TAX, Vol. XVI., pp. 646, 647. For an analysis of different kinds of trade, see the argument of SAWYER, A.-G., in Sandys v. East India Co. (1684), Skin. 197, 198. As to the meaning of “trade” and “business” in relation to the Bankruptcy Acts, see title BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY, Vol. II., pp. 173 et seq.; in relation to the Companies Acts, see ibid.; and title COMPANIES, Vol. V., p. 45; in relation to restrictive covenants in conveyances or leases, see title LANDLORD AND TENANT, Vol. XVIII., p. 516; in relation to the Married Women’s Property Acts, see title HUSBAND AND WIFE, Vol. XVI., pp. 352, 353, 369; in relation to income tax, see title INCOME TAX, Vol. XVI., pp. 643 et seq.; in relation to inhabited house duty, see title INHABITED HOUSE DUTY, Vol. XVII., pp. 192, 193; in relation to weights and measures, where the word is defined by statute, see Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 49), s. 19; and title WEIGHTS AND MEASURES. As to trade customs and usages, see titles CUSTOM AND USAGES, Vol. X., pp. 217 et seq.; INSURANCE, Vol. XVII., pp. 337, 342, 344, 346, 458. C.); Ryhope Coal Co. v. Foyer (1881), 7 Q. B. D. 485 (the business of working a coal mine may be a trade within the Income Tax Acts; but the word "concern" was also used); Re Incorporated Council of Law Reporting for England and Wales (Duty on Estate) (1888), 22 Q. B. D. 279 (a limited company publishing and selling law reports, but precluded from paying a dividend, apparently carries on a trade within the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 51), s. 11; but the word "business" was there also used). A circus proprietor is not a trader

(i) For note (i), see p. 511, post.

In connexion with trade unions the word “trade” clearly includes the disposal of his labour by a workman (k) and in the expression “restraint of trade” the word is used in its loosest sense to cover every kind of trade, business, profession or occupation (l).

PART I.
Meaning of “Trade”
and “Business.”
Business.

990. “Business” is a wider term, not synonymous with “trade,” and means practically anything which is an occupation as distinguished from a pleasure (m).

991. Profit or the intent to make profit is not an essential part of the legal definition of a trade or business; nor does payment or profit constitute that a trade or business which would not otherwise be such (n).

Profit not essential.

C. 1, per CAVE, J., at pp. 35, 36 (though on the point the learned judge was discussing his view was overruled by the House of Lords); and compare Fazakerley v. Wiltshire (1721), 1 Stra. 462. But under stat. (1562-3) 5 Eliz. c. 4 (now repealed) a journeyman was held not to be a trader; see p. 512, post; and compare Clark v. Denton (1830), 1 B. & Ad. 92 (a journeyman does not “use an art”); R. v. Slaughter (1700), 2 Salk. 611 (whether a fellmonger who only pulls wool from the skin is a trader is a question for a jury); compare title MASTER AND SERVANT, Vol. XX., pp. 90, 119.

Amery* (1865), L. R. 1 C. P. 148, per WILLES, J., at p. 154; Rolls v. Miller (1884), 27 Ch. D. 71, C. A. Sometimes the words “gain” or “profit” are expressly used, as in stat. (1817) 57 Geo. 3, c. 99, s. 3 (now repealed). PART I.
Meaning of "Trade"
and
"Business."

Exercising trade or business.

992. The words "to exercise a trade or business" imply that the trade or business must be habitually or systematically exercised: they do not apply to isolated transactions (o). Nor is it a trading for a person to make articles for his own use or the use of his family or of a family which he serves (p), or to work for his own purposes only (q).

T. L. R. 432), with no payment of dividends, is not an occupation "for the purposes of any trade or business . . . by which the occupier seeks a profit." Under the Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 4, farming and grazing was held to be "a business that has for its object the acquisition of gain" (Harris v. Amery (1865), L. R. 1 C. P. 148). But under stat. (1562-3) 5 Eliz. c. 4, which forbade any person to set up, occupy, use, or exercise any craft, mystery, or manual occupation in existence at the date of the Act, unless he had served an apprenticeship, the words were held to apply only to a person who got his living thereby (Shoyle v. Taylor (1607), Cro. Jac. 178; City of London's Case (1610), 8 Co. Rep. 121 b, 128 a). Stat. (1562-3) 5 Eliz. c. 4 was repealed by the Apprentices Act, 1814 (54 Geo. 3, c. 96), ss. 1, 2 (saving the order and custom of the City of London). Being a penal Act and in restraint of trade it was strictly construed, and under it a partner who shared profit and loss, but took no part in the management, was held not to be exercising the trade (Raynard v. Chase (1756), 1 Burr. 2); otherwise, where a person directed the trade himself (Hobbs v. Young (1691), 2 Salk. 610); see title PARTNERSHIP, Vol. XXII., pp. 4, 5. But exercising a trade by servants or apprentices was within the Act (Hobbs v. Young, supra), and, apparently, it is doubtful whether even under the Act Raynard v. Chase, supra, was good law. Only a master, and not a journeyman, was liable to penalties under the Act, for a journeyman was held not to exercise the trade (Hobbs v. Young (1691), as reported in 1 Show. 266, per Holt, C.J., at p. 268; Beach v. Turner (1769), 4 Burr. 2449; and see note (g), p. 525, post); compare title INCOME TAX, Vol. XVI., pp. 643, 644.

(o) Compare Grainger & Son v. Gough, [1896] A. C. 325, per Lord Morris, at p. 343 (dissenting on the main question in the case from the majority of the court); Spiers and Pond, Ltd. v. Green, [1912] 3 K. B. 576; Newman v. Oughton, [1911] 1 K. B. 792; see titles FOOD AND DRUGS, Vol. XV., p. 64, note (g); MONEY AND MONEY-LENDING, Vol. XXI., p. 44; But if a person carrying on a particular business does a single isolated preliminary first act in that business, he is carrying it on; see A.-G. v. Plymouth Corporation (1909), 100 L. T. 742, C. A., per BUCKLEY, L.J., at p. 744. As to the case of a "sleeping partner," see note (n), p. 511, ante; as to how far a sleeping partner is bound, see title PARTNERSHIP, Vol. XXII., pp. 24, 25.

(p) Shoyle v. Taylor, supra; City of London's Case, supra, at pp. 128 a, 129 a ("It is not properly said that one uses a manual occupation when he makes no more than for himself, as he who brews or bakes for his own use"); Ipswich Tailors' Case (1614), 11 Co. Rep. 53 a, 54 a (a domestic servant making garments for his master is not exercising a trade within stat. (1562-3) 5 Eliz. c. 4, or the bye-law of a corporation of tailors); Norris v. Staps (1616), Hob. 210, 211 (it is not exercising a trade to do it privately, as a tailor in a house, or the like); Hobbs v. Young, supra.

(q) Fazakerley v. Wiltshire (1721), 1 Stra. 462 (a bye-law regulating porters did not apply to a person carrying his own goods); A.-G. v. Plymouth Corporation, supra (it is not "carrying on the business of a wharfinger" to use one's own wharf for loading and unloading materials for one's own works; nor is it "permitting" such a business to be carried on to lease neighbouring land with leave to the lessee to use the wharf for loading or unloading materials for his own works).

The Board of Trade.

Functions of Board of Trade.

993. The Board of Trade is the general supervising authority over the trade, industry, and navigation of the British Empire (a).

The Board is by statute the supervising and regulating authority, with executive and administrative powers and powers of inquiry and investigation, in the following matters, in addition to the matters more fully dealt with in this title (b):—railways and canals (c); tramways (d); the supply of gas (e), water (f) and electric light (g); companies generally (h); patents, designs, and trade marks (i); merchandise marks (j); merchant shipping (k); registration of births and deaths at sea (l); boiler explosions (m); harbours (n); foreshores (o); telegraphs (p); lighthouses (q); coinage (r); explosives (s); weights and measures (t); rifle ranges adjoining the sea or tidal waters (u); assurance companies (v); bankruptcy (w); labour exchanges (x); unemployment insurance (y), and sea fisheries (z).

SECT. 2.
Census of Production.

Date of census.

Advisory committee.

Forms.

SECT. 2.—Census of Production.

994. A census of production was taken in 1908, and is to be taken after that date at intervals prescribed by an order of the Board of Trade (a). The taking of the census is superintended by the Board, which issues the necessary forms and instructions (b), and as soon as possible after its completion a report and summary of the statistics compiled are presented to Parliament (c).

995. For the purposes of the census the Board of Trade appoints a committee or committees, including persons conversant with the conditions of and engaged in various trades and industries, to advise the Board in the preparation of forms and instructions (d). The members of the committee receive such travelling and other allowances as the Board may fix (e). No member of a committee is permitted as such to see any individual return, or to be made acquainted with any information contained in any answer to any question put for the purposes of the census (f).

996. The Board of Trade prepares forms to be filled up by occupiers of factories and workshops (g); by the owner, agent, or manager of any mine or quarry; by every builder; by every person who by way of trade or business (h) executes works of construction, alteration or repair of railroads, tramroads, and the like; by every person who by way of trade or business (h) gives out work to be done off his premises; and by every person carrying on any other trade or business (h) which may be prescribed (i). The forms require such particulars, for the calendar year preceding the date of the census, or any part of such year, as may be necessary for ascertaining the quantity and value of production (k).

(a) Census of Production Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 49), s. 1. By an Order of the Board of Trade dated the 28th October, 1911, the census is to be taken in 1913, and thereafter in every fifth year. As to the census of population, see title CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, Vol. VI., pp. 343 et seq.

(h) For the meaning of these words, see pp. 509 et seq., ante. In the expression "trade or business" is included the exercise and performance, by a local or other public authority, of its powers and duties (Census of Production Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 49), s. 7). Where a trade or business is carried on by a company by means of a subsidiary company or companies, any two or more returns are to be treated as one (ibid., s. 6 (4)). A company is "subsidiary" if not less than three-fourths of its ordinary share capital is held by the other company (ibid.). As to subsidiary companies generally, see title COMPANIES, Vol. V., p. 640.

(i) Census of Production Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 49), s. 3 (1), Schedule; see the Rules of the 4th January, 1913, 20th January, 1913, and 14th February, 1913, thereunder (Stat. R. & O., 1913, Nos. 34, 194, 195).

(k) The required particulars may include the nature of the trade, the output, number of working days, number of persons employed, power used or generated and the like; but not the amount of wages (ibid.,

Every form must be filled up, signed, and delivered by the date prescribed by notice in writing by the Board (l). Rules are made for the carrying out of the census by the Board in consultation with the Home Secretary (m); and in the case of factories, workshops, mines or quarries the Home Secretary has power, by arrangement with the Board, to issue and collect the necessary forms and to cause any statistical returns which he is authorised under any enactment to obtain to be collected at the same time and, if convenient, upon the same forms (n).

SECT. 2.
Census of Production.

997. Either the Board of Trade or the Home Secretary may obtain, either by the insertion of additional particulars or by the circulation of additional forms, any further statistical or other information which any person may be willing to supply (o). By the rules provision may be made for the exemption, either wholly or in part and conditionally or unconditionally, of any prescribed person or class of persons from the obligation to make returns (p).

Additional information.

998. Provision is made for ensuring the secrecy of individual returns, and the avoidance of the disclosure of trade secrets and trading profits, the penalty for disclosure or wrongful use of information being imprisonment for not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, or a fine of unspecified amount, or both imprisonment and fine (a).

Secrecy.

The penalty for wilful refusal or neglect to fill up, sign, or deliver a form, or for wilfully making a false return or for refusing to answer or wilfully giving a false answer to any necessary question, is a fine not exceeding £10, and in the case of a continuing offence a further fine not exceeding £5 for each day during which the offence continues. In the case of a false return or answer the offence continues till a true return or answer is made (b).

Penalties.

s. 3 (1)). Where it is inconvenient to take the calendar year prescribed, some other period may be substituted (Census of Production Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 49), s. 3 (1) (a)); particulars as to output may include particulars of the aggregate estimated value of the materials used, and the total amount paid to contractors for work given out to them (ibid., s. 3 (1) (b)); and particulars as to quantity of output are only required in the case of articles which are required by the official import and export list to be entered on importation into, or exportation from, the United Kingdom (ibid., s. 3 (1) (c)). As to the provisions relating to the report of goods on importation, see title REVENUE, Vol. XXIV., pp. 587, 588.

The Home Secretary may direct that the intervals at which returns are to be made under the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 22), s. 130, are to be the same as the intervals at which a census is directed (Census of Production Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 49), s. 10).

SECT. 3.
Inquiries
and Arbitrations by the Board of Trade.

Provisions as to inquiries.

SECT. 3.—Inquiries and Arbitrations by the Board of Trade.

999. Under many of the general Acts already referred to (c), the Board of Trade is directed or authorised to hold inquiries, and when required or authorised by any special Act (d) to sanction, approve, confirm or determine any appointment, matter or thing, or to make any order or do any other matter or thing for the purposes of a special Act, the Board is empowered to make such inquiry as may be necessary (e); such inquiry may be held by any person or persons duly authorised by the Board (f). When application is made to the Board in pursuance of a special Act to be arbitrator, or to appoint an arbitrator, or to hold an inquiry, or to give its sanction, approval, confirmation or determination, or to make an order, all expenses of the Board are to be defrayed by the parties to the application, or such of them, subject to any provision in the special Act, as the Board may direct; or they may, by order of the Board, be paid as the costs of the arbitration (g).

SECT. 4.—Conciliation Boards.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Definition.

Settlement of disputes.

1000. A conciliation board is any board constituted for the purpose of settling disputes between employers and workmen by conciliation or arbitration, or any association or body authorised by an agreement in writing made between employers and workmen to deal with such disputes (h).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Registration.

Application.

1001. A conciliation board may apply to the Board of Trade for registration, sending with its application copies of its constitution, bye-laws and regulations, with such other information as the Board of Trade may reasonably require (i).

The Board of Trade keeps a register of conciliation boards, with (c) See p. 513, ante.

(d) Namely, a local or local and personal Act, or an Act of a local or personal nature, including a provisional order of the Board confirmed by Act of Parliament, and a certificate granted by the Board under the Railways Construction Facilities Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 121) (Board of Trade Arbitrations etc. Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 40), s. 4); see title RAILWAYS AND CANALS, Vol. XXIII., pp. 739, 740.

the name and principal office of each and such other particulars as it thinks expedient (j). The name of any board may be removed from the register either on a written application by the board (k), or if the Board of Trade is satisfied that it has ceased to exist or to act (l).

SECT. 4.
Conciliation Boards.
Register.

Every registered conciliation board must furnish such returns, reports of its proceedings, and other documents as the Board of Trade may reasonably require (m).

Returns.

SUB-SECT. 3.—Procedure.

1002. Proceedings for conciliation before a registered conciliation board must, subject to any agreement to the contrary, be conducted in accordance with the regulations of the board (n). The Arbitration Act, 1889 (o), does not apply to the settlement by arbitration of any difference or dispute to which the Conciliation Act, 1896 (p), applies; but any such arbitration proceedings must be conducted in accordance with such of the provisions of the Arbitration Act, 1889 (o), or such of the regulations of the conciliation board, or under such other rules or regulations as may be agreed upon by the parties (q).

Conduct of proceedings.

SUB-SECT. 4.—Local Inquiries, Conciliation, and Arbitration.

1003. The Board of Trade has power, if it appears to the Board that in any district or trade adequate means do not exist for having disputes submitted to a conciliation board, to appoint any person or persons to inquire into the conditions of the district or trade and to confer with the employers and employed, and, if the Board thinks fit, with any local authority or body, as to the expediency of establishing a conciliation board for the district or trade (r).

Establish-
board.

1004. The Board of Trade has power, where a difference exists or is apprehended between an employer, or any class of employers, and workmen, or between different classes of workmen, to do any or all of the following things:—To inquire into the causes and circumstances of the difference (s); to take steps for the purpose of enabling the parties to the difference to meet together, by themselves or their representatives, under the presidency of a chairman mutually agreed upon or nominated by the Board or by some other person or body, with a view to the amicable settlement of the difference (t); to appoint a person or persons to act as a conciliator or board of conciliation, on the application of employers or workmen interested, and after taking into consideration the existence and adequacy of means available for conciliation in the district or trade and the circumstances of the case (u); and to appoint an arbitrator on the application of both parties (a).

Duties of conciliator.

1005. A conciliator so appointed is to inquire into the causes and circumstances of the difference by communication with the parties and otherwise to endeavour to bring about a settlement. He reports to the Board of Trade; and if a settlement is effected, either by conciliation or arbitration, a memorandum of the terms is to be drawn up and signed by the parties or their representatives, and a copy of such memorandum is to be delivered to and kept by the Board (b).

SUB-SECT. 5.—Reports.

Report to Parliament.

1006. The Board of Trade must from time to time present to Parliament a report of its proceedings under the Conciliation Act (c).

SECT. 5.—Trade Boards.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Nature and Object.

Regulation of wages.

1007. In the case of four specified trades (d) and any other trades specified in a provisional order made by the Board of Trade and confirmed by Parliament (e), provision is made by statute for the regulation of the rates of wages through the medium of trade boards, which are to be established, if practicable, by the Board of (u) Conciliation Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 30), s. 2 (1) (c).

(c) 59 & 60 Vict. c. 30, s. 5. Expenses incurred by the Board of Trade are defrayed out of moneys provided by Parliament (ibid., s. 6). The following Acts are repealed:—the Masters and Workmen Arbitration Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 96); the Councils of Conciliation Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 105); and the Arbitration (Masters and Workmen) Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 46).

(d) Namely, (1) ready-made and wholesale bespoke tailoring and any other branch of tailoring in which the Board of Trade considers that the system of manufacture is generally similar to that prevailing in the wholesale trade; (2) the making of boxes or parts thereof made wholly or partially of paper, cardboard, chip, or similar material; (3) machine-made lace and net finishing and mending or darning operations of lace curtain finishing; (4) hammered and dollied or tommied chain-making (Trade Boards Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 22), Sched.).

(e) Any other trade may be included if the Board of Trade is satisfied that the rate of wages prevailing in any branch of the trade is exceptionally low and that the other circumstances of the trade are such as to render the application of the Act expedient (ibid., s. 1 (1), (2)); and, on the other hand, a trade may be removed from the operation of the Act if the Board of Trade considers that the conditions of the trade have so altered as to render the application of the Act unnecessary (ibid., s. 1 (3)). As to provisional orders and petitions against them, see ibid., s. 1 (3), (5), (6); as to confirmation of provisional orders, see title PARLIAMENT, Vol. XXI., pp. 703, 740 et seq. Provisional orders have been made applying the Act to the following trades:—sugar, confectionery and food preserving, shirt-making, hollow ware making, linen and cotton embroidery, and calendering and machine ironing in steam laundries, but these have not yet been confirmed.

Trade for any trade, or any branch of work in any trade, to which the Act applies (f).

SECT. 5.
Trade Boards.

SUB-SECT. 2.—Constitution and Procedure.

1008. A trade board consists of representative and appointed members, chosen in accordance with regulations of the Board of Trade (g). Representative members are members representing employers and members representing workers in equal proportions (h). They are elected or nominated, or partly elected and partly nominated, as may be provided by the regulations; and in trades where a considerable proportion of home workers are engaged the regulations must provide for the representation of home workers (i). Representative members.

Appointed members may be appointed by the Board of Trade in such numbers as the Board thinks fit (k), and such of them act on each trade board or district trade committee as the Board of Trade may direct (l). The number of appointed members acting on the same trade board or district committee at the same time must, however, be less than half the total number of representative members (m). Appointed members.

Women are eligible as members (n); in the case of a board for a trade in which women are largely employed, at least one of the appointed members acting must be a woman (o). Women.

(f) Trade Boards Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 22), s. 2. The boards are established in accordance with regulations made under the Act. Regulations have been made as follows:—for the chain-making trade, 29th November, 1909 (Stat. R. & O., 1909, p. 765); for the box-making trade, 27th April, 1910 (Stat. R. & O. 1910, p. 827); for the lace etc. trade, 4th May, 1910 (Stat. R. & O., 1910, p. 825); for the tailoring trade, 25th July, 1910 (Stat. R. & O., 1910, p. 831); as to constitution of district trade committees, 22nd July, 1910 (Stat. R. & O., 1910, p. 835); as to mode of giving notice under the Trade Boards Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 22), s. 18 (see note (k), p. 521, post), 27th April, 1910 (Stat. R. & O., 1910, p. 837). Where a board is established for a branch of work, any reference to the trade for which a board is established is a reference to that branch (Trade Boards Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 22), s. 2 (2)). As to a trade or branch of work carried on in Ireland, see ibid., s. 2 (1); as to the laying of regulations before Parliament and the amendment thereof, see ibid., s. 19; as to the exercise of statutory powers by a Secretary of State, see ibid., s. 20 (1), (2); as to the payment of expenses and remuneration, see ibid., s. 21.

(g) Trade Boards Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 22), ss. 11, 13. The regulations may apply generally to the constitution of all trade boards or specially to the constitution of any particular board or class of boards (ibid., s. 11 (1)). For the dates of the regulations, see note (f), supra.

(h) Trade Boards Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 22), s. 11 (1). An employer, for the purposes of the Act, includes any shopkeeper, dealer, or trader, who, by way of trade, makes any arrangement, express or implied, with any worker in pursuance of which the worker performs any work for which a minimum rate of wages has been fixed; and in such case the wages are the net remuneration obtainable by the worker in respect of the work after allowing for his necessary expenditure in connexion therewith (ibid., s. 9).

SECT. 5.
Trade Boards.

Chairman.
Quorum.

The Board of Trade appoints the chairman, who must be a member, and the secretary (p).

1009. In order to constitute a meeting of a trade board, at least one-third of the representative members and at least one appointed member must be present (q).

The proceedings of a trade board are not invalidated by any vacancy in its number or by any defect in the appointment, election, or nomination of any member (r).

A trade board may regulate its own proceedings as it thinks fit, subject to the provisions of the Trade Board Act, 1909 (s), and the regulations, if any, made by the Board of Trade (t).

SUB-SECT. 3.—District Trade Committees.

Constitution.

1010. A trade board may establish district trade committees, consisting partly of members of the board and partly of persons who are not members but represent employers or workers engaged in the trade. Such committees must be constituted in accordance with regulations made by the Board of Trade and act for such area as the Board of Trade may determine (u).

At least one appointed member must act as a member of each district committee; local employers and workers must be equally represented thereon; home workers must be represented in the case of any trade in which a considerable proportion of home workers are engaged in the district; and there must be a standing sub-committee to consider applications for special minimum piece-rates and complaints made to the trade board, to which sub-committee all applications and complaints must be referred (v).

Delegation of powers.

1011. A trade board may refer all matters which it thinks expedient to a district committee for its report and recommendations; and may also delegate to such committee any of the powers and duties of the board, except the power and duty to fix a minimum time-rate or general minimum piece-rate (a).

Recommendation of minimum rate.

1012. Where a district committee is established for any area, it is the duty of the committee to recommend to the trade board minimum time rates and, so far as it thinks fit, general minimum piece-rates applicable to the trade in that area. No such minimum rate fixed under the Act, and no variation or cancellation thereof, takes effect within the area unless recommended by the committee, or unless an opportunity has been given to the committee to report thereon to the board and the board has considered the report, if the committee has made one (b).

(t) Ibid., s. 11 (7). The Board of Trade has power to make such regulations as to proceedings and meetings, including the method of voting. For the dates of the regulations made, see note (f), p. 519, ante.

(u) Trade Boards Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 22), s. 12 (1). The regulations made are dated 22nd July, 1910 (Stat. R. & O., 1910, p. 835).

(v) Trade Boards Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 22), s. 12 (2). The Board of Trade regulations must provide for the above requirements (ibid.).

(b) Trade Boards Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 22), s. 12 (4).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Duties of Trade Boards.

SECT. 5.

Trade Boards.Industrial conditions.(i.) In General.

1013. It is the general duty of a trade board to consider as occasion requires any matter referred to it by a Secretary of State, the Board of Trade, or any other Government department, with reference to the industrial conditions of the trade, and to report thereon (c).

(ii.) Fixing of Rates of Wages.

1014. Trade boards must, unless relieved from this duty by the Board of Trade (d), fix minimum rates of wages for time work (referred to as "minimum time-rates"), and may fix general minimum rates of wages for piece work (referred to as "general minimum piece-rates") for their trades (e). Such rates may be fixed so as to apply universally to the trade, or so as to apply to any special process in the work, or any special class of workers, or any special area (f); they may be cancelled or varied by the board at discretion, and must, if the Board of Trade so direct, be reconsidered, whether an application is made for the purpose or not (g).

Minimum rate.

1015. On the application of any employer a trade board must fix a special minimum piece-rate to apply as respects the persons employed by him in cases to which a minimum time-rate, but no general minimum piece-rate, is applicable; and the board may, as it thinks fit, cancel or vary any such rate either on the application of, or after one month's notice to, the employer (i).

(k) Before fixing a minimum rate, the trade board must give notice of the rate proposed and consider any objections lodged within three months (Trade Boards Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 22), s. 4 (2)); it must give notice of any rate fixed (ibid., s. 4 (3)); and where it is proposed to cancel or vary a rate the provisions as to notice apply in the same manner as they apply where it is proposed to fix a rate (ibid., s. 4 (4)). The Board of Trade must make regulations as to the notice to be given of any matter under the Act, with a view to bringing the matter, so far as practicable, to the knowledge of persons affected (ibid., s. 18 (1)); such regulations, dated the 27th April, 1910 (Stat. R. & O., 1910, p. 837), have been made. Every occupier of a factory or workshop, or of any place used for giving out work to outworkers, must, in manner directed by the regulations, fix any notices in his factory, workshop, or place which he may by the regulations be required to fix, and must give notice in any other manner, if required by

Boards.Duty of the Board of Trade.SUB-SECT. 5.—Orders by the Board of Trade.

1017. When a trade board has given notice of the fixing of a minimum time-rate or general minimum piece-rate it then becomes the duty of the Board of Trade, upon the expiration of six months from the date of the notice, to make an order, referred to as "an obligatory order," making that minimum rate obligatory, in cases in which it is applicable, on all employers and persons employed, unless the Board of Trade is of opinion that the circumstances are such that it is premature or otherwise undesirable to make such order, in which case the Board of Trade must make an order, referred to as an "order of suspension," suspending the obligatory operation of the rate (l).

Proceedings
upon order of suspension.

1018. When an order of suspension has been made, then at any time after the expiration of six months from its date the trade board may apply to the Board of Trade for an obligatory order, and the Board of Trade must make an obligatory order unless it is of opinion that a further order of suspension is desirable, in which case it must make such further order. To this further order the provisions applicable to the first order also apply; and any order of suspension remains in effect till an obligatory order is made (m).

General
order.

1019. The Board of Trade may, however, if it thinks fit, make an order to apply generally as respects any rates which may be fixed by any trade board constituted, or about to be constituted, for any trade within the Act. Such order is revocable at any time after three months' notice to the trade board, but while it is in force any minimum time-rate or general minimum piece-rate becomes obligatory after the lapse of six months from the date on which notice of its fixing has been given by the board, in the same manner as if the Board of Trade had made an obligatory order, unless in any particular case the Board of Trade, on the application of any person interested, directs to the contrary (n).

SUB-SECT. 6.—Effect of Rate before it is made Obligatory by Order. •When minimum rate operative.

1020. A minimum rate of wages fixed by a trade board, until it has been made obligatory under an order of the Board of Trade, has the following limited operation, unless the Board of Trade directs to the contrary in a case in which it has directed the trade board to reconsider the rate (o):—(1) In all cases to which the minimum rate is applicable the employer must, in the absence of a written agreement to the contrary, pay to the person employed wages at not less than the minimum rate, and the person employed may, in the absence of such agreement, recover wages at such rate (p); (2) any employer may give written notice to the trade board which fixed the rate that he is willing that that rate shall be obligatory on him, in which case he is under the same obligation to pay wages at not less than the minimum rate, and liable to the same fine for not doing so as he would be if the rate were obligatory under an order of the Board of Trade (q). Unless an employer has given such notice he cannot obtain any contract involving employment to which the minimum rate is applicable from any Government department or local authority, except in cases of public emergency, in which cases the Board of Trade may by order suspend the operation of this provision as respects contracts for any such work being done or to be done on behalf of the Crown (r).

As to the exhibition of notices in factories and shops, see title FACTORIES AND SHOPS, Vol. XIV., pp. 448, 495, 510.

SUB-SECT. 7.—Effect of Rate when made Obligatory by Order.

1021. When any minimum rate has been made obligatory by order of the Board of Trade, then in cases to which the minimum rate is applicable an employer must pay wages to the person employed at not less than the said rate clear of all deductions (s). Duty to pay minimum rate.

Any agreement for the payment of wages at less than the minimum rate clear of all deductions is void (t).

1022. Where persons are employed on piece work, and a minimum time-rate, but no general minimum piece-rate, has been fixed, an employer is deemed to pay wages at less than the minimum Piece work.

(p) Trade Boards Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 22), s. 7 (1) (a). As to the meaning of "employer," see note (h), p. 519, ante.

(q) Trade Boards Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 22), s. 7 (1) (b).

(r) Ibid., s. 7 (1) (c). The order must state the extent and period of the suspension and the work in question. The trade board keeps a register of all notices given under this provision, which is open to public inspection without payment of any fee, and is evidence of the matters stated therein; a copy purporting to be certified by the secretary of the board, or any officer of the board authorised for the purpose, to be a true copy of any entry is admissible in evidence without further proof (ibid., s. 7 (2)). As to the rights of the Crown generally, see title CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, Vol. VI., pp. 309 et seq., Vol. VII., pp. 1 et seq.

(s) Trade Boards Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 22), s. 6 (1). Failure to comply is punishable, on summary conviction, by a fine not exceeding £20 for each offence, and not exceeding £5 for each day on which the offence is continued after conviction (ibid.); and the court may by the conviction order the payment, in addition to the fine, of such sum as appears to be due to the person employed on account of wages calculated at the minimum rate; but this power to order the payment of wages is not in derogation of any right of the person employed to recover wages by any other proceedings (ibid., s. 6 (2)). On such a prosecution the burden is on the employer to prove by wages sheets or other records, or otherwise, that he has not paid or agreed to pay wages at less than the minimum rate (ibid., s. 6 (4)). As to the meaning of "employer," see note (h), p. 519, ante.

(t) Trade Boards Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 22), s. 6 (5). A trade board has, however, a discretion, if satisfied that a worker employed, or desiring to be employed, on time work is affected by any infirmity or physical injury which renders him incapable of earning the minimum time-rate, and if it is of opinion that the case cannot suitably be met by employing the worker on piece work, to grant to the worker, subject to such conditions, if any, as the board may prescribe, a permit exempting the employment of such worker from the provisions which render the minimum time-rate obligatory (ibid., s. 6 (3)). The employer is thereby relieved from liability to a penalty for paying wages at less than the minimum rate so long as the conditions prescribed are complied with (ibid.).

rate (1) in cases where a special minimum piece-rate has been fixed, if the rate paid is less than that special minimum piece-rate, and (2) in cases where a special minimum piece-rate has not been fixed, unless he shows that the piece-rate paid would yield, in the circumstances of the case, to an ordinary worker at least the same amount of money as the minimum time-rate (a).

SUB-SECT. 8.—Complaints by Workers.

Complaints.

1023. Any worker, or any person authorised by a worker, may complain to the trade board that the wages paid to him are below the minimum rate, and the board must consider the matter and may take any proceedings under the Act on behalf of the worker (b).

SUB-SECT. 9.—Appointment and Powers of Officers.

Duties of officers.

1024. Officers are appointed by the Board of Trade for investigating complaints under and securing the observance of the Act, and such officers act under the direction of the Board of Trade, or, if the Board of Trade so determines, under the direction of any trade board (c).

Any such officer (d) has power, in pursuance of any special or general directions of the Board of Trade, to take proceedings under

(a) Trade Boards Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7. c. 22), s. 8.

(b) Ibid., s. 10 (1). Before taking such proceedings the board may, and on the first occasion on which proceedings are contemplated by the board against an employer must, take reasonable steps to bring the case to the notice of the employer, with a view to the settlement of the case (ibid., s. 10 (2)). The obligatory provision clearly applies on each occasion when a particular employer is to be proceeded against for the first time.

(c) Ibid., s. 14 (1). The Board of Trade, in lieu of or in addition to appointing officers, may arrange for the co-operation, generally or in special cases, of any other Government department by officers of that department whose duties bring them into relation with a trade to which the Act applies (ibid., s. 14 (2)). Each officer of the Board of Trade or of such other department is furnished with a certificate of his appointment, which he must produce, if required, to any person affected (ibid., s. 16). Such officers have power to require the production of wages sheets or other records of wages by an employer, and records of payments to outworkers, and to inspect, examine, and copy the same (ibid., s. 15 (1) (a)); to require persons giving out work and outworkers to give information which it is in their power to give as to the names and addresses of persons to whom work is given out or from whom it is received, and as to the payments made for the work (ibid., s. 15 (1) (b)); to enter at all reasonable times any factory or workshop or place used for giving out work (ibid., s. 15 (1) (c)); and to inspect and copy any material part of any list of outworkers (ibid., s. 15 (1) (d)). Failure to furnish the means required by an officer for any entry or inspection or the exercise of his powers, or the hindering or molesting an officer in the exercise of his powers, or the refusal to produce any document or to give any information required, is punishable, on summary conviction, by a fine not exceeding £5; and the production of any wages sheet or record of wages or payments, or any list of outworkers, knowing the same to be false, or the furnishing of any information knowing the same to be false, is punishable, on summary conviction, by a fine not exceeding £20 or imprisonment for a term not exceeding three months, with or without hard labour (ibid., s. 15 (2)). As to factories and workshops generally, see title FACTORIES AND SHOPS, Vol. XIV., pp. 433 et seq.

Part III.—Freedom of Trade and Monopoly.

SECT. 1.—General Principle of Freedom of Trade.

1025. It is the general principle of the common law that a man is entitled to exercise any lawful trade as and where he wills; and the law has always regarded jealously any interference with trade, even at the risk of interference with freedom of contract (g), as it is public policy to oppose all restraints upon liberty of individual action which are injurious to the interests of the State (h).

Freedom
of trade.

(e) See note (c), p. 524, ante.

(f) Trade Boards Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 22), s. 17 (1). An officer appointed by the Board of Trade, or an officer of any other department assisting the Board of Trade, or the secretary or other officer of a trade board, may, although not a counsel or solicitor, conduct proceedings under the Act before a court of summary jurisdiction (ibid., s. 17 (2)).

SECT. 1.
General Principle of Freedom of Trade.

Sole exercise of a trade.

There is at common law no limit to the number of trades which a man may carry on (i).

SECT. 2.—Monopoly.

1026. It is a monopoly, and against the policy of the law, for any person or group of persons to secure the sole exercise of any known trade throughout the country (k); and the Crown cannot grant such a monopoly without statutory authority (l), except in certain cases

It is not against public policy as in restraint of trade for a petitioner for divorce, with a view to protecting the honour of the respondent, to bind a co-respondent by agreement not to come for a period of years within a certain area (Upton v. Henderson (1912), 106 L. T. 839), though it is conceivable that in some cases a covenant having apparently no reference to trade may be a colourable device in restraint of trade (ibid.). The old offences of badgering, forestalling, regrating and engrossing were abolished by stat. (1844) 7 & 8 Vict. c. 24, s. 1; see Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor, Gow & Co. (1889), 23 Q. B. (l) The earliest authority for this proposition may be derived from Magna Charta (1215), c. 18, "Nullus liber homo disseisetur de libero tenemento vel libertatibus vel liberis consuetudinibus suis," which was interpreted by Coke (2 Inst. 47) as covering property in goods as well as other franchises and liberties; compare the argument in Nightingale v. Electrolytic Alkali Co., Ltd., supra, per FARWELL L.J., at p. 445; A.-G. of Australia v. Adelaide Steamship Co., supra. In East India Co. v. Sandys (1684), Skin. 132, 165, 197, 223, it was held that a grant to a company of the sole right of trading to the East Indies was good; but in Nightingale v. Bridges (1691), 1 Show. 135, it was held, though there was no considered judgment, that, though the Crown may give to a corporation exclusive right to trade and hold territories within prescribed limits, yet a clause prohibiting others to trade within those limits under pain of imprisonment and forfeiture, and authorising the search and seizure of ships and goods, is void. The right of the Crown to create such companies and to give

SECT. 2.
Monopoly.

1027. By the Statute of Monopolies (n) all monopolies, licences, and letters patent for the sole buying, selling, making, working, and using of anything within the realm (o) were declared void, with the exception of letters patent thereafter to be granted for fourteen years or under, in the case of new manufactures, to the first and true inventors (p).

Statute of Monopolies.

A monopoly of trade must, however, be distinguished from the exclusive licence which a landowner may grant to exercise rights over his land (q).

them exclusive right to trade was not disputed, but only the forfeiture clause. In 1694 (Journals of the House of Commons, Vol. II., p. 64, 19th January, 1693-4) it was resolved "that all subjects of England have equal right to trade to the East Indies unless prohibited by Act of Parliament"; compare Mitchel v. Reynolds (1712), 1 P. Wms. 181; 1 Smith, L. C., 11th ed., p. 406. In East India Co. v. Sandys (1684), Skin. 132, 165, 197, 223, the validity of the grant was based on the prerogative of the Crown to control trade with foreigners and to create companies; compare Michelborne v. Michelborne (1610), 2 Brownl. 296; and see titles CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, Vol. VI., p. 488; CORPORATIONS, Vol. VIII., p. 316. As to licences to alien enemies to trade, see title ALIENS, Vol. I., p. 311.

(m) As to the prerogative of the Crown to grant exclusive right to print the authorised version of the Bible, the Book of Common Prayer, charts and ordnance maps, see title COPYRIGHT AND LITERARY PROPERTY, Vol. VIII., p. 173; as to the prerogative of the Crown in respect of printing and publishing generally, see title CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, Vol. VI., pp. 496 et seq.; as to the prerogative of the Crown generally, see ibid., pp. 371, 372, and compare *Mounson v. (r) Such other agreements are relevant for the purpose of ascertaining the object of the restrictions imposed in the agreement under consideration and whether such restrictions are reasonably necessary for the protection of the covenantee's interest (North-Western Salt Co., Ltd. v. Electrolytic Alkali Co., Ltd. (1912), 107 L. T. 439, C. A., per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., at p. 440). The dictum that "No evidence is given in these public policy cases" (Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor, Gow & Co., [1892] A. C. 25, per LORD BRAMWELL, at p. 45) does not mean that such evidence is not to be admitted (*North-Western Salt Co., Ltd. v. to obtain the control of a market, and particularly of a market in one of the necessities of life (s), and to keep up prices at an artificial figure, by means of restrictions which are more stringent than is reasonably necessary for the protection of a particular or local trade, to the obvious detriment of the public, such an agreement will not be enforced (t). A fortiori is this the case when there is anything in the methods adopted which tends to mislead the public (a).

Such a contract is merely unenforceable: it is not unlawful in any criminal sense, nor does it give any cause of action to a third person injured by its operations (b). The court takes cognisance of its illegality though it is not pleaded (c).

with reference to the business of the plaintiff which it was the object of the parties to protect").

(t) Ibid. (the plaintiffs by the agreement secured practically the defendants' whole output of salt for four years, bound the defendants during that period not to make any other salt or to sell any salt other than a limited quantity bought back at the plaintiffs' prices from the plaintiffs, imposed restrictions as to price, class of buyers, charges and the like, and prohibited the defendants from selling or leasing any land for the purpose of the manufacture of salt. Further, the plaintiffs had an agreement securing the whole output of a number of other manufacturers for a period of five years, and thus had almost the entire control of the market). VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., ibid., at pp. 441, 444, drew a distinction between the case of a number of persons who as partners or members of a company agree together for the purpose of keeping up prices in a particular locality and the case where such partnership or company enter into an agreement with a third party, and confined his judgment to the latter case only, accepting the proposition that the agreement in the former case is free from the taint of illegality; FARWELL, L.J., on the contrary, ibid., at p. 444, apparently treated the two cases as indistinguishable ("Since the penalties against engrossing, forestalling and regrating have been abolished there is nothing to prevent an individual salt manufacturer from restricting his output, withholding his products for any time he likes and raising his prices as he pleases. . . . But it is quite a different matter when a number of traders, and still more when all the traders in a large part of England combine together; if the effect of this agreement is to injure the public, then no court will give any assistance to enforce or remedy a breach thereof"). Compare A.-G. of Australia v. Adelaide Steamship Co. (1913), 109 L. T. 258, P. C., which, though decided upon the words of an Australian statute, contains dicta apparently relevant to the decision in North-Western Salt Co., Ltd. v. Electrolytic Alkali Co., Ltd., supra. Where a restraint is reasonable as between the parties, the burden of showing that it creates a pernicious monopoly is upon the person alleging it (A.-G. of Australia v. Adelaide Steamship Co., supra, at p. 263). It does not necessarily follow that, because a contract is unenforceable as being in unreasonable restraint of trade, the parties must be taken to have intended a detriment to the public (ibid., at p. 265). By the public is not meant merely the consuming public (ibid.). A mere intention to raise prices is not in itself proof of an intention to injure the public; there must be an intention to raise them to an excessive or unreasonable extent (ibid., at p. 268). For other cases in which contracts have been held illegal or of doubtful legality, see note (e), p. 529, post. As to restraint of trade generally, see pp. 548 et seq., post.

It is, however, no monopoly if the control, being lawfully and fairly obtained, is limited to particular persons or places (d); and an agreement among traders to prevent competition among themselves and even to keep up prices is not necessarily invalid, if it is carried out by provisions reasonably necessary for the purpose and not detrimental to the public (e).

Lees* (1856), 1 H. & N. 189 (covenant by licensee of patented improvements for a term not to make or vend the machine without the improvement during the term); British United Shoe Machinery Co. v. Somervell Brothers (1906), 95 L. T. 711 (lease of machines with a condition that they should be used to their full capacity during the term, so far as the number of goods made in the factory would permit); National Phonograph Co., Ltd. v. Edison-Bell Consolidated Phonograph Co., Ltd., [1908] 1 Ch. 335, C. A. (sale of phonographs to wholesale dealers on terms that they should not sell to dealers who had not signed a retailer's agreement, or to dealers placed on a "suspended list," both classes of dealers being bound not to sell at less than current list prices; see ibid., per Lord ALVERSTONE, C.J., at p. 356 ("I cannot see any objection to a trader in such a trade saying that he will not, if he can help it, allow his machines to be at the disposal of his trade rivals")). But if a person has agreed not to sell to a person on a "suspended list" he does not commit a breach of that agreement if he sells to such a person in ignorance induced by fraud (ibid., per KENNEDY, L.J., at p. 368); see also *Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co., Ltd. v. (k) Compare the classification in Mitchel v. Reynolds (1712), 1 P. Wms. 181; 1 Smith, L. C., 11th ed., p. 406, which is, to some extent, now obsolete, though the broad distinction there drawn between involuntary and voluntary restraints remains. The law of involuntary restraint by Crown grants is now governed by statute (see title PATENTS AND INVENTIONS, Vol. XXII., pp. 125 et seq.), as is in practically all cases the law of restraint by custom and bye-law (see p. 531, post), and the distinction between general and particular voluntary restraints has disappeared; see p. 550, post.

(m) As to these companies in the City of London, see title COMPANIES, Vol. V., p. 746.

(n) See note (o), infra.

(o) Municipal Corporations Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76), s. 14, repealed and re-enacted by Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), s. 247. The City of London was not a borough within either of these Acts; and nothing in the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), alters the effect of any local Act (ibid., s. 251), see titles CORPORATIONS, Vol. VIII., p. 339; LOCAL GOVERNMENT, Vol. XIX., p. 293. Such customs and bye-laws, though not abolished in London, appear to have become obsolete there. A few of the many cases on the subject may be referred to. In London and other large cities and towns it was the object to keep out "foreigners," that is, persons not free of the city (as to the ways of acquiring "freedom," see City of London's Case (1610), 8 Co. Rep. 121 b, 126 b; and title COMPANIES, Vol. V., p. 748), or of one of its guilds. A custom, therefore, that no foreigner should keep any shop or exercise any trade within the city, and a bye-law founded thereon, were held good (City of London's Case, supra; compare London Corporation v. Bernardiston (1661), 1 Lev. 14; Robinson v. Groscourt (1695), 5 Mod. Rep. 104; Fazakerley v. Wiltshire (1721), 1 Stra. 462; Clark v. Denton (1830), 1 B. & Ad. 92). Similar bye-laws were upheld in many other places. In Robinson v. Groscourt, supra, it was laid down that though the custom of the City of London was that whoever is free of the City must be free of some company, yet it did not oblige a man to be free of any particular company; but the case was decided on the ground that music and dancing were not a "trade," and in other cases the principle was accepted that a man should be free of the company appropriate to his trade; see Wannell v. London (City Chamberlain) (1725), 1 Stra. 675; R. v. Harrison (1762), 3 Burr. 1322. It was recognised as a reasonable custom that no freeman should be permitted to employ any person not a freeman or an apprentice to a freeman; and it was no objection that the prohibition was not confined to cases in which a qualified person was available (Shaw v. Poynter (1834), 2 Ad. & El. 312). Based on the same principle was the custom of "foreign bought and foreign sold," namely, that no non-freeman might sell or buy goods for or from another non-freeman in a city or borough; and this also could be enforced by bye-law (City of London's Case, supra; compare Com. Dig., tit. Trade (D. 2); Anon. (1568), Dyer, 279 b). Similar customs were recognised applying to particular trades and giving to particular companies the right to make bye-laws for their enforcement (Weavers' in London Co. v. Brown (1601), Cro. Eliz. 803; but compare Davenant v. Hurdiss (1599), cited in Darcy v. Allein (1602), 11 Co. Rep. 84 b, 86 a). An action on the case lay on the custom without any bye-law (Weavers' in London Co. v. Brown, supra; Bodvic v. Fennel (1748), 1 Wils. 233, 237); but it was essential that such a bye-law should be supported by a custom (Mitchel v. Reynolds (1712), 1 P. Wms. 181; 1 Smith, L. C., 11th ed., p. 406; City of London's Case, supra; Ipswich Tailors' Case (1614), 11 Co. Rep. 53 a; Norris v. Staps (1616), Hob. 210; Parry v. Betty (1717), 1 Com. 269; Harrison v. Godman (1756), 1 Burr. 12; R. v. Harrison (1762), 3 Burr. 1322; Hesketh v. Brad-dock (1766), 3 Burr. 1847; Adley v. Whistable Co. (1810), 17 Ves. 315, per Lord ELDON, L.C., at p. 322; Clark v. Le Cren (1829), 9 B. & C. 52), and such a bye-law was not good by grant for charter (City of London's

1031. Under the head of restraint of trade by statute (p) come all those cases in which certain trades have been absolutely forbidden by Parliament (q), or in which restrictions have been imposed by Parliament on the carrying on of particular trades and professions with a view to the maintenance of a proper standard of competence in, and a proper control over, those engaged in them (r), or with a view to the protection of employees and the public (s) or public

Case (1610), 8 Co. Rep. 121 b, 126 b; Adley v. Whitstable Co. (1810), 17 Ves. 315). A fortiori a bye-law in restraint of trade which was contrary to custom was void (R. v. Tappenden (1802), 3 East, 186; compare R. v. Coopers' Co., Newcastle (1798), 7 Term Rep. 543). A bye-law was good if warranted by the principle of the custom (Clark v. Denton (1830), 1 B. & Ad. 92); but it was necessary that it should be within the terms of the custom (R. v. Tappenden, supra; Wood v. Searl (1618), J. Bridg. 139). A custom, without statutory authority, could not support a bye-law imposing imprisonment (Clark's Case (1596), 5 Co. Rep. 64 a; Wood v. Searl, supra; Langham's Case (1642), March, 179, 186; Com. Dig., tit. By-law (E. 1); Vin. Abr., tit. By-laws (A 2), pl. 1); and cases which suggest the contrary, such as Wood v. London Corporation (1701), 1 Salk. 697; R. v. Clerk (1697), 1 Salk. 349, refer, apparently, to customs confirmed by statute (R. v. Merchant Taylors of London (1677), 2 Lev. 200). Judicial notice would not be taken of a custom not pleaded (Harrison v. Godman (1756), 1 Burr. 12; R. v. Harrison (1762), 3 Burr. 1322; Clark v. Le Cren (1829), 9 B. & C. 52). Where, however, a bye-law was not in restraint but a mere regulation of trade, it was good if reasonable and for the benefit of the place and made in prevention of inconvenience or nuisance (Harrison v. Godman, supra; London Chamberlain's Case (1590), 5 Co. Rep. 62 b; Mitchel v. Reynolds (1712), 1 P. Wms. 181; 1 Smith, L.C., 11th ed., p. 406; Shaw v. Pope (1831), 2 B. & Ad. 465; see title CORPORATIONS, Vol. VIII., p. 337). For cases as to penalties, see Player v. Vere (1679), T. Raym. 288, 324; Bodwic v. Fennel (1748), 1 Wils. 233; Totterdell v. Glazby (1765), 2 Wils. 266; Adley v. Reeves (1813), 2 M. & S. 53; and title CORPORATIONS, Vol. VIII., pp. 339, 340. What might be bad as a bye-law might be good as an agreement between the parties (Adley v. Whitstable Co., supra, at p. 322; R. v. Faversham Free Fishermen (1799), 8 Term Rep. 352; London Tobacco Pipe Makers' Co. v. Woodroffe (1823), 7 B. & C. 838; and see Freeman v. Silkthrowsters' Co. (1668), 1 Lev. 229; and title CORPORATIONS, Vol. VIII., pp. 334, 338. A bye-law in restraint of trade might be good in part and bad in part, but only when the two parts are entire and distinct (Fazakerley v. Wiltshire (1721), 1 Stra. 462, 469; R. v. Faversham Free Fishermen, supra; Clark v. Denton, supra, at pp. 95, 100). As to severing in the case of covenants in restraint of trade, see pp. 572, 573, post. SUB-SECT. 2.—The Slave Trade.

(i.) Nature of Slavery.

1032. There is no precise legal definition of slavery, but it may be described as a service for life for bare necessities, with power in the master over the person and property of the slave, a right to all the acquirements of his labour and a right of alienation, and the like power and right over the slave's descendants (b). A man is not a slave if he is taken as a "free labourer" under local immigration laws, even though he has been kidnapped for the purpose (c).

Definition of slavery.

1033. At common law a contract for the sale of a slave was good and could be enforced (d), but the status of slavery has only a local existence, founded on the particular law of the locality, and does not accompany a man when he leaves the territory where that law prevails (e).

Status of slavery.

1034. Slavery is not recognised by English law as existing in the United Kingdom, and a slave while in the United Kingdom or its territorial waters or on a British man-of-war is a free man (f), and may assert his freedom by a writ of habeas corpus (g), may retain money given to him (h), and may maintain an action for ill-usage or detention (i); and to kill him is murder (k). Mere residence in England without manumission (l) does not create permanent freedom, and the status of slavery revives if the slave returns to the place of original servitude (m).

Slavery was abolished in the British dominions by statute as from the 1st August, 1834, the owners having the right to the services of their slaves as apprentices for a limited time and £20,000,000 being granted by way of compensation (n).

(ii.) The Trade in Slaves.

Slaves of foreign owners.

1035. The trade in slaves is not by international law piracy or a crime, except by treaty; and a British statute cannot of itself affect rights or interests of foreigners outside British jurisdiction (o). Consequently there is no right to seize a foreign ship merely because there are slaves on board, and a prize court will not condemn slaves to whom the claimants are entitled by the law of their own country (p).

Slave trade within Admiralty
jurisdiction.

1036. The trade in slaves within the Admiralty jurisdiction, is by statute piracy and felony punishable with penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (q), and all the operations of the trade are illegal (r).

But a slave brought to England and continuing in service there was held not entitled to recover wages on a quantum meruit in the absence of contract (Alfred v. FitzJames (Marquis) (1796), 3 Esp. 3); but in that case there was apparently evidence of a subsequent promise to pay wages, as to which no decision is reported.

(l) Procuring a slave to enter into a contract to serve as a servant for a term of years is equivalent to manumission (Keane v. Boycott (1795), 2 Hy. Bl. 511). For a discussion of "manumission," see Chamberline v. Harvey (1696), 5 Mod. Rep. 182, 187, 188, 190.

1037. Offences against the Slave Trade Acts (s), in addition to being punishable as felony or misdemeanour (t), are punishable with penalties and forfeitures (u).

SECT. 2.
Restraint
by Statute.
Penalties.

The Acts being penal, proof of their infringement lies on the captor; but such proof may rest on circumstantial evidence (a).

The penalties and forfeitures are as follows:—

(1) For breach of the provisions as to dealing in, carrying, importing, and shipping slaves a fine of £100 per slave for each offence upon the offenders and their procurers, counsellors, aiders and abettors (b); forfeiture of all property or pretended property in the slaves or persons intended to be dealt with as slaves, and seizure of such slaves or persons (c);

(2) For breach of the provisions against fitting out, manning, the slave trade by Indian subjects, see the Slave Trade Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 46). As to the jurisdiction of the Admiralty Division of the High Court in regard to the condemnation of vessels etc. seized under the Slave Trade Acts, see pp. 538, 539, post; and title ADMIRALTY, Vol. I., p. 78. As to the decoying of Pacific Islanders, see Pacific Islanders Protection Acts, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 19), and 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 51); Burns v. Nowells (1880), 5 Q. B. D. 444, C. A.; and title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 527.

(r) Slave Trade Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 113), s. 2; see title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 526. The offence of shipping goods employed or to be employed in accomplishing any of the prohibited operations is committed even though the vessel carrying out the goods is not intended to bring back slaves in return; it is enough to show that there was a slave adventure in which the vessel was concerned (R. v. Zulucta (1843) 1 Car. & Kir. 215). As to the liability of British subjects, see Slave Trade Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 98), s. 1; and title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., pp. 526, 527. A foreigner committing an offence against the Slave Trade Acts within British jurisdiction is liable to penalties and his vessel may be seized (Del Campo and Martinez v. R. (1837), 2 Moo. P. C. C. 15, 17, 18), and a foreigner who has obtained a British register for his vessel is estopped from asserting that the register is a nullity (Dionissis v. R., The Laura (1865), 3 Moo. P. C. C. (N. s.) 181). Santos v. Illidge (1860), 8 C. B. (N. s.) 861, Ex. Ch., must be read in relation to the Slave Trade Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 98), s. 5, which was repealed as to all British dominions by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 67).

(s) Slave Trade Acts, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 113), 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 73), 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 98), 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 88), and 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 46).

(t) See title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 526. The provisions of the Slave Trade Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 113), s. 10, as to the forgery of certificates etc. required by the Slave Trade Acts, are repealed by the Forgery Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 27), s. 30, and replaced by ibid., s. 2 (2) (j), which comes into operation on the 1st January, 1914.

(u) See title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 527. A person convicted of felony under the Slave Trade Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 113), is not thereby debarred from prosecuting an appeal against a subsequent civil sentence for penalties, though apparently the conviction may be a bar to an action for repayment of the penalties if the appeal is successful (Sherwill v. R. (1836), 2 Moo. P. C. C. 1, 7). Offences under the Slave Trade Acts are extradition offences (Slave Trade Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 88), s. 27); see title EXTRADITION AND FUGITIVE OFFENDERS, Vol. XIV., pp. 403 et seq.

(b) One half of the fine goes to any person who informs, sues, and prosecutes for the same (Slave Trade Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 113), s. 2).

navigating, using, letting or hiring slave ships, forfeiture and seizure of the ship with all property of her owners or part owners found on board (d);

(3) For knowingly and wilfully lending or guaranteeing money, goods or effects for the purposes of the slave trade, a fine of double the value of the money, goods and effects so lent or guaranteed on each offender and his procurers, counsellors, aiders and abettors (e);

(4) For knowingly and wilfully guaranteeing agents, or contracting to engage in the trade as partner, agent, or otherwise, a fine of double the value of all the money, goods and effects secured or contracted to be secured (f);

(5) For knowingly and wilfully shipping or receiving on board any money, goods or effects for the purposes of the trade, a fine of double the value of such money, goods and effects (g);

(6) For knowingly and wilfully insuring, or contracting to insure, any slaves or property engaged in the trade, a fine of £100 for each such insurance or contract and treble the amount of the premium, each such insurance or contract being null and void (h).

(iii.) Seizure of Vessels Engaged in the Trade.

Right of seizure.

1038. Any vessel suspected on reasonable grounds (i) of being (d) Slave Trade Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 113), s. 4. In spite of the absence of the words "knowingly and wilfully" in this provision, guilty knowledge of the person charged must be proved either directly or by inference from circumstances (Barton v. R. (1840), 2 Moo. P. C. C. 19; Hocquard v. R., The Newport (1857), 11 Moo. P. C. C. 155, 164, 165; R. v. Casaca (1880), 5 App. Cas. 548, 554, P. C.). But no damages can be awarded against the seizer if there was probable cause for the seizure, that is, if, from all the surrounding circumstances, there was to a reasonable mind a fair and reasonable suspicion that the vessel was engaged in or fitted out for the slave trade, and the fact that passengers have been kidnapped for the purpose of carrying them as "free labourers" to a place where slavery does not exist does not raise a reasonable suspicion that they are consigned to slavery (R. v. Casaca, supra). For a statement of what are reasonable grounds of suspicion, see Burns v. Nowell (1880), 5 Q. B. D. 444, C. A. (Pacific Islanders Protection Acts, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 19), and 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 51)); compare Edward v. Trevellick (1854), 4 E. & B. 59 (to justify desertion from a ship a threat to sell the deserter as a slave is not a reasonable cause, unless the place where such sale is threatened is one in which such sale would be lawful).

(e) Slave Trade Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 113), s. 5.

(g) Ibid., s. 7; Sherwill v. R. (1836), 2 Moo. P. C. C. 1, 7 (knowledge may be inferred from circumstances). The goods are only forfeited when they belong to the owner of the vessel (Del Campo and Martinez v. R. (1837), 2 Moo. P. C. C. 15, 17; Hocquard v. R., The Newport, supra). The offence of receiving goods on board committed by, for instance, the owner and the master, is a joint offence, and one penalty only must be imposed upon them jointly (Del Campo and Martinez v. R., supra, at p. 18).

(h) Slave Trade Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 113), s. 8. One half of the penalty goes to any person who informs, sues, and prosecutes for the same (ibid.).

(i) Slave Trade Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 88), s. 3. As to what are "reasonable grounds," see note (d), supra. Certain equipments are specified in the Slave Trade Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 88), Sched. I., as prima facie evidence of the vessel being engaged in the trade; and, even though a vessel so equipped establishes her innocence, no damages may be awarded against the seizer (ibid., s. 4). This last provision does not extend to a foreign vessel except by treaty, and where a treaty embodied in a British Act (stat. (1843) 6 & 7 Vict. c. 53) prescribed similar articles as engaged in or fitted out for the slave trade may be visited, seized, and detained, if British, or engaged in the slave trade within British jurisdiction (k), or not a vessel of a foreign state (l), by any British naval or military officer, or customs officer in the United Kingdom, or British colonial governor or any person authorised by a colonial governor, or any officer of any foreign cruiser authorised in pursuance of any treaty; and if a vessel of a foreign state, by any British naval officer duly authorised in pursuance of any treaty and by any officer of any cruiser of that state. The vessel, with any slaves on board, and the master and all persons and goods on board, may be brought in for adjudication (m).

SECT. 2.
Restraint
by Statute.

1039. Any vessel seized and condemned may, subject to the treaty rights of foreign states, be taken into the service of the Crown at such price as the Admiralty deems proper (called "the appraised value"), and if not so taken must be broken up and sold in separate parts (n). Any slaves on board are forfeited to the Crown for the purpose of divesting all other right and interest in them; they are not to be treated as slaves, but must be provided for and disposed of as the court may direct, subject to Treasury regulations if any (o).

Effect of condemnation.

1040. Provision is made for the payment to seizers of bounties, which vary according as the seizer is or is not a naval officer (p).

Bounties.

evidence of guilt constituting a bar to compensation, it was held that such treaty related only to foreign vessels captured on the high seas (R. v. Casaca (1880), 5 App. Cas. 548, 556, 562, P. C.; compare Casanova v. R., The "Ricardo Schmidt" (1866), L. R. 1 P. C. 268); see, further, titles ADMIRALTY, Vol. I., p. 78; CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., pp. 526, 527.

(k) The Slave Trade Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 113), authorised the seizure of a foreign ship in British waters (Del Campo and Martinez v. R. (1837), 2 Moo. P. C. C. 15, 17; Casanova v. R., The "Ricardo Schmidt," supra).

(l) The cases of vessels of foreign states and of the officers of foreign cruisers are all subject to any existing slave trade treaty regulations (Slave Trade Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 88), s. 3). "Existing slave trade treaty" means a treaty in force at the passing of the Act (ibid., s. 2). Ibid., Sched. II. (now repealed), contained a list of the treaties carried into effect by statute; and by ibid., s. 29, any subsequent treaty might by Order in Council be directed to be deemed an "existing slave trade treaty." For the list of such treaties signed since the Act, see title COURTS, Vol. IX., p. 106, 107; and see Index to the Statutory Rules and Orders, in force on the 31st December, 1912, sub voce "Slave Trade" (2).

(n) Slave Trade Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 88), s. 9. As to the disposition of the money realised, see ibid., ss. 11—13. By the Forgery Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 27), s. 2 (2), which comes into operation on the 1st January, 1914, it is a felony to forge any certificate, certificate of valuation, sentence or decree of condemnation or restitution, or any copy of such sentence or decree, or any receipt required by the Slave Trade Acts.

By ibid., s. 16, the provisions of the Naval Agency and Distribution Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 24), apply to all money payable to naval officers under this Act; and see titles PRIZE LAW AND JURISDICTION, Vol. XXIII., pp. 293, 294; ROYAL FORCES, Vol. XXV., p. 35, note (i). All questions as to bounties and joint capture or seizure are within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty Division of the High Court (Slave Trade Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 88), s. 19). A governor of a colony is entitled to his bounty even though absent and

SECT. 2.
Restraint
by Statute.

The costs, compensation, or damages incurred or awarded in the case of any visitation, seizure, detention, or prosecution must, if required by treaty, and in other cases may, be paid by the Treasury; but the seizor may be required by the Treasury to make good any sum so paid (q).

Protection of seizors.

1041. Persons authorised to make seizures have the benefit of the protection granted to persons authorised to make seizures under any Act relating to customs (r).

(iv.) Jurisdiction.

Admiralty
jurisdiction.

1042. The courts having jurisdiction in the case of any vessel, slave, or goods seized are the Admiralty Division of the High Court, the colonial courts of admiralty, and the vice-admiralty courts; and in certain cases, under treaties, mixed courts (s). Such courts are not thereby given any jurisdiction inconsistent with any existing slave trade treaty (t) over the vessel of any foreign state which has not been engaged within British jurisdiction in the slave trade; but where a vessel of a foreign state is liable to be condemned by a British slave-court, such court has the same jurisdiction as if the vessel were British (a). Each of such courts has the same jurisdiction in regard to any person seized, at sea or on land, on the represented by an acting-governor at the time of the seizure (Re Bounties for Seizure of Slaves (1863), 9 Jur. (N. S.) 1254). In cases of joint capture the same principles apply as in the case of a prize of war (The Sociedade Feliz (1842), 1 Wm. Rob. 303), and a ship authorised to capture slave ships, being in sight during the chase and capture of a slaver by another ship, is a joint captor entitled to a share of bounties unless the animus capiendi is clearly rebutted (Brig, Name Unknown (1864), Brown & Lush. 370); see title PRIZE LAW AND JURISDICTION, Vol. XXIII., pp. 292, 293.

(q) Slave Trade Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 88), s. 15. As to taxation of costs, see ibid., s. 20; Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 27), Sched. II. As to the Treasury's right of appeal, see Slave Trade Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 88), s. 21; and title ADMIRALTY, Vol. I., pp. 79, 124, 125.

Where a person is charged with an offence against the Forgery Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 27) (which Act comes into operation on the 1st January, 1914), or with an offence indictable at common law, or under any Act for the time being in force, consisting in the forging or altering of any matter whatsoever, or in offering, uttering, disposing of or putting off any matter whatsoever, knowing the same to be forged or altered, and such offence relates to documents made for the purpose of any Act relating to the suppression of the slave trade, it is to be treated for the purposes of jurisdiction and trial as an offence against the Slave Trade Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 88) (Forgery Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 27), s. 14 (1)). The institution and pendency of any proceeding in a slave court, or final judgment therein, are complete bars to every legal proceeding for the recovery of the vessel in question or damages in relation to the visitation or seizure (Slave Trade Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 88), s. 18). As to regulations governing procedure of mixed courts, see ibid., s. 8; and, as to regulations generally, see Hocquard v. R., The Newport (1857), 11 Moo. P. C. C. 155. The courts may award damages if a vessel is restored (Slave Trade Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 88), s. 5).

ground that he has been, or is suspected to have been, detained as a slave for the purpose of the slave trade, as if that person had been so detained on a vessel seized and brought in for adjudication (b). SECT. 2.
Restraint
by Statute.

1043. In the case of offences committed against the Slave Trade Acts (c) out of the United Kingdom, but within British territory, the King's Bench Division of the High Court, on indictment or information laid, may by writ of mandamus require the chief judicial officer of the place to hold a court for the examination of witnesses and receiving other proofs, and the depositions taken may be used at the trial in England (d). Offences out of United Kingdom.

1044. The Admiralty Division has jurisdiction to review and enforce the order of any British slave court (e). Review.

SUB-SECT. 3.—Chicory Dryers and Roasters.

1045. Every dryer and roaster of and dealer in chicory is under a statutory obligation to make entry, in accordance with the excise laws (f), of his name and place of abode, and of every building, kiln or utensil which he intends to use, and no person other than a dryer, roaster, or dealer who has so made entry may have in his possession any dried chicory (g). A proper warehouse must be provided, to be approved by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue and locked by an excise officer (h); and provision is made for notice before beginning to dry (i), and of intention to remove from the kiln (k), for supervision of the weighing and removal from the kiln (k), as to storage in and removal from the warehouse (l), as to returns by the excise officer, and the payment of duty on deficiency of the amount in the warehouse (m), and as to the keeping of weights (n). No dryer may have any dried chicory in his possession other than that dried on his own kiln or lawfully received into his warehouse (o). Protection of revenue.

1046. The businesses of a dryer and a roaster may not be carried on upon the same premises or on premises communicating with one another, under a penalty of £100, unless by special licence in the cases of combined businesses existing before 1860 (p). Combination

by Statute.

A dryer may, however, send dried chicory to the warehouse of another dryer without charge, the latter becoming answerable for the duty (q): a dryer or roaster may receive foreign dried chicory on which import duty has been paid (r), and a dryer may remove into an approved warehouse chicory partly dried and to be returned to the kiln for complete drying (s).

Penalties.

1047. For all acts, neglects, or omissions for which no penalty is specially provided the penalty is £100 (t).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Hosiery Manufacturers.

Tickets and duplicates.

1048. When a manufacturer of hosiery (u) or his agent gives out to a workman the materials to be wrought he must at the same time deliver to him a ticket signed by the manufacturer and containing particulars of the agreement between them, and must make and keep a duplicate of such ticket till the work is completed or paid for (b). The ticket and its duplicate must be produced in any dispute, and they are evidence of their contents (c). If the dispute relates to the improper or imperfect execution of any work, the piece of work must be produced, and if not produced it is deemed to have been sufficiently and properly executed (d). The penalty for non-compliance is a fine not exceeding £5 on summary conviction (e).

SUB-SECT. 5.—Silk Weavers.

Tickets and duplicates.

1049. As in the case of hosiery manufacturers (f), a manufacturer of silk goods must give a ticket when he gives out work to a weaver, but the parties may agree in writing to dispense therewith (g). There

SUB-SECT. 6.—The Growing of Tobacco.

1050. The planting and growing, making and curing, of tobacco (l) in the United Kingdom was formerly restrained and prohibited by statute (l), but the prohibition was removed as to Ireland in 1907 (m), as to Scotland in 1908 (n), and as to England in 1910 (o). Every person growing, cultivating, or curing tobacco must take out a licence annually, on which there is charged an excise duty of 5s. (p), and excise duties are charged on the tobacco grown (q).

SUB-SECT. 7.—Old Metal Dealers.

1051. The trade of a dealer in old metals (r) is regulated with a view to the diminishing of facilities for the disposal of stolen goods (s). A dealer in old metals means any person dealing in buying and selling old metal, scrap metal, broken metal, or partly manufactured metal goods, or defaced or old metal goods, whether such person deals in such articles only or together with second-hand goods or marine stores (t).

Definition.

1052. Every old metal dealer must register his name and place of abode, and every place of business, warehouse, store, and place of deposit occupied or used by him for the purpose of his business, in warrant.

1053. A justice of the peace, on complaint made before him that the complainant has reason to believe, and does believe, that any old metal stolen or unlawfully obtained is kept in any old metal dealer's house, shop, room, or place, may grant a search warrant, and the articles may be seized; and if on summons before two justices the dealer fails to prove to the satisfaction of the court how he came by the articles, or if a dealer is found in possession of any old metal which has been stolen or unlawfully obtained and it is proved, on summons before two justices, that he had reasonable cause to believe that it was stolen or unlawfully obtained, the dealer is liable to a penalty not exceeding £5, and for any subsequent offence to a penalty not exceeding £20, or imprisonment with hard labour for not exceeding three months (c).

Effect of conviction.

1054. If a dealer is convicted he may be ordered to be registered in a police register, and thereupon becomes subject, for a period not exceeding three years, which may be extended on subsequent convictions, to certain regulations (d), and must give notice to the police of any removal of his business (e), and is liable, on an order of two justices, to police visit and inspection at any time (f).

Police
 regulations.

The regulations to which a dealer becomes subject on such order are the following, namely:—(1) He must keep books showing particulars

SECT. 2.
Restraint
by Statute.

1055. It is an offence for an old metal dealer to purchase, receive, or bargain for lead, copper, brass, tin, pewter, or German silver or spelter, or any composite of which any of these metals is the principal ingredient, whether new or old, in any quantity at one time less than certain specified quantities, under a penalty not exceeding £5 (i).

SUB-SECT. 8.—Marine Store Dealers.

1056. Any person dealing in or buying or selling any anchors, cables, sails, old junk, or old iron or other marine stores, must have his name, together with the words "Dealer in marine stores," distinctly painted in letters of not less than six inches in length on every warehouse or place of deposit belonging to him (j). In places where the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907 (k), Part VII., is in force he must also register his place of abode and every place of business or store used by him in a book kept for the purpose by the local authority, and a person authorised by the local authority may inspect the premises and the books required to be

As to the recovery of penalties and appeal, see ibid., ss. 9—11; Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 43), s. 4; and title MAGISTRATES, Vol. XIX., pp. 643 et seq.

(ibid.). It is of the essence of the offence that the accused should be a dealer in old metals (Adams v. McKenna (1906), 8 F. (Justiciary) 79), and it is not enough to describe him in the complaint as a "general dealer" (ibid.).

Purchase from children.

A marine store dealer must himself or by his agents not purchase marine stores from any person apparently under the age of sixteen (n).

Cutting up or unlaying cables.

1057. A marine store dealer must not on any pretence cut up or unlay into twine or paper stuff any cable or other like article exceeding five fathoms in length unless he obtains a written permit. To obtain such permit he must make a declaration before a justice of the peace having jurisdiction where the dealer resides stating the quality and description of the article, the name and description of the person from whom he obtained the same, and that he purchased or acquired the article without fraud or without any knowledge or suspicion that it had been come by dishonestly. The justice of the peace before whom the declaration is made, or the receiver of wreck of the district upon the production of the declaration, may grant the necessary permit (o).

Advertisement of intention to cut or unlay.

On obtaining the permit the marine store dealer must advertise for the space of one week at least in a newspaper circulating in the place where he resides the fact that he has a permit, the nature of the article, the place where it is deposited, and the time at which it is intended to cut it up or unlay it, before he can cut up or unlay the article (p). Any person suspecting that the article advertised is his property may, on a sworn statement, obtain from a justice of the peace a warrant for the production and inspection of the article and of the marine store dealer's books (a).

SUB-SECT. 9.—Anchors and Chain Cables.

Necessity
 for proof.

1058. It is a misdemeanour for a maker of or dealer in anchors or chain cables to sell, or for any person to purchase, for use on any British ship (b) any chain cable or anchor exceeding in weight 168 lbs. unless it has been duly proved (c).

(l) Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 53), s. 86. Public notice is to be given of the provisions of this section (ibid., s. 86 (5)). As to whether the giving of such a notice is a condition precedent to a prosecution, see Duncan v. Knull (1907), 96 L. T. 911.

(m) Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 39. The penalty is, for a first offence a fine not exceeding £20; for subsequent offences, not exceeding £50. Under the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 53), s. 86, where it is in force, the penalty must not exceed £5 or 40s. daily.

(n) Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 540. The penalty is, for a first offence, a fine not exceeding £5; for subsequent offences, not exceeding £20 (ibid.).

1059. Every contract for the sale of a chain cable or anchor exceeding the prescribed weight is, by statute, deemed, in the absence of express stipulation to the contrary, to imply a warranty that the article has been duly proved; and it lies upon the seller to prove the existence of any such express stipulation, and the testing and stamping (d). But no maker, dealer, shipowner, or other person is relieved by this provision from any responsibility in respect of any anchor or chain cable made, sold, or used by him to which he would, but for such provision have been subject (e).

1060. Provision is made for the licensing by the Board of Trade of certain specified bodies, and such other bodies as may be authorised by Order in Council, for the testing of anchors and chain cables with a view to their proof; and for the inspection of testing establishments (f). Every licensed tester must with all reasonable despatch test every anchor and chain cable brought for testing, in the order in which they are brought, unless, as regards the order, the persons interested agree otherwise (g).

Licensed
testers.

The tensile strain and the breaking strain are prescribed (h); and provision is made for the mode of testing (i) and mode and conditions of stamping (k), and the furnishing of a certificate that the anchor or chain cable has been duly proved (l). The Board of Trade issues a scale of maximum charges for such testing and stamping, which must be exhibited in a conspicuous part of the establishment, together with the actual charges made (n).

Mode and conditions of testing.

A licensed tester has a lien on an anchor or chain cable for his charges (b), and after three months from the testing may enforce it by sale (c).

War Office contracts are not within the Act (Anchors and Chain Cables Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 23), s. 18). When a ship is detained as unsafe, the Board of Trade may direct an inquiry into the condition of her anchors and cables, and, if they have not been duly proved, may make such order as is requisite (ibid., s. 4). Emigrant ships are required to be supplied with sufficient anchors and chains (Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 290 (1) (c)); and see, generally, title SHIPPING AND NAVIGATION, Vol. XXVI., p. 335. The expressions "anchor" and "chain cable" include any shackle attached to or intended to be used in connexion with the anchor or chain cable (Anchors and Chain Cables Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 23), s. 19).

The licence is for a year, may be revoked or suspended at any time, and may be renewed, and the licence fee is such fee not exceeding £50 as the Board of Trade may, with the concurrence of the Treasury, appoint (ibid., s. 5 (3), (4), (6)).

- SECT. 2.
Restraint by Statute.
 Offence by licensed testers.
- 1061. It is a misdemeanour for a licensed tester to stamp any anchor or chain cable, or other chain or cable, with the distinctive mark denoting that it has been duly proved, or with any mark resembling that mark, or otherwise calculated to lead persons to suppose that it has been duly proved, unless it has been duly proved at his establishment; or to deliver a certificate of proof in respect of any anchor or chain cable which has not been duly proved at his establishment; or to make any false statement in a certificate of proof (d).
- Offences by other persons.
- It is a misdemeanour for any person other than a licensed tester to place on any anchor or chain cable, or on any chain or cable, any distinctive mark appointed by the Board of Trade for any testing establishment, or any mark resembling that mark, or otherwise calculated to lead persons to suppose that it has been duly proved; or to deliver any certificate or document of a like character relating to the proof or testing of any anchor or chain cable or other chain or cable resembling a certificate of proof delivered by a licensed tester, or otherwise calculated to lead persons to suppose that the anchor, chain cable, chain or cable, has been duly proved (e).
- Private testing.
- 1062. It is a misdemeanour to deliver a certificate or document of like character relating to the proof or testing of an anchor or chain cable or other chain or cable which is not an anchor or chain cable duly proved under the statutory provisions, or a chain or cable proved at a licensed testing establishment, without placing the words "privately tested" conspicuously on the certificate or document; or to place on any untested anchor or chain cable, or other chain or cable, any marks or deliver in relation thereto any certificate or like document, calculated to lead persons to suppose that it has been tested (f); or to sell or deliver for use any anchor or chain cable, or other chain or cable, with knowledge that it has been stamped or marked in contravention of the statutory provisions (g).
- Manufacturers' marks.
- 1063. A manufacturer of anchors must mark on every anchor he manufactures in legible characters, and both on the crown and also on the shank under the stock, his name or initials, and must in addition mark on the anchor a progressive number and the weight of the anchor (h).

SUB-SECT. 10.—Sale of Pistols (i).

- Restrictions on sale.
- 1064. It is unlawful to sell by retail or by auction or let on hire a pistol (j) to any person, unless at the time of sale such person either

SECT. 2.
Restraint
by Statute.

1065. Every person who sells by retail or lets on hire a pistol must, before delivery, enter or cause to be entered in a book kept for the purpose the description of the pistol, whether single barrel, magazine, revolver, pin, rim or centre fire, the date of sale or hire, the name and address of the purchaser or hirer, and the office from which the gun or game licence produced by the purchaser was issued, the date of the licence, or the circumstances exempting the purchaser or hirer from having such licence (o).

Register of sales.

The penalty for contravention of any of the above provisions, or for knowingly making or causing to be made on the sale, purchase, or hire of a pistol any false entry or statement as to any matter concerning which an entry or statement is required, is a fine not exceeding £5 (p).

Part V.—Restraint of Trade by Agreement.

SECT. 1.—Introductory.

Public policy.

1068. A person may be restrained from carrying on his trade by reason of an agreement voluntarily entered into by him with that object (b); and in such a case the general principle that a man is entitled to exercise any lawful trade as and where he wills (c) must be applied with due regard to the principles that public policy requires for men of full age and understanding the utmost freedom to contract (d), and that it is public policy to allow a trader to dispose of his business to a successor by whom it may be efficiently carried on (e), and to afford to an employer an unrestricted choice of able assistants and the opportunity to instruct them in his trade and its secrets without fear of their becoming his competitors (f).

SECT. 1.
Introductory.

Any restraint upon freedom of contract must be shown to be plainly necessary for the purpose of freedom of trade (g).

1069. Decisions upon public policy are subject to change and development with the change and development of trade and the means of communication (h), and the general principle once applicable to agreements in restraint of trade has consequently been considerably modified by later decisions, without, however, rendering the old cases on the subject obsolete on such questions as consideration (i), measurement of distance (k), severability (l), parties (m), and reasonableness of restraint generally (n).

Development of principle.

SECT. 2.—Classes of Agreements.

1070. Agreements in restraint of trade are, generally speaking, made (1) between vendors and purchasers of businesses; (2) between employers and employed; (3) between partners (o); (4) between

A restraint reasonably necessary for the protection of the covenantee must prevail unless some specific ground of public policy can be clearly established against it (Underwood (E.) & Son, Ltd. v. Barker, [1899] 1 Ch. 300, C. A.). As to what may constitute such ground of public policy, see Russell v. Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners, [1912] A. C. 421 (where the area from which employers not parties to the agreement can obtain workmen is unreasonably restricted); and for an instance of an unlawful monopoly see North-Western Salt Co., Ltd. v. Electrolytic Alkali Co., Ltd., [1913] 3 K. B. 422, C. A.; and p. 528, ante. It is not in unlawful restraint of trade or contrary to public policy for a managing director of a company to agree to give to the company the exclusive benefit of all new inventions or improvements in respect of certain inventions and to communicate to the company particulars of all such new inventions or improvements (Maxim Nordenfelt Guns and Ammunition Co. v. Nordenfelt (1892), 67 L. T. 469). "Unlawful," in the case of restraint of trade, means unenforceable, not criminal or unlawful in the sense of giving a cause of action to a third party; see note (b), p. 528, ante, p. 572, post, note (w), p. 601, post. SECT. 3.—The Old Distinction between General and Partial Restraint.

Early rule.

1071. In the earliest times it would probably have been held that all contracts in restraint of trade, whether general or partial, were void: but the severity of this principle was gradually relaxed (r), and it became the rule that a partial restraint might be good if reasonable (s), but a general restraint was of necessity void (t).

houses, see titles LANDLORD AND TENANT, Vol. XVIII., pp. 515 et seq.; SALE OF LAND, Vol. XXV., pp. 428, 429, 454 et seq. These are restrictions upon the user of a particular house or piece of land rather than restraints of trade in the sense in which the term is used in this title; but the decisions on the subject are relevant on the questions, e.g., of the meaning of trade and the acts which constitute breach of covenant; and see Taff Vale Rail. Co. (Directors etc.) v. McNabb (1873), L. R. 6 H. L. 169 (agreement on lease of a dock).

The proposition will be found repeatedly stated in the cases, and it is unnecessary to refer further to them on this point. The doctrine that there was an essential distinction between a general and a partial restraint was finally repudiated in Nordenfellt v. Maxim Nordenfellt Guns and Ammunition Co., supra, where a doubt was expressed (see ibid., per Lord ASHBOURNE, at p. 557, and per Lord MACNAGHTEN, at p. 562) whether it had ever existed at any time. A similar doubt had been expressed in Rousillon v. Rousillon (1880), 14 Ch. D. 361, 366—369; compare Horner v. Graves (1831), 7 Bing. 731; Whittaker v. Howe (1841), 3 Beav. 383 (restraint extending over Great Britain held good); Jones v. Lees (1856), 1 H. & N. 189 (covenant by licensee of patent, with no limit of space, held good); Harms v. Parsons (1862), 32 Beav. 328, as reported 32 L. J. (CH.) 247 (where ROMILLY, M.R., quoted Whittaker v. Howe, supra, without disapproval); Leather Cloth Co. v.

A restraint was regarded as general if it was unlimited as to space, that is, apparently, if it extended over the whole of the United Kingdom (u), even though limited as to time (w), but not if,

Barker*, [1899] 1 Ch. 300, C. A.; Dowden and Pook, Ltd. v. Pook, [1904] 1 K. B. 45, 51, C. A.; Beetham v. Fraser (1904), 21 T. L. R. 8; *Russell v. A., as reported, 107 L. T. 439, per FARWELL, L.J., at p. 445; Continental Tyre and Rubber (Great Britain) Co., Ltd. v. Heath (1913), 29 T. L. R. 308; A.-G. of Australia v. Adelaide Steamship Co. (1913), 109 L. T. 258, P. C. The statement in the text represents the view taken in the great majority of the cases, and it is described by Lord HERSCHELL, in Nordenfelt v. Maxim Nordenfelt Guns and Ammunition Co., supra, at p. 548, as perhaps the sounder view. But there had grown up a wide diversity of judicial opinion, and the decision in this last case did not constitute any sudden change in the law, but merely adopted a principle which had been appearing in the cases from time to time, but without sufficient authority to secure general recognition.

(u) Mitchel v. Reynolds (1712), 1 P. Wms. 181, 182; 1 Smith, L. C., 11th ed., p. 406 (where in describing a general restraint the words used were "not to exercise a trade throughout the kingdom"). But the law was not clear as to this; and the above words were, in Horner v. Graves (1831), 7 Bing. 731, said to be rather an instance than a limit of the application of the rule. In Price v. Green (1847), 16 M. & W. 346, Ex. Ch., "London and 600 miles" (i.e., England, Wales and nineteen-twentieths of Scotland) was treated as general (London being held severable; see pp. 572 et seq., post). In Jones v. Lees (1856), 1 H. & N. 189, "England" was treated as general. In Harms v. Parsons (1862), 32 Beav. 328, a restraint covering England but not Scotland was treated as partial. In Leather Cloth Co. v. Lorsont (1869), L. R. 9 Eq. 345, 351, Great Britain was referred to as the test; compare Ward v. Byrne (1839), 6 M. & W. 548. In Rousillon v. Rousillon (1880), 14 Ch. D. 351, 366, a restraint unlimited as to space was discussed on the basis that it extended to England and Wales; and in Maxim Nordenfelt Guns and Ammunition Co. v. Nordenfelt, [1893] 1 Ch. 630, C. A., LINDLEY, L.J., at p. 648, and BOWEN, L.J., at p. 651, speak of England; though in S. C., [1894] A. C. 535, Lord HERSCHELL, at p. 550, and Lord MACNAGHTEN, at p. 574, seem to refer to the United Kingdom. In the same case Lord HERSCHELL, at p. 550, said that the courts in laying down the rule had reference only to the United Kingdom and would not have considered it against public policy to restrain a person who had sold his business from setting up a rival business in another country. But, apparently, while the rule existed that a restraint covering the whole of the United Kingdom was of necessity void, the extension of such restraint to foreign countries was immaterial; compare Leather Cloth Co. v. Lorsont, supra, at p. 351. The question only becomes important when it is admitted that the reasonableness of a general restraint is to be considered in determining its validity; see pp. 552, 560, post.

(w) Dier's Case (1414), Y. B. 2 Hen. 5, fo. 5, pl. 26; Hunlocke v. Blacklowe (1670), 2 Wms. Saund. 155 b, 156 b, n.; Colmer v. Clark (1734);

though unlimited as to space, it was limited as to the persons with whom the covenantor might deal (a), or as to the manner in which or the name under which the trade might be carried on (b), or, it would appear, as to the capacity in which the covenantor might engage in the trade (c). The mere fact that it was unlimited as to time did not constitute it a general restraint (d).

1072. The rule now is clear that, whether a restraint is general or partial, its validity is to be determined by the consideration whether it exceeds what is reasonably necessary for the protection of the covenantee (e), that is, the criterion of reasonableness which was formerly applied only to partial restraints must now be applied to restraints of every kind.

SECT. 4.—*Requisites of a Valid Restraint.*SUB-SECT. 1.—In General.

1073. An agreement in restraint of trade must satisfy the following conditions:—(1) It must be reasonable; (2) it must be founded on good consideration; (3) it must not be too vague.

SUB-SECT. 2.—Reasonableness.

1074. It is for the judge to decide, as a matter of law, (1) whether a contract is or is not in restraint of trade (f); (2) whether, if in restraint of trade, it is reasonable (g). It is for the jury to decide any disputed questions as to the nature of the business, as to what is customary in it, as to the number and situation of its customers, as to any particular dangers requiring precautions and the like, all which matters are relevant to the question of reasonableness (h).

1075. In estimating reasonableness, extravagant possibilities should not be taken into account (i). Evidence as to the mode in which the agreement has been carried out is not relevant on the question of its construction (j), nor is evidence that the covenantee or other persons think it reasonably necessary (k). That it is unusual is evidence to show that it is unreasonable (l); and, conversely, that it is customary is evidence that it is reasonable (m); and if a covenant was reasonable when made, subsequent events do not affect its validity (n).

1076. It is the covenant as a whole which must be considered, not the particular breach complained of, and the court will not decide on the reasonableness of the covenantor's conduct in each particular case as it arises (o). Where, however, the covenant includes trades 1077. In estimating the reasonableness of a restraint, the paramount consideration which has to be taken into account is whether it is reasonably necessary for the protection of the interest of the covenantee (q), unless, it seems, there can be established some specific ground of public policy which must be taken to override the interest of the covenantee (r).

Protection of covenantee's interest.

1078. There cannot be a restraint of trade in gross—the restraint must be for the protection of a business in which the covenantee is interested (s); but a company controlling or controlled by or

I do not understand him [Lord MACNAGHTEN in Nordenfelt v. Maxim Nordenfelt Guns and Ammunition Co., supra, at pp. 566, 567] as saying that a restriction which is reasonably necessary for the protection of a man's business can be held invalid on grounds of public policy unless some specific ground can be clearly established... Apparently, therefore, a mere sentimental interest on the part of the covenantee will not justify a restraint, and the only suggestion in the cases that this is possible occurs in Kimberley v. Jennings (1836), 6 Sim. 340, per SHADWELL, V.-C., at p. 351 ("I remember a case in which a nephew wanted to go on the stage and his uncle gave him a large sum of money in consideration of his covenanting not to perform within a particular district; the court would execute such a covenant on the ground that a valuable consideration had been given for it"); but see *Upton v. in the case of a business carried on by agents or correspondence (l) than in the case of one necessitating constant attendance in person (m).

The restraint may be reasonable though its area is apparently greater than the area of the business of the covenantee (n).

SECT. 4.
Requisites of a Valid
Restraint.

1086. A restraint against residing in a neighbourhood, apart from actually carrying on business there, may be in some cases a necessary measure of protection, as, for instance, in the case of a doctor's practice (o). Residence.

A traveller may reasonably be restrained from travelling for a rival firm over the same ground (p).

covenantees' business; and in Stuart and Simpson v. Halstead (1911), 55 Sol. Jo. 598, the United Kingdom was held too wide in the case of an advertising agent; see also Caribonum Co., Ltd. v. Le Couch (1913), 135 L. T. Jo. 370, C. A.

(l) As in the case of a solicitor (Nordenfelt v. Maxim Nordenfelt Guns and Ammunition Co., [1894] A. C. 535, per Lord MACNAGHTEN, at p. 573, approving Whittaker v. Howe (1840), 3 Beav. 383 (solicitor: England and Scotland reasonable); Bunn v. Guy (1803), 1 Smith, K. B. 1 (150 miles round London reasonable); Galsworthy v. Strutt (1848), 1 Ex. A., COZENS-HARDY, M.R., at p. 327, doubted the reasonableness of restraining a solicitor's clerk from doing business for any client within an area, as opposed to carrying on business within the area (see p. 578, post); or an accountant (Isitt v. Ganson (1899), 107 L. T. Jo. 423 (England reasonable)); or a stockbroker (Lyddon v. Thomas (1901), 17 T. L. R. 450 (fifty miles reasonable)); see further, the list of trades, professions etc. set out at pp. 583 et seq., post; and compare title MASTER AND SERVANT, Vol. XX., pp. 88 et seq.; as to solicitors, generally, see title SOLICITORS, Vol. XXVI., pp. 705 et seq.

May* (1843), 11 M. & W. 653 (London (then containing 1,500,000 inhabitants) reasonable; but any of the towns in England or Scotland where covenantees might have been practising during term of service unreasonable)), or a schoolmaster (Smith v. Hawthorn (1897), 76 L. T. 716 (nine miles reasonable)), or a canvasser in a local area (Mason v. Provident Clothing and Supply Co., Ltd., [1913] A. SECT. 4.
Requisites

Restraint.

Outside United Kingdom.

Measurement of distance.

1087. A restraint extending beyond the United Kingdom, and even over the whole world, may be reasonable if the covenantee's business is such as to require so extensive a protection (q); but it is uncertain whether a restraint unlimited in terms or expressly extending beyond the United Kingdom, and reasonable if only applied to the United Kingdom, is to be considered void because such extension is unreasonable (r).

1088. In measuring distance, unless the contract contain words

(1887), 56 L. T. 339 (traveller to wine and spirit merchant; fifty miles of Burton-on-Trent; no limit of time: held reasonable, the covenantee's business extending over the whole area); Cussen v. O'Connor (1893), 32 L. R. Ir. 330 (traveller restrained from travelling in any county in which he had travelled for covenantee).

(q) Nordenfellt v. Maxim Nordenfellt Guns and Ammunition Co., [1894] A. C. 535 (manufacture of guns and ammunition with a limited number of customers all over the world); see ibid., per Lord HERSCHELL, L.C., at p. 550, and per Lord WATSON, at p. 554; Underwood (E.) & Son, Ltd. v. Barker, [1899] 1 Ch. 300, C. A. (hay and straw merchants with business in United Kingdom, France, Belgium, and Canada may, apparently, restrain a servant from engaging in the business in those countries; but if the extension beyond the United Kingdom is unreasonable, the covenant is severable); Lamson Pneumatic Tube Co. v. Phillips (1904), 91 L. T. 363, C. A.; Continental Tyre and Rubber (Great Britain) Co., Ltd. v. Heath (1913), 29 T. L. R. 308 (rubber tyre company: restraint as to United Kingdom held good; extensions to France and Germany severable); for instances of world-wide restraints held good, see Rousillon v. Rousillon (1880), 14 Ch. D. 351; Badische Anilin und Soda Fabrik v. Schott, Segner & Co., [1892] 3 Ch. 447; for a restraint as to Europe held good, see Leather Cloth Co. v. Lonsont (1869), L. R. 9 Eq. 345; compare title MASTER AND SERVANT, Vol. XX., pp. 88 et seq.

(r) Leather Cloth Co. v. Lonsont, supra, per JAMES, V.-C., at p. 351 ("If the covenant is good as to Great Britain we need not concern ourselves with its extension to France and Germany"); Maxim Nordenfellt Guns and Ammunition Co. v. Nordenfellt, [1893] 1 Ch. 630, C. A., per LINDLEY, L.J., at p. 651 (it is not contrary to public policy to give effect to a covenant entered into for the purpose of preventing a man from assisting foreigners to compete with an English trader who has bought his business); S. C., [1894] A. C. 535, per Lord HERSCHELL, at p. 550, and per Lord MACNAGHTEN, at p. 574 (see note (u), p. 551, ante); Underwood (E.) & Son, Ltd. v. Barker, supra, per LINDLEY, M.R., at p. 307 ("If the restraint is unreasonable as to the foreign countries named, which I do not think it is, still the agreement as to them is clearly severable from that part of it which relates to this country"); and compare ibid., per RIGBY, L.J., at p. 308. In Dowden and Pook, Ltd. v. Pook, [1904] 1 K. B. 45, C. A., a covenant unlimited as to space was treated as covering the whole world, and therefore unreasonably wide. But in Lamson Pneumatic Tube Co. v. Phillips, supra (where the manager of a business having by its nature few and scattered customers covenanted not to be engaged in a similar business in the eastern hemisphere), the Court of Appeal (COZENS-HARDY, L.J., dissentiente) treated the question as open, and, as the covenant was held to be reasonable to its fullest extent, no decision was necessary; compare ibid., per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., at p. 367 ("I want to say a word about whether this rule as to contracts which are in restraint of trade not being enforceable is a rule that will be given effect to because there is too wide an area to which the contract may extend outside the United Kingdom. I do not propose to decide that question. I do not propose to say whether Lord Herschell or Lord Macnaghten in the House of Lords in the Nordenfellt Case [supra] did or did not decide that question in the negative, and I do not propose to say whether the Court of Appeal in Dowden v. Pook [supra] did decide that question the other way").

to the contrary (s), the measurement is to be made not by the nearest accessible way, but in a straight line on a map, disregarding actual inequalities of the surface (t).

When the distance between houses is in question, the measurement should be between the nearest points of each, not between the doors (a).

If by the contract the distance is to be measured by the usual streets or ways of approach, it must be measured by any usual public way, not necessarily by that which is most frequented (b).

1089. A limit of time is an important matter for consideration (c); but the absence of such a limit will not make a restraint void if it is otherwise reasonable (d), for it is reasonable that a restraint imposed, in respect of the limit as to time, for the protection of a business, should be wide enough to protect that business not only in the hands of the covenantee, but also of his legatee, representative, or assignee, and with this object the restraint may be co-extensive with the lifetime of the covenantor (e), and is not affected by the fact that the original covenantee has ceased to carry on business (f), or is dead (g).

Where a covenant in restraint of trade accompanies an assignment of the term of a lease, it is not limited to the length of the term (h), unless, of course, it be expressly so provided (i).

Restraint as to customers.

1090. A restraint may be reasonable because it is limited to dealings with particular persons, as, for instance, the persons who were customers of a business during the period of the covenantor's service (k), or a particular trade rival (l).

Goldstein*, [1896] 1 Q. B. 478, C. A.; and compare Lewis and Lewis v.

1091. The position of the covenantor in the business may also be a matter for consideration, as the danger of competition in the case, for instance, of a manager may be greater than in the case of a clerk (m).

SECT. 4.
Requisites of a Valid
Restraint.

1092. A person may reasonably be restrained from carrying on business anywhere under a particular name (n), or in a particular capacity (o), or from representing himself, even though truly, to have been connected in trade with the covenantee (p).

Restraint as to name.

1093. A restraint otherwise unobjectionable may be unreasonable if it restrains the covenantee from carrying on any business whatsoever (q), or a business different in character from that carried on by the covenantee (r); or a business of a like unreasonableness.

Durnford (1907), 24 T. L. R. 64, where the question of the reasonableness of a restraint against soliciting any person who "for the time being" is a client of the covenantees was left open. character to that carried on by the covenantee but subsequently set up in a different place(s); or a business which, though carried on by the covenantee, is not the business in which the covenantor was employed (t); or a business not carried on by the covenantee in a place to which the restraint purports to extend (a). Where the restraint is as to dealing with particular persons, it is in general reasonable that it should apply to persons who were customers during the covenantor's employment, but not to persons who became such after its termination (b).

Change of locality.

1094. A business, though of the same character, is a different business if it is subsequently set up in a wholly different locality (c), but not if the business is merely removed to another place in the same neighbourhood (d).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Consideration.

Necessity for valuable consideration.

1095. There must be a valuable and legal consideration (e), even

(s) Davies, Turner & Co. v. Lowen (1891), 64 L. T. 655 (covenant as to any business similar to the business "now or hereafter to be carried on" by covenantee: held unreasonable, but severable); Dubowski & Sons v. Goldstein, [1896] 1 Q. B. 478, C. A.; Beetham v. Fraser (1904), 21 T. L. R. 8 (where it was admitted that a restraint from competition with the business of the covenantee at any addresses in the future was void); compare Berlitz School of Languages v. Duchêne (1903), 6 F. (Ct. of Sess.) 181; Chesman v. Nainby (1728), 1 Bro. Parl. Cas. 234 (restraint within half a mile (i.) of the covenantee's house, or (ii.) of any house to which he should remove; the validity of (ii.) was not expressly decided upon, but its presence did not invalidate the whole).

(t) Leatham (Henry) & Sons, Ltd. v. Johnstone-White, [1907] 1 Ch. 322, C. A., per FARWELL, J., at p. 327; but in Stewart v. Stewart (1899), 1 F. (Ct. of Sess.) 1158, it was held that a restraint from carrying on a business by a person not employed in it was good.

(a) Davies, Turner & Co. v. Lowen, supra (carrier's clerk; time twelve months; area, London, Birmingham, Liverpool, and New York; and fifty miles of each: Birmingham held void as covenantees had no business there, but severable); Continental Tyre and Rubber (Great Britain) Co., Ltd. v. Heath (1913), 29 T. L. R. 308, 310 (traveller for tyre company; time, one year; area, United Kingdom, Germany, France: Germany and France void for the like reason, but severable).

(b) Nicholls v. Stretton (1847), 10 Q. B. 346; Baines v. Geary (1887), 35 Ch. D. 154; Dubowski & Sons v. Goldstein, supra (where, however, RIGBY, L.J., held, and Lord ESHER, M.R., thought, that a restriction as to both classes of customers was reasonable, doubting the applicability of Baines v. Geary, supra, in view of the modern rule); and see note (k), p. 562, ante.

(c) Dubowski & Sons v. Goldstein, supra; Doe d. Culvert v. Reid (1830), 10 B. & C. 849. As to the point in relation to covenants in brewers' leases, see title LANDLORD AND TENANT, Vol. XVIII., pp. 573, 574.

(d) Jacoby v. Whitmore (1883), 49 L. T. 335. In Marshall and Murray, Ltd. v. Jones (1913), 29 T. L. R. 351, the restraint was specifically limited to customers served by and from a named diary, and it was held that this could not be taken to refer to the same business set up in a different place.

(e) Mitchel v. Reynolds (1712), 1 P. Wms. 181; 1 Smith, L. C., 11th ed., p. 406; Colmer v. Clark (1734), 7 Mod. Rep. 230; Gunmakers' Society (Master etc.) v. Fell (1742), Willes, 384, 388; and see Re Tovey, Ex parte Lyne (1841), 5 Jur. 1088. The proposition will be found stated in practically all the cases on the subject, and it is unnecessary to set them out.

though the covenant be by deed (f). The consideration may be shown either on the face of the agreement or by extrinsic evidence (g), or may be reasonably inferred from the agreement (h).

SECT. 4.

1096. That the consideration must be legal is obvious (i). There is no illegality in the sale of a business which depends upon the personal character of the man who carries it on, even though the vendor is induced by a mere pecuniary consideration to recommend the purchaser to the clients (k).

Legality of consideration.

1097. A consideration is sufficient if it has some value and is not merely illusory (l). Mere employment at will is a sufficient consideration (m); so is the continuation of an existing employment at will (n). If the covenantor is already in the employment of the

It is, however, to be noted that this point has not been really considered in any case decided under more modern conditions, and for an argument against the proposition that consideration would now be required in the case of a deed, see Matthews and Adler, Restraint of Trade, 1907, p. 69. Inns* (1857), 24 Beav. 307 (agreement to employ for one month and thereafter at one month's notice at such wages as may from time to time be agreed upon; held sufficient consideration); Hood and Moore's Stores, Ltd. v. Jones (1899), 81 L. T. 169 (commission in addition to wages is consideration, as is the mere continuation of a pre-existing engagement). In the case of a waiter, who receives tips, 4s. a week is not merely a colourable consideration (Howard v. Danner (1901), 17 T. L. R. 548). Employment at one or two weeks' notice is sufficient consideration, even in the case of an infant covenantor (Evans v. Ware, [1892] 3 Ch. 502, 504; Cornwall v. Hawkins (1872), 41 L. J. covenantee at the date of the covenant, it will depend upon the particular circumstances of the case whether the covenant was really a part of the contract of service (o); and even if it was not, there appears to be sufficient consideration in the fact that if the servant refused to sign the covenant the employer might take the first opportunity of legally determining the service (p).

Partnership.

1098. A partnership determinable at any time on one month's notice is a sufficient consideration (q). In the case of a restraint upon a retiring partner the consideration is the whole of the partnership agreement (r).

Adequacy.

1099. When once it is established that there is a consideration of some value, the court will not inquire into its adequacy (s).

Contract executed.

1100. In an action for the sum payable in consideration of a covenant in restraint of trade, if the covenantor has submitted to the restraint, it is no defence to say that the restraint is unreasonably wide (t).

(o) See Mumford v. Gething (1859), 7 C. B. (N. S.) 305 (verbal agreement by covenantor to serve as traveller, it being arranged that the agreement was to be reduced to writing: covenantor served for three or four weeks, then signed covenant: held, that till then the employment was only inchoate, and that if he had refused to sign the plaintiffs could have refused to employ him); Woodbridge & Sons v. Bellamy, [1911] 1 Ch. 326, C. A., per EVE, J., at p. 332 (A. engaged B. on the 4th April, telling him to begin work on the 17th: covenant signed on the 16th: held, it was part of the contract of service. Fraser* (1904), 21 T. L. R. 8 (covenant not to enter into any business arrangement in competition with, or that would in any way interfere with, business of covenantee: held too vague; but, apparently, similar words may be operative in modifying a covenant otherwise too wide (Leather Cloth Co. v. Lonsont (1869), L. R. 9 Eq. 345, 355)); Reece v. Marsh (1906), 23 T. L. R. 24 (covenant not to "interfere with, prejudice or in any manner affect" a business: regarded as too vague; but the case was decided on the ground that it did not forbid the setting up of a rival business); Coleborne v. Kearns (1912), 46 L. L. T. 305, C. A. ("should we leave your employment" considered too vague); and compare Maxim Nordenfellt Guns and Ammunition Co. v. Nordenfellt (1892), 67 L. against him after he comes of age (e), and the presence of a penalty or liquidated damages clause does not invalidate the whole agreement (f); but the burden lies on the covenantee to show that the contract as a whole is for the infant's benefit, and that the covenant is only what is usual in such cases (g).

A reasonably limited covenant is binding upon an infant even (e) Fellows v. Wood (1888), 59 L. T. 513 (dairyman; covenant by infant not to serve persons who were customers during term of service; time, two years: held for benefit of infant); Evans v. Ware, [1892] 3 Ch. 502 (dairyman; covenant by infant not to compete; five miles; two years: held for infant's benefit); Gadd v. Thompson, [1911] 1 K. B. 304 (covenant by architect's apprentice; ten miles; ten years: held reasonable), following Bromley v. Smith, [1909] 2 K. B. 235, 242; compare Leslie v. Fitzpatrick (1877), 3 Q. B. D. 229. If after coming of age an infant continues for a substantial time in the service of an employer under a contract void because not for his benefit, a new contract on the same terms will, apparently, be inferred, and its reasonableness will be decided by the rules applicable in the case of an adult (Hooper and Ashby v. Willis (1905), 21 T. L. R. 691, per KEEWICH, J.; affirmed (1906), 22 T. L. R. 451, C. A., but not on this point, as the restraint was held unreasonable irrespective of infancy); compare Cornwall v. Hawkins (1872), 41 L. J. (CH.) 435 (subject to the Infants Relief Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 62), s. 2); Brown v. Harper (1893), 68 L. T. 488. As to infants' contracts being binding if beneficial as a whole, see Roberts v. Gray, [1913] 1 K. B. 520, C. A.; and title MASTER AND SERVANT, Vol. XX., pp. 72 et seq.; and compare Hooper and Ashby v. Willis, supra (a contract containing a restrictive covenant, signed by an infant employee but not by the employer, is not apparently a contract for the benefit of the infant). An injunction will not be granted to restrain a breach of a contract of apprenticeship during the apprenticeship (see title INFANTS AND CHILDREN, Vol. XVII., p. 72), though an apprentice may be held liable to pay the premium as the price of necessities; see ibid., p. 68; Waller v. Everard, [1891] 2 Q. B. 369, C. A. Quare, whether an injunction would be granted, during infancy, to restrain a breach of a restrictive covenant in a contract of service; see title INFANTS AND CHILDREN, Vol. XVII., p. 73; Gadd v. Thompson, supra, where PHILLIMORE, J., at p. 308, said that the price need not necessarily be money, but may consist in part of a restrictive covenant. In Morrison, Fleet & Co., Ltd. v. Fletcher (1900), 17 T. L. R. 95, an injunction was granted by Sir F. JEUNE restraining a covenantor while apparently still under age, and although the contract contained a liquidated damages clause. In Richards v. Whitham (1892), 66 L. T. 695, C. A., it was suggested that in the absence of a covenant by an infant articulated clerk a person who had entered into a bond for securing that the clerk should not practise within a certain area, and was sued on the bond, might have a remedy over by injunction against the clerk. As to injunctions generally, see title INJUNCTION, Vol. XVII., pp. 197 et seq.

(f) Morrison, Fleet & Co., Ltd. v. Fletcher supra; compare Hayne v. Burchell (1890), 39 Sol. Jo. 88, C. A., where such a clause was present in an infant's covenant, but there being no breach the question was not raised.

(g) Leng (Sir W. C.) & Co., Ltd. v. Andrews, [1909] 1 Ch. 763, C. A., per COZENS-HARDY, M. R., at p. 769 (but the covenant was there held unreasonable even for an adult); compare Leslie v. Fitzpatrick (1877), 3 Q. B. D. 229, 232. In Capes v. Hulton (1826), 2 Russ. 357; an injunction was refused where in articles of clerkship (solicitor's), entered into by an infant, the infant covenanted not to practise within twelve miles, and his father covenanted that on coming of age he should enter into a bond to that effect, and no bond having been executed, the covenantor broke the covenant after coming of age. But, apparently, the case was decided on the ground that the remedy, if any, lay against the father.

though it contain restrictions which are void, if those restrictions can be severed from the valid part of the covenant (h).

SECT. 5.
Parties.

SUB-SECT. 3.—Representatives and Assignees.

1104. A covenant imposed for the protection of a business and its goodwill (i) is for the benefit of the business, and not merely of the individual covenantee. The benefit of it passes, therefore, to the representatives or assignees of the covenantee, whether they are expressly mentioned or not (k). It forms part of the goodwill which passes on an assignment of the business (l), and it passes to the assignee of part of the business of the original covenantee (m). Assignment on death.

On the construction of the covenant, however, a different intention may appear; a covenant, for instance, not to trade so as directly or indirectly to affect continuing partners is personal to such partners (n).

SECT. 6.—Construction of the Contract.

SUB-SECT. 1.—In General.

1105. In construing a contract which is in restraint of trade the ordinary rules applicable to contracts must be applied (o). Intention of the parties.

If a stipulation in an apprenticeship deed makes the whole contract unfair to the infant, the whole contract is void; but "the whole contract" means "the whole contract so far as it was operative" (Bromley v. Smith, supra, per CHANNELL, J., at p. 243); compare Gadd v. Thompson, [1911] 1 K. B. 304.

by context.

1106. Where a clause is ambiguous the maxim ut res magis valeat quam pereat will apply (r). Consequently words which are general and might impose an unreasonable restraint have frequently, by reference to the context and the circumstances, been construed as having a limited meaning (s), and a restraint on the face of it

Construction of the Contract.

1107. Words must be construed in their ordinary business meaning (c). The ordinary rules for the construction of contracts apply in determining, for instance, whether the covenant is joint or joint and several (d), whether an infant is or not is bound (e), whether parol evidence may be admitted to prove that a term has a secondary meaning (f), whether the contract may be rectified (g), or whether the agreement is harsh and unconscionable (h).

SUB-SECT. 3.—No Presumption of Illegality.

1108. Illegality is not to be presumed (i), for there is no rule that a restraint is prima facie bad and that the burden is on the person supporting it to show that it is reasonable. The contract must first be construed without any leaning either way; and then its legality must be inquired into (k).

If when so construed it appears reasonable, the burden is on the covenantor to show that it clearly extends beyond what is required for the covenantee's protection (l), except where the covenantor is an infant, in which case the burden of proving reasonableness lies on the covenantee (m).

SECT. 7.—Severability.

Effect of illegality.

SECT. 7.

Severability.

When severance possible.

The covenant must, however, be so expressed that it is severable without making a new contract between the parties for the sake of validating an instrument otherwise void; the test is, whether it can be stated as two or more distinct covenants (q).

(restraint as to (i.) business of manufacturer of guns etc.; (ii.) any business competing with that for the time being carried on by covenantees: held severable; compare S. C., [1894] A. Barker*, [1899] 1 Ch. 300, C. A. (hay and straw merchant; restraint as to (i.) (restraint as to (i.) business of builders' merchant; (ii.) manufacturer of or dealer in cement and other materials manufactured by covenantees during term of service or any other business of a like nature to the business carried on or which might be carried on during the term: held severable; but an area of thirty miles was unreasonable and could not be severed; see note (q), infra); Lewis and Lewis v. Durnford (1907), 24 T. L. R. 64 (solicitor's clerk; covenant (i.) not to solicit "any person who for the time being is or who has within five years previously been a client of" the covenantees; (ii.) not to act for "any person who is or has within the previous five years been a client" of the covenantees: (ii.) held to refer to date of termination of service, therefore reasonable; and (i.) if unreasonable, was severable); Bromley v. Smith, [1909] 2 K. B. 235 (restraint as to business of (i.) baker; (ii.) confectioner or other businesses: held severable); Continental Tyre and Rubber (Great Britain) Co., Ltd. v. Heath (1913), 29 T. L. R. 308 (traveller for rubber tyre company; restraint as to "indiarubber goods whether wholesale or retail": held not severable; also as to the United Kingdom, Germany or France: Germany and France held severable); Lievre v. Mayonnet (1913), 2 L. J. County Courts Reporter, 4 (restraint as to Bradford and ten miles, and also as to certain other places: Bradford held severable); Caribonum Co., Ltd. v. Le Couch' (1913), 135 L. T. Jo. 370, C. A.; compare Leng (Sir W. C.) & Co., Ltd. v. Andrews, [1909] 1 Ch. 763, 766, C. A. (where the court refused to treat the covenant as severable); see 1 Smith, L. C., 11th ed., pp. 428, 429. As to the general principle, see Pigot's Case (1614), 11 Co. Rep. 26 b, 27 a; Wallis v. Day (1837), 2 M. & W. 273 (if a party make several contracts, one of which is illegal, he is, nevertheless, liable to perform the others); and title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 408. As to severing in the case of bye-laws, see note (o), pp. 531, 532, ante.

(q) Price v. Green (1847), 16 M. & W. 346, Ex. Ch.; Baker v. Hedgecock (1888), 39 Ch. D. 520 (restraint as to "any business whatsoever": CHITTY, J., refused to hold this good in so far as it referred to the business of a tailor). In Mason v. Provident Clothing and Supply Co., Ltd. (1913), 29 T. L. R. 727, H. L., Lord MOULTON, at p. 729, said that when the part enforceable was clearly severable, yet even so it ought only to be enforced where the excess was trivial or merely technical and not a part of the main purport and substance of the clause. But where the words permit, general words will be construed as limited; compare Avery v. Langford (1854), Kay, 663; and see pp. 570, 571, ante); Woods v. Thornburn (1897), 103 L. T. Jo. 421 (restraint as to "any other business" not severable and too wide);

It is not permissible to sever a proviso from the rest of the covenant when the proviso affects the meaning of the whole (r); and one part of a covenant may not be severed from another unless an enforceable contract remains (s).

SECT. 7.
Sever-ability.

On a similar principle, where a covenant is so worded as to cover cases which may possibly arise, but to which it cannot reasonably be applied, the unreasonable and hypothetical cases may be treated as severable and the covenant will not be void as a whole (t).

SECT. 8.—Formalities.

1110. An agreement in restraint of trade is governed by the ordinary rules of contract as to the necessity for writing, but otherwise no special formalities are required (a).

SECT. 9.—Breach.

SUB-SECT. 1.—In General.

1111. The question whether there has been a breach of a contract in restraint of trade turns frequently upon narrow distinctions between particular words and phrases, and depends upon the agreement and the circumstances in each case.

Question of construction and circumstances.

Director.

1112. A person who is a director of a company carrying on a business carries on or is engaged, concerned, or interested in that business (c).

Manager at fixed salary.

A person who is engaged as an assistant or manager at a fixed salary not depending on profits or gross returns is not "directly or indirectly interested" in the business (d), since an "interest" means a proprietary or pecuniary interest (e), though it does not include the case of a person who is merely a creditor of a person who carries on the business (f); nor is such an assistant or manager thereby "exercising or carrying on" a business (g), but he is "engaged" or "concerned" in the business (h).

(b) Drew v. Guy, [1894] 3 Ch. 25, C. A. (covenant in lease; the supply of chops, steaks etc. is "similar" to the supply of hot meals and alcoholic drinks); Castelli v. Middleton (1901), 17 T. L. R. 373 (covenant by vendor of business of manufacturing "annatto" (a vegetable colouring matter) and food preservatives; business mainly concerned in manufacturing dairy utensils, but also to a limited extent in selling by retail "annatto" and food preservatives, chiefly bought wholesale from covenantee; held to be a competing business); Automobile Carriage Builders, Ltd. v. Watkins (1863), 11 W. R. 319 (chemist's assistant: covenant not to carry on the business "in his own name or for his own benefit or in the name or names or for the benefit of any person or persons in D."); held no breach to act as servant and take orders within the area for persons carrying on business outside the area). R. 371 (covenant not to be engaged in a business held broken by being employed as an assistant; but whole covenant was held bad). But in Ramoneur Co., Ltd. v. Brixey (1911), 104 L. T. 809, a covenant by a chimney-sweep not to undertake any work or orders of any kind except for the covenantees, or to carry on or be concerned in the business either by himself or in conjunction with any person, was held not to apply to employment as a servant; compare Dales v. Weaben (1870), 18 W. R. 993 ("with the assistance of any other person" held to mean "as assistant of any other person" where covenantor had set up a business in the area of restraint, and then sold that business to another person and became his manager); and compare the old cases under stat. (1562—3) 5 Eliz. c. 4, referred to in note (n), pp. 511, 512, ante. In Lievre v. Mayonnet (1913), 2 L. J. County Courts Reporter, 4, it was held that the words "not to teach or give instructions nor advertise himself as a teacher of any language" did not mean "set up for himself" only; to enter the service of another was a breach.

(i) Palmer v. Mallet (1887), 36 Ch. D. 411, 422, C. A., distinguishing Allen v. Taylor (1871), 19 W. R. 556; followed in Robertson v. Willmott (1909), 25 T. L. R. 681 (assistant to architect). As to architects generally, see title BUILDING CONTRACTS, ENGINEERS, AND ARCHITECTS, Vol. III., pp. 153 et seq.

(k) Smith v. Hancock, [1894] 2 Ch. 377, C. A. (even though he helps her by writing a circular inviting "old friends" to be customers, and by introducing her to dealers, and in other ways). Apparently, he is not "interested" by merely taking a friendly interest in forwarding a business set up by a stranger; see ibid., per A. L. SMITH, L.J., at p. 391. But, apparently, it is not unreasonable to require a covenantor "not to induce or assist any other person to commence the business" (Lyddon v. Thomas (1901), 17 T. L. R. 450 (where such a covenant (inter alia) was held reasonable)).

or business must be taken in their ordinary business meaning, subject to the general rules applicable as to the admission of evidence of a secondary meaning (m).

Though the subject-matter may be the same, the business of a merchant or dealer is distinct from that of a manufacturer (n) and the business of a stockbroker from that of a stock-dealer (o); but the selling of goods wholesale is not a distinct business from the selling of the same goods retail (p).

Hullon*, [1899] 1 Ch. 884 (covenant not to publish a sporting paper not broken by publication of a paper recording amateur sports, but with no racing intelligence or betting odds). As to the meaning of a covenant by a retiring partner not to attend as a dentist any patients of the remaining partners, see Harris v. Mansbridge (1900), 17 T. L. R. 7 Exch. 127 (covenant not to travel for any porter, ale or spirit merchant: held no breach to travel for a brewer, for a merchant is one who buys and sells, not one who sells his own manufactures); see Automobile Carriage Builders Ltd. v. Sayers (1909), 101 L. T. 419 (covenant with motor carriage builders not to carry on or be engaged in any business "similar to or including the business" of the covenantees held broken by selling motor carriages, though the covenantor contended that he did not manufacture; but he had held himself out as a manufacturer); but compare Harms v. Render, [1905] 2 Ch. 320 (where the covenant was not to do within the area any work or act usually done by solicitors, and it was held, by Buckley, J., a breach for the covenantor, instructed outside the area, to send a solicitor's letter to a person within the area). A demand made, or advice given, by letter is an act done at the address of the addressee, and the post office is the agent of the sender (ibid.); see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 353; see also Edmundson v. Render (1904), 90 L. T. 814 (the same covenant as above, but different breaches alleged), where it was held by Kekewich, J., as follows:—To obtain probate of the will of a person who died within the area, apparently a breach; to correspond with a witness within the area for the purpose of obtaining probate of a will of a person who died without the area, quære whether a breach, but apparently not; to advertise the letting of a farm within the area in a paper published without, but circulating within, the area, no breach; to take proceedings in a county court within the area, appears regularly at courts in the area (r); nor does he “take away clients” from another solicitor if he acts for persons who have been clients of the other but have left him (s).

SECT. 9.
Breach.

A doctor who attends a few patients at their own request within the area of restraint, but has no residence or premises there, does not “set up in practice” there, but he does “practise” there (t); and it seems that a trader who applies for orders or supplies goods within an area carries on business there, though he has no premises there (a).

though without attending there either in person or by a clerk, a breach, for the registrar is the agent of the plaintiff's solicitor for the purpose; to attend at the execution of a will within the area, a breach, unless, apparently, this is done as a friendly act without fee; but no breach to prepare a will for a person within the area on instructions received without the area, and to send it for execution within the area; compare Freeman v. Fox (1911), 55 Sol. Jo. 650 (covenant not to practise or act as a solicitor held not broken by doing one act of a solicitor and writing several letters to persons within the area). Similarly a patent agent may communicate by post with the Patent Office within the area (Lake v. Harrison (1897), 13 T. L. R. 568).

(r) Llewellyn v. Simpson (1891), 91 L. T. Jo. 9. As does a patent agent if he appears personally or by clerk on applications at the Patent Office, but not if he appears by an agent (Lake v. Harrison, supra).

(s) Hayne v. Burchell (1890), 35 Sol. Jo. 88, C. A. Where solicitors in partnership agree that on dissolution neither is to do business with “original clients” of the other, “original clients” comprise those who were clients of either before the partnership and those who during the partnership were by arrangement particularly the clients of either (Badham v. Williams (1900), 83 L. T. 141).

(t) Robertson v. Buchanan (1904), 73 L. J. (CH.) 408, C. A. But, apparently, it would be “setting up in practice” to drive regularly round the area (ibid., per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., at p. 410), or to attend a large number of patients at their invitation (ibid., per STIRLING, L.J., at p. 411). In Rogers v. Drury (1888), 57 L. J. (CH.) 504, a doctor who had covenanted not to practise or reside in the area or otherwise directly or indirectly to enter into competition with the purchaser of his business was held to have committed a breach by attending patients who summoned him and stated that in no event would they have called in the purchaser. But a dentist retiring from partnership who covenants not to attend any patients of the other partners may attend such persons as during the partnership were particularly his patients (Harris v. Mansbridge (1900), 17 T. L. R. 21), and, apparently, a dentist who by his articles of partnership is on dissolution in certain circumstances expressly entitled to practise may attend patients of the old firm (Clifford v. Phillips (1907), 51 Sol. Jo. 748); but quære whether he may solicit such patients (ibid.); compare title PARTNERSHIP, Vol. XXII., pp. 84, 92.

(a) Turner v. Evans (1852), 2 Do G. M. & G. 740, C. A. (sale of wine merchant's business; covenant never “by himself, his partner or agent, or otherwise howsoever, directly or indirectly” to “set up, embark in, or carry on” the business); Brampton v. Beddoes (1863), 13 C. B. (N. S.) 538 (sale of drapery business; covenant not to carry on or assist in carrying on: held a breach to supply to customers within the area from a place beyond it); Dayer-Smith v. Ladsley (1913), 108 L. T. 897, C. A. (covenant by retiring partner in firm of auctioneers not to carry on or be engaged or interested within an area, apparently broken by taking an office without, but setting up boards and systematically communicating with persons within, the area). Apparently a stockbroker who has covenanted not to carry on business within an area may start an office within the area and deal with clients within it, but not tout for clients within the area (Lyddon v. Thomas (1901), 17 T. L. R. 450, per FARWELL J.).

Breach.

A person, however, does not carry on, and is not interested or concerned in, a business within an area by merely acting, outside the area, for a person carrying on business within it (b); but a newspaper is published within an area if substantial numbers of it are distributed from an office within the area, though the chief place of printing and publishing is without the area (c).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Waiver and Release.

Waiver and release.

1116. It is no breach if the act complained of is done with the assent and for the benefit of the assignee (d).

A consent given on one occasion to the covenantor's engaging in the trade is not a release of the covenant for the future (e).

SECT. 10.—Remedies for Breach.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Injunction.

Alternative
remedy.

1117. A valid covenant in restraint of trade will be enforced by injunction notwithstanding that it provides for the payment of a sum by way of liquidated damages (f); the covenantee cannot, however, obtain both the damages and an injunction, but must elect between the two (g). Such election may be made in the statement of claim,

R. 220 (dissolution of auctioneers' and estate agents' partnership: covenant not to carry on "directly or indirectly on his own account or as agent or assistant of, or in partnership with, any other person," or to be "interested or concerned": no breach to advertise outside the area houses within the area on behalf of a person carrying on business within the area). D. 636, the contrary proposition was argued, but the point was ignored in the judgment; see, further, title INJUNCTION, Vol. XVII., pp. 236, 237. For instances of enforcement of injunction by committal, see Middleton v. Brown (1878), 47 L. J. (CH.) 411, C. A.; Dollridge Brothers, Ltd. v. Crook (1907), 23 T. L. R. 644; and title INJUNCTION, Vol. XVII., p. 291. The court has, apparently, a discretion to limit the extent of the injunction; compare Cussen v. O'Connor (1893), 32 L. R. Ir. 330. The injunction should, it seems, specify so far as possible the precise nature of the acts prohibited (Provident Clothing and Supply Co., Ltd. v. Mason, [1913] 1 K. B. 65, 77, C. A.; reversed, without affecting this point, sub nom. Mason v. Provident Clothing and Supply Co., Ltd., [1913] A. C. 724).

and is not affected by the fact that both remedies have been claimed in the writ (h).

SECT. 10.
Remedies
for Breach.

1118. A covenant in restraint of trade will not be enforced by injunction, nor will damages be awarded for its breach (i), unless the covenantee has performed and is willing and able to perform in future his part of the contract of which the covenant forms a part, if the stipulations of the covenant and covenantor are mutually dependent (k). Such a covenant will, however, be enforced even though the agreement contains other covenants which cannot be specifically enforced, if such other covenants are capable of being separated (l).

(h) Lewis and Lewis v. Durnford (1907), 24 T. L. R. 64; compare Cargill v. Bower (1878), 10 Ch. D. 502, 508. In Saintier v. Ferguson (1849), 1 Mac. & G. 286, the covenantee had recovered judgment for the liquidated damages and costs at law, and proved for the costs only in bankruptcy, and it was held that he had elected, though, apparently, the court might on a proper application have made an order so limited as to keep his right alive; compare Fox v. Scard (1863), 33 Beav. 327 (if a plaintiff recovered only nominal damages at law in a case where a court of equity had sent him to law to try his right, he did not lose his right to an injunction; otherwise, if he obtained substantial damages). Occasionally the court has refused costs to a defendant who has successfully established that his covenant is in restraint of trade (Allsopp v. Wheatecroft (1872), L. R. 15 Eq. 59; Ehrman v. Bartholomew, [1898] 1 Ch. 671, 674; Lamson Pneumatic Tube Co. v. Phillips (1904), 91 L. T. 363, C. A. (where, however, as the judgment was reversed in the Court of Appeal, no question as to the costs arose in that court)).

Hadley* (1904), 21 T. L. R. 165, C. A. (appointment of receiver for debenture-holders, and dismissal by him of the managing director, does not release the latter from a covenant not to trade). But if a servant is paid a week's salary in lieu of notice and dismissed, that is not a wrongful dismissal releasing him from a restrictive covenant (Dennis (W.) & Sons, Ltd. v. Tunnard Brothers (1911), 56 Sol. Jo. 162). As to the question whether stipulations are dependent or independent, see titles CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 434, 435; DEEDS AND OTHER INSTRUMENTS, Vol. X., p. 489; as to the effect of the plaintiff's conduct on the right to an injunction, see title INJUNCTION, Vol. XVII., p. 247.

Rolfe* (1846), 15 Sim. 88 (A., a retiring partner (tailor's business), covenanted with B. not to trade within certain limits; B. covenanted to employ A. so long as B. continued in the business: injunction granted against A., though B.'s covenant could not have been specifically enforced); Daggett v. Ryman (1868), 17 L. T. 486; compare Kemble v. Kean (1829), 6 Sim. 333, per SHADWELL, V.-C., at p. 535. As to the enforcement of positive and negative covenants, and the cases in which negative covenants will be implied, see title INJUNCTION, Vol. XVII., pp. 242 et seq.; as to the general principles on which the court will interfere by injunction, see ibid., p. 236.

right(m), and unless the sum is in reality a penalty and not liquidated damages(n); but it seems clear that he cannot recover the agreed sum more than once(o).

1120. A covenantor cannot, by offering to pay the liquidated damages agreed, release himself from an express covenant not to trade(p), nor from such a covenant inferred from the whole agreement(q).

SECT. 11.—Miscellaneous.

Stamp duty.

1121. The penalty, if any, inserted in the agreement is not the subject-matter of the agreement for the purposes of stamp duty(r).

Judicial notice of illegality.

1122. The court will take notice of the illegality of a covenant in restraint of trade even though it be not pleaded(s).

Not "usual" covenant.

1123. Covenants in restraint of trade in a lease in a trading locality are not "usual covenants"(t), and a covenant on the sale

In Mitchel v. Reynolds (1712), 1 P. Wms. 181, 187, 194; 1 Smith, L. C., 11th ed., p. 406, at pp. 410, 416, it was said that the enforcement of a contract in lawful restraint of trade by a penalty was lawful, but the penalty was in fact treated as liquidated damages. A sum may be recovered as liquidated damages though described as a penalty (Saintier v. Ferguson (1849), 7 C. B. 716; see, generally, title DAMAGES, Vol. X., pp. 328 et seq.; Upton v. Henderson (1912), 106 L. T. 839; Webster v. Bosanquet, [1912] A. C. 394, P. C.).

(p) Bird v. Lake (1863), 1 Hem. & M. 111, 338; even though a recital of the bond suggests an inference that such was the intention of the parties, unless the bond be rectified (ibid.).

(q) As, for instance, where an agreement not to trade is to be inferred from a recital in a bond, there being no express covenant (Howard v. Woodward (1864), 10 Jur. (N. S.) 1123), or from the words of the bond itself, without any recitals (London and Yorkshire Bank, Ltd. v. Pritt (1887), 56 L. J. (CH.) 987, following Gravelly v. Barnard (1874), L. R. 18 Eq. 518; National Provincial Bank of England v. Marshall, supra). It is a question depending on the intention of the parties in each case, whether there was an agreement not to trade, or merely an agreement to pay for the right to trade; see, generally, title INJUNCTION, Vol. XVII., p. 236.

of a business restricting the vendor from carrying on a like business is not mere common form, and a demand for such a covenant amounts to a reopening of negotiations (u). SECT. 11.
Miscellaneous.

1124. The rules which govern contracts in restraint of trade are as applicable to foreigners trading in England as to English traders (a); and if the contract is void as against the public policy of England, it will not be enforced in an English court though made in a country where no objection could be raised to it (b). Part VI.—Goodwill.

SECT. 1.

Nature of Goodwill.

Definition.

SECT. 1.—Nature of Goodwill.

1126. The goodwill (d) of a business is the whole advantage of the reputation and connexion formed with customers together with the circumstances, whether of habit or otherwise, which tend to make such connexion permanent (e).

(d) As to the rights of partners in respect of the goodwill of the partnership business generally, see title PARTNERSHIP, Vol. XXII., pp. 83, 104 et seq.; as to compensation for goodwill on compulsory purchase, see title COMPULSORY PURCHASE OF LAND AND COMPENSATION, Vol. VI., p. 36; as to goodwill in relation to stamp duties, see title SALE OF LAND, Vol. XXV., p. 447; as to an executor's duty to preserve his testator's business, see title EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, Vol. XIV., p. 294; as to goodwill in relation to rating, see title RATES AND RATING, Vol. XXIV., pp. 27, 41; as to the sale of goodwill in bankruptcy, see title BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY, Vol. II., pp. 119, 160, 161, 224; as to goodwill in relation to the duties on land values, see title REVENUE, Vol. XXIV., pp. 550 et seq.; as to goodwill in relation to trade marks and names, see title TRADE MARKS, TRADE NAMES, AND DESIGNS, pp. 718, 719, post; as to goodwill as property liable to be taken in execution, see title FRAUDULENT AND VOIDABLE CONVEYANCES, Vol. XV., p. 79.

(e) Trego v. Hunt, [1896] A. C. 7, 16, 17, 23, 27, where Lords HERSCHELL, MACNAGHTEN and DAVEY criticised as too narrow the definition by Lord ELDON of goodwill as "nothing more than the probability that the old customers will resort to the old place"; Crutwell v. Lye (1810), 17 Ves. 335, 346; and see the similar narrow definitions in Chessum v. Dewes (1828), 5 Russ. 29, per LEACH, M.R., at p. 30; Austen v. Boys (1858), 2 De G. & J. 626, per Lord CHELMSFORD, L.C., at p. 635; Re Kitchen, Ex parte Punnett (1880), 16 Ch. D. 226, C. A., per JESSEL, M.R., at p. 233; Stewart v. Gladstone (1879), 10 Ch. D. 626, 657, C. A. and see note (n), p. 592, post. The wider view is to be found in the following cases:—Kennedy v. Lee (1817), 3 Mer. 441 (where Lord ELDON, L.C., at p. 452, attributed the goodwill of a trade to the fact of sole ownership); England v. Downs (1842), 6 Beav. 269, 276 (in relation to a licensed house); Potter v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (1854), 10 Exch. 147, per POLLOCK, C.B., at p. 157; Wedderburn v. Wedderburn (No. 4) (1856), 22 Beav. 84, per ROMILLY, M.R., at p. 104; Churlton v. Douglas (1859), John. 174, per WOOD, V.-C., at pp. 188, 189; Ginesi v. Cooper & Co. (1880), 14 Ch. D. 596, per JESSEL, M.R., at p. 600; West London Syndicate, Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, [1898] 2 Q. B. 507, C. A., per RIGBY, L.J., at p. 523; Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Muller & Co.'s Margarine, Ltd., [1901] A. C. 217, per Lord MACNAGHTEN, at p. 223 ("What is goodwill? It is a thing very easy to describe, very difficult to define. It is the benefit and advantage of the good name, reputation and connection of a business. It is the attractive force which brings in custom. It is the one thing which distinguishes an old established business from a new business at its first start"); ibid., per Lord DAVEY, at p. 227 ("The term goodwill is nothing more than a summary of the rights accruing to the [purchasers] from their purchase of the business and property employed in it"); ibid., per Lord LINDLEY, at p. 235 ("I understand the word to include whatever adds value to a business by reason of situation, name and reputation, connection, introduction to old customers, and agreed absence from competition, or any of these things"); Hill v. Fearis, [1905] 1 Ch. 466, per WARRINGTON, J., at p. 471; and see Corbin v. Stewart (1911), 28 T. L. R. 99. Goodwill is included in the words "trade interest" in betterment clauses, as, for instance, in the London County Council (Tower Bridge Southern Approach) Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. cxxx.), s. 36 (Re London County Council and City of London Brewery Co., [1898] 1 Q. B. 387, 393);

1127. A distinction has been drawn between personal goodwill, which is merely the advantage of the recommendation of the owner of a business and of the use of his name, and local goodwill, which is attached to premises (f), and must be taken into account in calculating the value of such premises (g). There may be a goodwill attached to a business which depends upon personal relations between the man who carries it on and his clients or customers, such as the business of a stockbroker (h) or a solicitor (i), or a surgeon or doctor (k), or a dentist (l); and even though a successor but not in the words "goods, wares and merchandise" (Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Muller & Co.'s Margarine, Ltd., [1901] A. C. 217, per Lord LINDLEY, at p. 235). It has been held to be included in the words "gas works and plant" on a purchase by a municipal corporation under a statute (Hamilton Gas Co., Ltd. v. Hamilton Corporation (1910), 26 T. L. R. 377, P. C.). It includes the licence in the case of a public-house (Rutter v. Daniel (1882), 30 W. R. 724, 801, C. A.), and in partnership cases may include a partner's share of the capital (Cox v. Wolloughby (1880), 13 Ch. D. 863). "Goodwill" has been also applied to the interest which a person has who is entitled to a lease on condition that he erects buildings on the land (Baxter v. Conolly (1820), 1 Jac. & W. 576); compare title PARTNERSHIP, Vol. XXII., p. 104, note (i).

(f) Re Thomas, Ex parte Thomas (1841), 2 Mont. D. & De G. 294, 296 (purely personal goodwill does not pass to the assignee of a bankrupt); Potter v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (1854), 10 Exch. 147, per POLLOCK, C.B., at p. 157; Llewellyn v. Rutherford (1875), L. R. 10 C. P. 456, per BRETT, J., at p. 469; Cooper v. Metropolitan Board of Works (1883), 25 Ch. D. 472, C. A.; Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Muller & Co.'s Margarine, Ltd., supra, per Lord BRAMPTON, at p. 231. The earlier tendency was to recognise only the existence of local goodwill; see the cases referred to in note (e), p. 590, ante, note (a), p. 593, post.

(g) Edwards v. Edwards (1837), 1 Jur. 654 (goodwill must be included in calculating the value of the reversion of a public-house); Cartwright v. Seuloates Union, [1900] A. C. 150; and see title RATES AND RATING, Vol. XXIV., p. 41.

(h) Hill v. Keatts, [1905] 1 Ch. 466, doubting Wilson v. Williams (1892), 29 L. R. Ir. 176, if and in so far as it decided that there could be no goodwill in such a case; see note (m), p. 592, post.

(i) Chappel v. Griffith (1885), 53 L. T. 459 (where it was assumed that there could be goodwill of such a business); Burchell v. Wilde, [1900] 1 Ch. 551, C. A., per LINDLEY, M.R., at p. 562 (a similar assumption). On the other hand it was thought by Lord CHELMSFORD, L.C., in Austen v. Boys (1858), 2 De G. & J. 626, at p. 635, that there could be no goodwill of the practice of a solicitor; and the term "goodwill" in that case was held to mean merely a partner's interest in the business till the end of the term of the partnership; and in Arundell v. Bell (1883), 52 L. J. (CH.) 537, C. A., JESSEL, M.R., at p. 538, took a similar view. But on this point BAGGALLAY, L.J., ibid., at p. 539, and LINDLEY, L.J., ibid., at p. 540, were doubtful; and in Spicer v. James (1830) (unreported, but referred to in Collyer's Law of Partnership, p. 104), a bill by creditors of a deceased attorney for an account of the profits of a person who had conducted the business with the consent of the widow was dismissed on the ground that the goodwill of an attorney's business was of a personal character and could not form assets in an administration suit; see Smale v. Graves (1850), 3 De G. & Sm. 706; Corbin v. Stewart (1911), 28 T. L. R. 99.

(k) Farr v. Pearce (1818), 3 Madd. 74; and compare May v. Thomson (1882), 20 Ch. D. 705, C. A., per JESSEL, M.R., at p. 718; Corbin v. Stewart, supra. As to the prohibition of the sale of the practice of a fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, see title MEDICINE AND PHARMACY, Vol. XX., p. 310.

may not use the old name, it may be an advantage of appreciable value merely to be a successor (m), though, in some cases such goodwill may be so worthless as to be unsaleable (n).

1128. An important element in estimating the value of goodwill is, of course, the existence or non-existence of covenants restraining the vendor of, or partners or employees in, the business from competing with it (o), and the benefit of such covenants passes as incident to the goodwill (p).

1129. Goodwill is not a thing which can be separated and dealt with apart from the business out of which it arises (q); but it may be dealt with as an entity separate from the particular premises in which such business has been carried on (r). Where, however, it is attached to premises and enhances their value, it is inseparable from them; the price of it, therefore, belongs to a mortgagee of the premises (s), and if the premises are freehold the price does not form part of the personal estate of the owner (t).

(m) Hull v. Fearis, [1905] 1 Ch. 466, doubting Wilson v. Williams (1892), 29 L. R. 1r. 176. But Lord BRAMPTON (ibid., at p. 230) apparently restricted the statement in the text to cases where the goodwill is attached to certain premises, and Lord JAMES OF HEREFORD (ibid., at p. 228), suggested that there might be cases in which a goodwill had no local situation. In ascertaining the locality of goodwill, if the trade is carried on in certain premises, the goodwill is not severable from such premises; see ibid., per Lord BRAMPTON, at p. 231; and compare *Ricket v. by a partner to retire from a firm is not necessarily equivalent to an agreement to sell the goodwill (c).

A transfer of goodwill can be effected without writing, except in so far as writing may be required by the Statute of Frauds (f).

1133. Such transfer confers on the transferee the exclusive right to carry on the business transferred, the exclusive right to represent himself as carrying on such business (g), and, as against the transferor, the exclusive right to use the name under which the business has been carried on (h); but such name must not be so used as to expose the transferor to a risk of personal liability owing to his being held out as the owner of or a partner in the business (i).

But an agreement by a partner to assign a share of partnership assets which include an interest in land is within the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3) (Gray v. Smith, supra). For precedents of assignment of goodwill in various trades, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. VI., pp. 168 et seq. As to the application of the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3) generally, see titles CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 361 et seq.; SALE OF GOODS, Vol. XXV., pp. 127, 123; SALE OF LAND, Vol. XXV., pp. 292 et seq.

Smith*, supra); otherwise, where the goodwill is divided between partners (Burchell v. Wilde, supra); see title PARTNERSHIP, Vol. XXII., pp. 83, 104 et seq.; and, for trade names and marks generally, see title TRADE MARKS, TRADE NAMES, AND DESIGNS, pp. 718, 719, post.

Wilde*, supra; as to the right to use a partnership name, see title PARTNERSHIP, Vol. XXII., pp. 83, 104 et seq. Whether the name is a real or fancy name is material in deciding whether such a risk is caused (Chatteris v. Isaacson, supra; Gray v. Smith, supra; Thynne v. Shove, supra, at p. 582; and see Churton v. Douglas, supra, at p. 190). Where the vendor has carried on the business in a name not his own and sold the goodwill with the exclusive right to use that name, he may not afterwards trade under that name in competition with the purchaser (Pomeroy (Mrs.), Ltd. v. Scalé (1906), 23 T. L. R. 170); and there may be cases in which the name is so identified with the business that the vendor may not use it even in the absence of express words granting the rights in it to the purchaser (ibid.).

1134. In the absence of an express restrictive covenant no covenant to that effect will be implied, and the vendor of the goodwill of a business may set up a competing business (k), unless he is estopped by conduct amounting to fraud which has encouraged others to involve themselves, or to pay him money in the confidence that he will not trade again either at all or within a limited area (l). He may advertise himself as having been a partner in or the founder of or a manager or employee in the old business (m); but he may not represent himself to be a successor to, or as carrying on a continuation of, the old business (n), or use the trade marks of the old business (o). Similarly, a person who has sold the goodwill (p) may not solicit privately any person who was a customer of the

D. 306, C. A.; Walker v. Mottram (1881), 19 Ch. D. 355, C. A., disapproving Ginesi v. Cooper & Co., supra, in so far as it prohibited dealing with old customers; Mogford v. Jennings, [1898] 1 Ch. 378, 382; Gillingham v. Beddow, [1900] 2 Ch. 242. But an express provision authorising the vendor to set up a similar business may be such as to allow him to solicit old customers, and to this extent Pearson v. Pearson, supra, is not overruled by Trego v. Hunt, supra; see Jennings v. Jennings, supra, at p. 385; Re David and Matthews, [1899] 1 Ch. 378; Gillingham v. Beddow, supra, at p. 244. The obligation not to solicit customers is personal, and not an incident to the transfer of property (Walker v. Mottram, supra, at p. 364; Jennings v. Jennings, supra, at p. 283); and the prohibition does not apply to a bankrupt whose business has been sold by his trustee (Walker v. Mottram, supra); see title BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY, Vol. II., pp. 160, 161. Though if the trustee of the bankrupt has actively helped to deprive the purchaser of the benefit of his contract by assisting the bankrupt to start again in trade, it may be a question whether the purchaser is, as against the trustee, bound to carry out his contract; see Crutwell v. Lye (1810), 17 Ves. 335, per Lord ELDON, L.C., at p. 347. A partner expelled from a partnership is, apparently, in the same position as a bankrupt or other involuntary vendor (Dawson v. Beeson (1882), 22 Ch. D. 504, C. A.), and see title PARTNERSHIP, Vol. XXII., p. 84. As to the distinction between a voluntary and an involuntary vendor, see *Jennings v. SECT-SECT. 1.—Definition of a Trade Union.

1136. A trade union is any combination, whether temporary or permanent, the principal objects of which are the objects mentioned in the Trade Union Act Amendment Act, 1876 (a), s. 16, now called "statutory objects" (b), namely, the regulation (c) of the relations between workmen and masters, or between workmen and his name; but the ground for the doubt was the supposed rule of public policy against such an agreement, as to which see note (h), pp. 565, 592, note (m), ante. But in Cooper v. Hood (1858), 26 Beav. 293, ROMILLY, M.R., at p. 299, was of opinion that a contract for sale of "goodwill etc." might not be too uncertain for specific performance, though specific performance was refused on the ground of other uncertainties; and see title SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE, pp. 21 et seq., ante. (a) 39 & 40 Vict. c. 22.

(b) Trade Union Act, 1913 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 30), ss. 1 (2), 2 (1). This Act is, by ibid., s. 8, to be construed as one with the Trade Union Acts, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 31), and 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 22). The definition in the Trade Union Act Amendment Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 22), s. 16, was as follows: "The term 'trade union' means any combination, whether temporary or permanent, for regulating the relations between workmen and masters, or between workmen and workmen, or between masters and masters, or for imposing restrictive conditions on the conduct of any trade or business, whether such combination would or would not, if the principal Act" (the Trade Union Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 31)) "had not been passed, have been deemed to have been an unlawful combination by reason of some one or more of its purposes being in restraint of trade." The Trade Union Act, 1913 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 30), s. 2 (1), extended this definition (which had been construed as strictly limiting the powers of a trade union; see p. 606, post) by providing that the objects mentioned in the Trade Union Act Amendment Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 22), s. 16 must be the "principal" objects, and that other objects were permissible, subject to provisions as to the furtherance of specified political objects (Trade Union Act, 1913 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 30), s. 1 (1); see pp. 598, 608, post). A trade union is not a charity; see title CHARITIES, Vol. IV., p. 119.

(c) As to the meaning of "regulate," see Gozney v. Bristol Trade and Provident Society, [1909] 1 K. B. 901, C. A., per CHANNELL, J., at p. 908, and per FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., at p. 919. The words "regulate the relations etc." cover the provision of sickness and insurance benefits and the like (Osborne v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, [1909] 1 Ch. 163, C. A., per FARWELL, L.J., at p. 191), a view which is now confirmed by the definition of "statutory objects" in the Trade Union Act, 1913 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 30), s. 1 (2).

workmen, or between masters and masters, or the imposing of restrictive conditions on the conduct of any trade or business (d), and also the provision of benefits to members (e), whether such combination would or would not, but for the Trade Union Act, 1871 (f), have been deemed to have been an unlawful combination by reason of one or more of its purposes being in restraint of trade (g).

Any combination, however, which is for the time being registered as a trade union (h) is deemed to be a trade union within the definition so long as it continues to be so registered (i).

The fact that a combination has under its constitution objects or powers other than statutory objects as defined above does not prevent the combination being a trade union for the purposes of the Trade Union Acts (j), so long as it is a trade union within the above definition (h).

(d) As, for instance, an agreement between manufacturers with regard to the purchase and exchange of their manufactures, and the employment of travellers, with fines for breach of rules (Edinburgh and District Aerated Waters Manufacturers Defence Association v. Jenkinson & Co. (1903), 5 F. (Ct. of Sess.) 1159); between dock companies and tea warehouse keepers as to the rates to be charged, and the employment of, or purchase of tea from, dock companies and warehouse keepers not in the agreement (Chamberlain's Wharf, Ltd. v. Smith, [1900] 2 Ch. 605, C. A.; compare Merrifield, Ziegler & Co. v. Liverpool Cotton Association, Ltd. (1911) 105 L. T. 97). For cases where an association of masters was held not to be a trade union, see Aberdeen Master Masons' Incorporation, Ltd. v. Smith, [1908] S. C. 669; British Association of Glass Bottle Manufacturers, Ltd. v. Nettlefold (1911), 27 T. L. R. 527. Associations of musicians, music-hall artistes, and the like have been registered and have claimed the benefit of the Trade Union Acts as though they came within the definition (see, for instance, Richards v. Bartram (1908), 25 T. L. R. 181; Dallimore v. Williams and Jesson (1912), 29 T. L. R. 67, C. A.); and the point whether they are trade unions does not appear to have been taken in any case; but it is to be noted that the words are "workmen," "trade or business"; as to the meaning of "trade" and "business," and the distinction between trade or business and a profession, see note (a), p. 509, ante; for the definition of "workman," see the Trade Disputes Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 47), s. 5 (3); and p. 662, post. But the point in the case of any union actually registered appears to be now met by the proviso to the Trade Union Act, 1913 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 30), s. 2 (1). For a precedent of the rules of an association of employers not registered under Trade Union Acts, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. XIV., p. 522.

Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners*, [1912] A. C. 421, per Lord Robson, at p. 440. As the definition in the Trade Union Act Amendment Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 22), is not repealed by the Trade Union Act, 1913 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 30); and the two Acts are to be construed together (ibid., s. 8), it is conceived that the words "whether such combination, etc.," which are contained only in the earlier Act, remain a part of the definition.

On the other hand, the Trade Union Acts (l) do not apply to an agreement between partners as to their own business, or to an agreement between an employer and those employed by him as to such employment, or to an agreement in consideration of the sale of the goodwill of a business or of instruction in any profession, trade, or handicraft (m).

1137. In deciding whether any association comes within the definition of a trade union its objects and rules must be read as a whole (n). Rules by which a society whose objects are mainly those of a provident and friendly society provides that its members shall lose unemployment benefit if they leave their employment without the society's consent, that they shall give notice to the society of vacancies, that they shall not acquaint non-members of such vacancies, and the like, constitute that society a trade union within the definition (o). A society which is in fact a friendly society is none the less so because it calls itself a trade union and is rightly registered as such (p). A society whose principal object is the acquisition and working of a patent is not, however, a trade union merely because it has power to enter into an arrangement for the regulation of output or prices; and it may be rightly registered as a company (q).

A., it was thought by CHITTY, J., at p. 468, that a society of employers with a rule restricting the employment by a member of a servant who had left the employment of another member was, with reference to that rule, a trade union; but the point was not discussed in the Court of Appeal. A company incorporated under the Companies Acts (see title COMPANIES, Vol. V., pp. 25 et seq.) cannot be a trade union by reason of acts which if and when done would be ultra vires its memorandum (Aberdeen Master Masons' Incorporation, Ltd. v. Smith, [1908] S. C. 669; and see British Association of Glass Bottle Manufacturers, Ltd. v. Nettlefold (1911), 27 T. L. R. 527).

A., where a friendly society one of whose objects was to regulate the relations between employers and workmen, and which provided strike pay, was considered to be rightly registered as a trade union, though the point was not material to the case. is not made legal by the fact that it is a counter move against a like agreement by others (u), though so long as the parties continue to act upon it its illegality cannot be pleaded by a third party affected (w).

There is, however, no illegality in a combination for the purpose of mutual protection, sick and accident benefits, and the like (x), or in a combination which contemplates strikes (a).

A., per KENNEDY, L.J., at p. 527, where a suggested qualification is that "such a mutual obligation must not extend beyond the limits of what under the circumstances is a reasonable restraint." But in Howden v. Yorkshire Miners' Association, [1903] 1 K. B. 308, C. A.; affirmed, [1905] A. C. 256, a union with similar objects and rules to those discussed in Osborne v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, [1911] 1 Ch. 540, C. A., was apparently admitted without argument to be illegal at common law; see Howden v. Yorkshire Miners' Association, [1903] 1 K. B. 308, C. A., per STIRLING, L.J., at p. 335, though it was described by VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J. (ibid., at p. 328), as "an association one of whose objects is to discourage and prevent unnecessary strikes by insisting upon certain salutary conditions being fulfilled before a strike is sanctioned." Some of the expressions in S. C., [1905] A. C. 256, seem to overlook the possibility that a trade union may be legal at common law, but the point was not before the House (compare ibid., per Lord JAMES OF HEREFORD, at p. 275, and per Lord LINDLEY, at p. 279). A similar assumption of illegality was made in Mullett v. United French Polishers' London Society (1904), 20 T. L. R. 595 (objects included the offering of all legitimate resistance to encroachments upon the work and wages of members and their legal protection when subject to unjust treatment on the part of employers and the establishment of funds for the support of members when unemployed or in dispute, with power to the executive to take such steps as they deemed conducive to the welfare of the society); in Burke v. Amalgamated Society of Dyers, [1906] 2 K. B. 583 (where the objects were "to raise funds for the advancement, regulation, and protection of the trade, for the relief of members out of employment from some unjust cause or dispute existing between the employers and the members . . . and to regulate the relations between them"); and in Cope v. Crossingham, [1909] 2 Ch. 148, C. A. (in the report no rule is referred to which seems tainted with illegality, except perhaps a rule providing for a labour representation fund (as to the illegality of which prior to the Trade Union Act, 1913 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 30), see Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants v. Osborne, [1910] A. C. 87; Gaskell v. Lancashire and Cheshire Miners' Federation (1912), 28 T. L. R. 518, C. A., and note (d), p. 608, post); but the question was not raised, and it was conceded that apart from the Trade Union Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 31), no action could have been maintained, that is to say, that the society was illegal). For the view that a strike is illegal at common law, see Hornby v. Close (1867), L. R. 2 Q. B. 153; Farrer v. Close (1869), L. R. 4 Q. B. 692, per COCKBURN, C.J. (HANNEN, J., and HAYES, J., dissenting and the court being equally divided, with the result that the decision appealed from, holding that the society was illegal, was upheld); *Lyons (J.) & Sons v. and a combination to strike actuated by malicious intention to spite or injure another without just cause is illegal (e). Similarly, a strike may be illegal if it involves criminal or wrongful acts (f).

1141. If a strike has taken place in breach of contract between the strikers and their employers, but the contracts so broken have expired or been determined, it is not illegal to maintain the strikers, after such expiration or determination, in a refusal to enter into new contracts (g); but it is illegal with knowledge of such breaches to maintain the strikers during the term of the contracts (h).

(iii.) Construction of the Agreement.

1142. The question on which side of the line between legality and illegality a society is placed by its rules is a question depending upon their construction in each case (i). Whether the rules constitute an unreasonable restraint of trade is a matter for the court; and evidence with regard to the mode in which they have in practice been applied is not relevant (k), unless the rules are a mere cloak to shield an illegal object (l).

National Association of Operative Plasterers*, [1909] 1 K. B. 310, 335, C. A.). To support the strikers in such circumstances is merely subscribing to a strike fund, as any member of the public might subscribe, without incurring liability (Denaby and Cadeby Main Collieries, Ltd. v. Yorkshire Miners' Association, supra, per Lord JAMES OF HEREFORD, at p. 406); compare Gozney v. Bristol Trade and Provident Society, supra, per BUCKLEY, L.J., at p. 925. Where, however, by a rule, strike pay was payable to members who struck with the sanction of the union, such payment was held not to be authorised where a strike begun without such sanction was subsequently sanctioned (Howden v. Yorkshire Miners' Association, [1903] 1 K. B. 308, 331, C. A.; affirmed, [1905] A. C. 256).

A rule, though in restraint of trade, may be lawful if reasonable with reference to the real and legitimate objects of the society (m). As in the case of agreements of service and the like (n), illegality must not be presumed but must be established upon some plain provision in the agreement (o).

1143. If the main objects of a combination be legal, the fact that some of its rules are in illegal restraint of trade will not vitiate the whole agreement (p); but it is otherwise if the illegal parts go to the main object of the combination (q), or the legal and illegal parts are so mixed up as to be inseparable (r).

In this connexion, however, it may be noted that by the Trade Union Act, 1913 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 30), s. 2 (2), (3), the actual conduct of a union is to be regarded in certain cases in deciding whether its objects are statutory; see p. 612, post.

SECT. 2.—Powers of a Trade Union.

1144. Before the 7th March, 1913 (u), the definition of a trade union (a) was deemed to be a limiting and restrictive definition, and the objects of a union registered under the Trade Union Acts, 1871—1906 (b), were strictly confined to the objects indicated in that definition and in the Trade Union Act, 1871 (c), with any provisions merely ancillary to those objects (d).

(s) Russell v. Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners, [1910] 1 K. B. 506, 518, 519, 523, C. A.; S. C., [1912] A. C. 421, 430, 436, 441; Thomas v. Portsmouth "A" Branch of the Ship Constructive etc. Association (1912); 28 T. L. R. 372.

(t) Russell v. Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners, supra, per FARWELL, L.J., at p. 523; S. C., [1912] A. C. 421, 430, 436, 441. Benefit rules may perhaps be enforceable in spite of the presence of trade protection rules if there is a complete separation of the purposes of the society as regards the fund applicable to friendly society purposes, and the fund applicable to trade union purposes (Russell v. Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners, [1910] 1 K. B. 508, C. A., per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., at p. 518; S. C., [1912] A. C. 421, per LORD SHAW OF DUNFERMLINE, at p. 486); and see Gosney v. Bristol Trade and Provident Society, [1909] 1 K. B. 901, C. A., per FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., at p. 920, 921 (where the society had two distinct funds; but the question was only dealt with obiter as neither object was held to be illegal; and, apparently, if the objects are really separate, it does not matter which is the "main" or "primary" object).

(u) The date of the passing of the Trade Unions Act, 1913 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 30).

(a) As defined prior to the 7th March, 1913 (see note (u), supra). The definition was altered by the Trade Union Act, 1913 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 30); see note (b), p. 597, ante.

South Wales Miners' Federation*, [1907] 1 K. B. 361; compare Re Amos, Carrier v. Price, [1891] 3 Ch. 159, 164 (a registered trade union is "a body which exists for certain purposes contemplated by the Act, but for no others"); Yorkshire Miners' Association v. Howden, [1905] A. C. 256, 262; Vacher & Sons, Ltd. v. London Society of Compositors, [1912] 3 K. B. 547, C. A., per FARWELL, L.J., at p. 558; affirmed, [1913] A. C. 107; Oram v. Hutt, [1913] 1 Ch. 259, 266. Apparently the doctrine stated in the text did not apply to an unregistered trade union; compare Osborne v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, [1909] 1 Ch. 163, C. A., per COZENS-HARDY, M. R., at p. 176, and per FARWELL, L.J., at p. 190; S. C., [1910] A. C. 87, per LORD MACNAGHTEN, at p. 94; but see Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants v. Osborne, supra, per LORD HALSBURY, at p. 93; Wilson v. Scottish Typographical Association, [1912] S. C. 534. The principles which determined whether an act or an object was ultra vires were held to be as applicable to trade unions as to companies (Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants v. Osborne, supra, at pp. 92, 94, 104, applying Ashbury Railway Carriage and Iron Co. v. Riche (1875), L. R. 7 H. L. 653, and Wenlock (Baroness) v. River Dee Co. (1885), 10 App. Cas. 354; as to powers of companies, see, generally, titles COMPANIES, Vol. V., pp. 285, 725; RAILWAYS AND CANALS, Vol. XXIII., pp. 628, 629); and the powers of trade unions, being statutory, were held to be construed strictly, so that what was not expressly or by reasonable implication authorised was prohibited (Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants v. Osborne, supra; compare Hammersmith, etc. Rail. Co. v. Brand (1869), L. R. 4 H. L. 171; Lang v. Reed (1869),

SECT. 2.
Powers of a Trade
Union.

5 Ch. App. 4; Murray v. Scott, Agnew v. Murray, Brimelow v. Murray (1884), 9 App. Cas. 519; A.-G. v. Manchester Corporation, [1906] 1 Ch. 643; and the cases referred to in title COMPANIES, Vol. V., pp. 285, 725). A power might be not only consistent with, but reasonably conducive to, the objects of the union and yet not so necessary as to be implied when not expressly given (Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants v. Osborne, [1910] A. C. 87, 96); and it was not enough to show that a power was incidental, ancillary, or conducive to the purposes of the union; it must be granted by fair implication from the powers expressly granted (ibid., at pp. 97, 103, where the use of the word "incidental" in A.-G. v. Great Eastern Rail. Co. (1880), 5 App. Cas. 473, was explained). Consequently, what was not within the ambit of the Trade Union Acts was held to be prohibited to a union (Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants v. Osborne, supra, at pp. 93, 94), whether it was inserted as an original rule, or subsequently by amendment (ibid., at p. 97; but see ibid., per Lord ATKINSON, at p. 100, where it was suggested that, if the rule had existed before the plaintiff became a member, he might possibly have been bound by it; and apparently, the original objects of a union might be added to by amendment, but the point has not been expressly decided; see ibid.; S. C., [1909] 1 Ch. 163, C. A., per COZENS-HARDY, M.R., at p. 177, and per FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., at p. 183); and it was held to be ultra vires for a registered union to collect and apply its funds for the purpose of securing representation in Parliament (Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants v. Osborne, [1910] A. C. 87, overruling Steele v. South Wales Miners' Federation, [1907] 1 K. B. 361); or on municipal or other local government bodies (Wilson v. Amalgamated Society of Engineers, [1911] 2 Ch. 324, where, by agreement, an exception was made in the case of boards of guardians). A levy was held to be none the less compulsory by reason of the fact that the members were notified that, if they objected to pay, they must send a protest in writing to their branch secretary, and that the levy would be charged only on non-protesting members (ibid.). But the fact that the rules of a trade union included a rule which under the decision in the above cases was ultra vires was held not to prevent the union from being a trade union within the meaning of the Trade Disputes Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 47), s. 4 (Gaskell v. Lancashire and Cheshire Miners' Federation (1912), 28 T. L. R. 518, C. A.); nor did the presence of such an ultra vires rule prevent a union from being sued in its registered name, so long as its certificate of registration was not withdrawn or cancelled (Parr v. Lancashire and Cheshire Miners' Federation, [1913] 1 Ch. 366). As to the application of funds in the assistance of litigation by members, see p. 629, post. In Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants v. Osborne, supra, at p. 98, Lord JAMES OF HEREFORD based his judgment, not on the ground that the object was ultra vires (as to which he dissented), but on the ground that by a rule of the union all candidates were to sign and accept the conditions of a particular political party and obey its "whip"; and Lord SHAW OF DUNFERMLINE expressed doubt (ibid., at p. 100) as to whether the object was ultra vires, but based his judgment on the principle that an agreement by which a man binds himself to vote as a member of Parliament in accordance with the direction of another person or body is against public policy; compare S. C., [1909] 1 Ch. 163, C. A., per FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., at p. 186, and per FARWELL, L.J., at p. 194, who suggested that on the same principle it would be illegal for a landlord to bind his tenant, or an employer to compel his workmen, on pain of dismissal, to subscribe to party funds. On this question the rest of the court refrained from expressing an opinion. As to public policy generally, see note (h), p. 525, ante; and title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 394 et seq. Quære, whether a union might use its funds in support of a newspaper advocating its interests; from Linaker v. Pilcher (1901), 70 L. J. (K. B.) 396, 400, it would seem that it might so long as the paper was not carried on for purposes of profit or as a trade adventure (as to the question of liability of the trustees for a libel in such paper, see p. 665, post); but see Osborne v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, [1909] 1 Ch. 163, C. A., per FARWELL, L.J., at p. 192;

SECT. 2.
Powers of a Trade
Union.

By the Trade Union Act, 1913 (c), the fact that a combination has under its constitution objects or powers other than statutory objects (j) does not prevent the combination being a trade union for the purposes of the Trade Union Acts, 1871—1906 (g), so long as the combination is a trade union within the statutory definition. Subject to provisions as to the furtherance of political objects (h), any such trade union has power to apply its funds for any lawful objects or purposes for the time being authorised under its constitution (i).

Political objects.

1145. There are, however, certain political objects in the furtherance of which a union may only apply its funds subject to certain prescribed conditions. These objects are the expenditure of money—

(1) on the payment of any expenses incurred either directly or indirectly by a candidate or prospective candidate for election to Parliament or to any public office before, during or after the election in connexion with his candidature or election (k);

(2) on the holding of any meeting or the distribution of any literature or documents in support of any such candidate or prospective candidate (l);

(3) on the maintenance of any person who is a member of Parliament or who holds a public office (m);

(4) in connexion with the registration of electors or the selection of a candidate for Parliament or any public office (n);

Vacher & Sons, Ltd. v. London Society of Compositors, [1912] 3 K. B. 547, C. A., per FARWELL, L.J., at p. 559: "It is no part of the functions of a trade union to print and publish a newspaper"; but see note (i). infra.

(e) 2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 30, s. 2 (1); see pp. 597, 598, ante. The Trade Union Act, 1913 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 30) is by ibid. s. 8, to be construed as one with the Trade Union Acts, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 31), and 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 22).

(f) Namely, the objects mentioned in the Trade Union Act Amendment Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 22), s. 16; and also the provision of benefits to members (Trade Union Act, 1913 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 30) s. 1 (2)); and see pp. 597, 598, ante.

(g) 34 & 35 Vict. c. 38; 39 & 40 Vict. c. 22; 6 Edw. 7, c. 47.

(i) Trade Union Act, 1913 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 30), s. 1 (1). This appears clearly to authorise the running of or subscribing to a newspaper if power to do so is taken by the rules; thus disposing of the doubt referred to in note (d), p. 607, ante. But the object must be lawful; and it is conceived that the decision in Oram v. Hull, [1913] 1 Ch. 259 (a union may not pay the costs of an action by one of its officers in circumstances constituting maintenance) remains unaffected; see p. 630, post.

(k) Trade Union Act, 1913 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 30), s. 3 (3). Public office is defined as the office of member of any county, county borough, district or parish council or board of guardians, or of any public body who have power to raise money, either directly or indirectly, by means of a rate (ibid.). As to election expenses generally, see title ELECTIONS, Vol. XII., pp. 335, 336, 363, 364, 373, 380.

(m) Ibid.; as to the meaning of public office, see note (k), supra.

(n) Trade Union Act, 1913 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 30), s. 3 (3). As to the registration of electors, see title ELECTIONS, Vol. XII., pp. 241 et seq.

(5) on the holding of political meetings of any kind, or on the distribution of political literature or political documents of any kind, unless the main purpose of the meetings or of the distribution of the literature or documents is the furtherance of statutory objects as defined by statute (o).

SECT. 2.
Powers of a Trade
Union.

1146. The funds of a trade union (p) may not be applied, either directly or in conjunction with any other trade union, association, or body, or otherwise indirectly, in the furtherance of the above-mentioned political objects (without prejudice to the furtherance of any other political objects), unless the furtherance of those objects has been approved as an object of the union by a resolution for the time being in force passed on a ballot of the members of the union taken for the purpose in accordance with the statutory provisions by a majority of the members voting, and unless also, where such a resolution is in force, certain rules are in force, which rules must be approved by the Registrar of Friendly Societies (hereinafter called the Registrar), whether the union is registered or not (q).

Necessity for ballot.

Such a resolution takes effect as if it were a rule of the union, and may be rescinded in the same manner and subject to the same provisions as such a rule (r).

Resolution.

Such rules must provide (1) that any payments in furtherance of such objects are to be made out of a separate fund (referred to as the political fund of the union), and for the exemption of any member from any obligation to contribute to such a fund if he duly gives notice that he objects to contribute; (2) that a member who is exempt shall not be excluded from any benefits or placed in any respect, either directly or indirectly, under any disability or at any disadvantage as compared with other members of the union, except in relation to the control or management of the political fund, by reason of his being so exempt, and that contribution to the political fund shall not be made a condition for admission to the union (s).

Rules.

(o) Trade Union Act, 1913 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 30), s. 3 (3). Expenditure on meetings etc. in furtherance of statutory objects is permitted without qualification under ibid., s. 1 (1). As to "statutory objects," see pp. 597, 598, ante.

(p) Including a union which is in whole or in part an association or combination of other unions (Trade Union Act, 1913 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 30), s. 3 (5)). The prohibition applies clearly to both registered and unregistered unions.

(q) Ibid., s. 3 (1). The Registrar of Friendly Societies means, in relation to a registered trade union whose registered office, or an unregistered trade union whose principal office, is situated in England or Wales, the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies, and in relation to a registered trade union whose registered office, or an unregistered trade union whose principal office, is situated in Scotland or Ireland, the Assistant Registrar of Friendly Societies for Scotland or Ireland respectively (ibid., s. 7). As to the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies, see, generally, title FRIENDLY SOCIETIES, Vol. XV., pp. 129 et seq.

(r) Trade Union Act, 1913 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 30), s. 3 (4). As to the rules generally, see pp. 627 et seq., post.

(s) Trade Union Act, 1913 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 30), s. 3 (1) (a), (b).

SECT. 2.
Powers of a Trade Union.

Aggrieved
member.

1147. Any allegation by a member (t) that he is aggrieved by a breach of any rule so made is dealt with on complaint to the Registrar (u), who, after giving the complainant and any representative of the union an opportunity of being heard, may, if he considers that a breach has been committed, make such order as he thinks just in the circumstances. Such order is binding and conclusive without appeal, and is not removable into any court of law or restrainable by injunction, and on being recorded in the county court may be enforced as if it had been an order of the county court (w).

ballot.

1148. The ballot must be taken in accordance with rules of the union, to be approved for the purpose, whether the union is registered or not, by the Registrar (u). The Registrar must not approve any such rules unless he is satisfied that every member has an equal right and, if reasonably possible, a fair opportunity of voting, and that the secrecy of the ballot is properly secured (b).

Objection to contribute.

1149. A member of a union may at any time give notice in a prescribed form (c), or in a form to the like effect, that he objects to contribute to the political fund, and on the adoption of a resolution of the union approving the furtherance of political objects as an object of the union, notice must be given to the members acquainting them that each member has a right to be exempt from contributing, and that a form of exemption notice can be obtained by or on behalf of a member either by application at or by post from the head office or any branch office of the union, or the office of the Registrar (d).

Exemption.

1150. On giving the proper notice of objection a member is exempt, so long as his notice is not withdrawn, from contributing to the political fund as from the 1st January next after the notice is given, or, in the case of a notice given within one month

(t) It is to be noted that no provision is made for the case of a person who desires to be a member but is rejected because he will not undertake to contribute to the political fund.

Any such notice must be given in accordance with rules approved for the purpose by the Registrar, having regard in each case to the existing practice and to the character of the union (ibid.). Apparently, therefore, it is not necessary that a written notice be sent to each member. As to the meaning of "the Registrar," see p. 609, ante.

Separate levies.

1151. Effect may be given to the exemption from contribution either by a separate levy of contributions to the political fund from the members who are not exempt, in which case the rules must provide that no moneys of the union other than the amount raised by such separate levy shall be carried to that fund, or by relieving any members who are exempt from the payment of the whole or any part of any periodical contributions required from the members of the union towards the expenses of the union, in which case the rules must provide that the relief shall be given as far as possible to all exempt members on the occasion of the same periodical payment and for enabling each member to know, as respects any such periodical contribution, what portion, if any, of the sum payable by him is a contribution to the political fund of the union (g).

1152. All the provisions as to the application of funds for political purposes apply to a union which is in whole or in part an association or combination of other unions as if the individual members of the component unions were the members of that union and not the unions; but nothing in the Act (h) prevents any such component union from collecting from any of its members who are not exempt from contribution to the political fund (i), on behalf of the association or combination, any contributions to the political fund of the association or combination (h).

Association of unions.

1153. If the Registrar (j) is satisfied, and certifies, that rules for the purpose of a ballot, or rules made for other purposes under the Trade Union Act, 1913 (k), which require his approval, have been approved by a majority of members of a union, whether registered or not, voting for the purpose, or by a majority of delegates of such a union voting at a meeting called for the purpose, those rules shall have effect as rules of the union, notwithstanding that the provisions of the rules as to the alteration of rules, or the making of new rules, have not been complied with (l).

Rules as to ballot.

1154. Any unregistered trade union may, if it thinks fit, at any time, without registering, apply to the Registrar (j) for a certificate that it is a trade union within the meaning of the Trade Union Act, 1913 (m). The Registrar, if satisfied, having regard to Such certificate is conclusive for all purposes so long as it is in force (p).

Appeal.

1155. Any person aggrieved by any refusal of the Registrar to give such a certificate, or by the withdrawal of such a certificate as aforesaid, may appeal to the High Court within the time and in the manner and on the conditions directed by rules of court (q).

A.; and see Baker v. Ingall, [1912] 3 K. B. 106, 112, 117, C. A. It is to be noted, however, that in Russell v. Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners, [1912] A. C. 421, Lord LOREBURN, L.C., at pp. 428, 429, apparently regarded the question whether the union was legal or illegal at common law as irrelevant, and decided that an action against a union to recover benefits was not maintainable on the broad ground that "the action is against a trade union directly to enforce or recover damages for breach of an agreement to provide benefits for members." Lord ATKINSON (ibid., at p. 430) also expressed no opinion upon the legality or illegality of the union, and decided that the action was not maintainable on the sole ground that the union was sued in a common law action (as distinguished from a representative action in equity) in its registered name and by its trustees, and that by reason of the Trade Union Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 31), s. 4, Taff Vale Railway v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, [1901] A. C. 426, did not apply. Lord ROBSON (Russell v. Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners, [1912] A. C. 421, at p. 438) also doubted whether an action against the union in its registered name and its trustees was properly framed; but the other members of the court (Lords MACNAGHTEN, SHAW OF DUNFERMLINE, and MERSEY) decided the case on the ground that the union was by virtue of its rules illegal at common law. The judgments of Lord LOREBURN, L.C., and Lord ATKINSON (see supra) were treated as binding in Thomas v. Portsmouth "A" Branch of the Ship Constructive etc. Association (1912), 28 T. L. R. 372, though not necessary jurisdiction being founded on a right of property vested in the member seeking relief (u).

SUB-SECT. 2.—When Trade Union Illegal at Common Law.

(i.) Agreements in General Legal.

1157. An association even though illegal at common law as being in restraint of trade is by statute, in the case of a trade union, cleared from the taint of illegality either criminal or civil (w). If, however, it is illegal at common law on that ground, and is therefore compelled to rely upon the Trade Union Acts (x) to establish its legality, certain of its agreements are unenforceable by any party thereto (y). Restraint of trade.

1158. The purposes of a trade union, whether registered or not (z), are not by reason merely that they are in restraint of trade unlawful so as to render any member liable to criminal prosecution for conspiracy or otherwise (u), or so as to render void or voidable any Effect of agreements.

for the decision of that case; but their precise effect upon the hitherto accepted principle that the distinction between legality and illegality at common law is essential is not clear, and in view of the judgments of the majority of the House it is conceived that the principle cannot be said to have been overruled. Probably all that was meant was that a trade union legal at common law can only be sued in a representative action and not in its registered name. As to procedure, see pp. 664 et seq., post.

(u) Rigby v. Connol (1880), 14 Ch. D. 482, per JESSEL, M.R., at p. 487; Osborne v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, [1911] 1 Ch. 540, C. A., per COZENS-HARDY, M.R., at pp. 553, 554. The right of voting is a property right (ibid., per COZENS-HARDY, M.R., at p. 554, and per BUCKLEY, L.J., at p. 567), and "property" is not limited to a beneficial interest in land or chattels (ibid., per FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., at p. 562, where it was suggested that a member of an association formed for charitable purposes has as much right to see to the proper administration of the funds as if he had a beneficial interest in them). The members of a trade union have an undoubted interest in property, even in the narrow sense of the word (ibid.); compare Pender v. Lushington (1877), 6 Ch. D. 70 (a vote may be property); Re Printers and Transferrers Amalgamated Trades Protection Society, [1899] 2 Ch. 184; Finch v. Oake, [1896] 1 Ch. 409, C. A. (where, apparently, it was, by implication, held that a member of a voluntary trade protection society entitled to legal assistance and to participate in a possible benevolent fund had a property sufficient to support a claim for an injunction against expulsion; but the injunction was refused on other grounds; see pp. 619, 620, post). delegates of other associations, is not a criminal association within the meaning of the Unlawful Societies Act, 1790 (39 Geo. 3, c. 79), and the Seditious Meetings Act, 1817 (57 Geo. 3, c. 19) (see title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 466), for though these statutes cannot be said to be obsolete, the manner in which Parliament has dealt with trade unions is quite inconsistent with their criminality (Luby v. Warwickshire Miners' Association, [1912] 2 Ch. 371; Parr v. Lancashire and Cheshire Miners' Federation, [1913] 1 Ch. 366). As to the question whether such combinations were criminal at common law, see note (t), p. 600, ante p. 639, post; title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 263, note (o).

(b) Trade Union Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 31), s. 3. The principal objects of this enactment were to protect trade unions from defalcations by their officers and to enable them to hold, and sue in respect of, property (Righty v. Connol (1880), 14 Ch. D. 482, per JESSEL, M.R., at p. 489; Wolfe v. Matthews (1882), 21 Ch. D. 194, per FRY, J., at p. 196; Taff Vale Railway v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, [1901] A. C. 426, 429). The agreements here rendered legal include the contract of membership and rights arising out of it; see Osborne v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, [1911] 1 Ch. 540, C. A., per FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., at p. 559; and see also ibid., per BUCKLEY, L.J., at p. 567: "He [the plaintiff] enjoyed a vote as a member, a right to subscribe to certain funds, a right to benefits from those funds, an interest in common with his fellow members in the property of the society, a like right in all the advantages of membership, and, in case the society should be dissolved and the common purposes thus come to an end, a right to his distributive share of the assets. These rights were all, by virtue of s. 3 [of the Trade Union Act, 1871 (31 & 35 Vict. c. 31)], lawful, although some, but not all, were by virtue of s. 4 unenforceable. The right to have benefits from the funds was unenforceable; others seem to me to be clearly enforceable. There is nothing in s. 4 to forbid a court to entertain legal proceedings to enforce the member's right to his vote or his right to his distributive share in winding up. It is quite plain that he had rights in respect of property. All the property of the society belonged to him and his co-members, and none the less because s. 4 renders unenforceable certain rights in respect of that property"; compare Yorkshire Miners' Association v. Horden, [1905] A. C. 256; S.C., [1903] 1 K. B. 308, 324, C. A.; Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants v. Osborne, [1910] A. C. 87; R. v. Registrar of Friendly Societies (1872), L. R. 7 Q. B. 741, per BLACKBURN, J., at p. 746; and, in the light of the statement of BUCKLEY, L.J. (quoted supra), see Strick v. Swansea Tin-plate Co. (1887), 36 Ch. D. 558 (where, on the winding up of an (apparently) unregistered masters' association, a summons was taken out by the trustees for the determination of the question who was entitled to share in the distribution; seven members had been expelled under a rule authorising expulsion for breach of any rule; the rule they had broken was admittedly in restraint of trade and included among the agreements declared unenforceable; an order was made directing an inquiry as to who were entitled to participate; the Chief Clerk's certificate disallowed the claim of the seven members, who objected that to disallow their claims was to enforce directly the rule under which they had been expelled: held by NORTH, J., (i.) that the objection came too late, the court having already directed the inquiry and thereby entertained the proceeding; (ii.) that the proceeding having thus been entertained and the unenforceable agreements being by the Trade Union Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 31), s. 4, expressly declared not to be unlawful, the court was able to give effect to the rule for breach of which the seven members had been expelled and to treat them as no longer members).

1159. Though agreements are thus made lawful, nothing in the statutory provisions enables any court to entertain any proceedings instituted with the object of directly (d) enforcing or recovering damages for the breach of any of the following agreements (c) made by a trade union whether registered or unregistered (f) and whether the action is brought by a member or by some person claiming in his place (g):—

(1) Any agreement between members of a union as such concerning the conditions on which any members for the time being shall or shall not sell their goods, transact business (h), employ or be employed (i);

Bristol Trade and Provident Society*, [1909] 1 K. B. 901, C. A., per COZENS-HARDY, M.R., at p. 916, and per FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., at p. 919; see also ibid., per CHANNELL, J., at p. 905. The contrary view had been expressed in Burke v. Amalgamated Society of Dyers, [1906] 2 K. B. 583, per A. T. LAWRENCE, J., at p. 591. In Wolfe v. Matthews (1882), 21 Ch. D. 194, and Strick v. Swansea Tin-plate Co. (1887), 36 Ch. D. 558, the union was not registered. If the union is legal at common law the prohibition against the enforcement of agreements does not apply, unless the judgments of Lord LOREBURN, L.C., and Lord ATKINSON in Russell v. Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners, [1912] A. C. 421, 428, 430 (as to which see note (t), p. 612, ante), are to be taken to have altered the law. It seems, therefore, that any trade union, registered or unregistered, which, like the Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, has no rules in restraint of trade (see note (c), p. 602, ante) may be sued by any member for payment of any benefits provided for by the rules; but quære whether it could be sued, if registered, in its registered name; see note (t), p. 612, ante.

The prohibition against entertaining actions applies to an action by a nominee under the Trade Union Act Amendment Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 22), s. 10, as to which see note (g), p. 626, post (Crocker v. Knight, [1892] 1 Q. B. 702, C. A.); and guardians of the poor who have, under the Divided Parishes and Poor Law Amendment Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 61), s. 32, incurred expense in the relief of a pauper lunatic cannot recover the amount from a trade union from which such pauper is entitled to an allowance; nor is a trade union a benefit or friendly society within that provision (*Winder v. By agreements concerning the conditions on which a member shall or shall not be employed are meant agreements as to conditions of employment when a man is actually employed, in regard to such things as hours and wages, and bonds and arrangements between the employer and employee; not as to whether a member shall or shall not be employed (Baker v. Ingall, [1911] 2 K. B. 132, 139; reversed, [1912] 3 K. B. 106, C. A., but, apparently, without affecting the above dictum).

(k) Trade Union Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. '31), s. 4 (2). An action to recover the amount of a fine deducted from a benefit payment is an action to enforce, or to recover damages for breach of, an agreement for the application of funds to provide benefits (Gorney v. Bristol Trade and Provident Society, [1909] 1 K. B. 901, 918, C. A. (see note (l), infra); Mullett v. United French Polishers' London Society (1904), 20 T. L. Ingall*, supra, at pp. 139, 140, it was held that it could not, and that what is not a penalty at common law cannot be a penalty under the Act, and also, apparently, that a penalty under the Act does not comprise all things that could be called penalties at common law, but it is confined to matters such as fines or exclusion from benefits. But the Court of Appeal, [1912] 3 K. B. 106, reversed the decision, holding that such agreement was part of an agreement for the application of funds to provide benefits; see note (o), p. 617, post.

that the mere declaration of right to membership would amount to decreeing the specific performance of the whole contract of membership) were criticised and disapproved; see Osborne v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, [1911] 1 Ch. 540, C. A., per COZENS-HARDY, M.R., at p. 554, per FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., at pp. 561, 563, and per BUCKLEY, L.J., at p. 568. Apparently Chamberlain's Wharf, Ltd. v. Smith, [1900] 2 Ch. 605, C. A., may be subject to different considerations, the agreement there being not for the provision of benefits, but an agreement under the Trade Union Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 31), s. 4 (1) (see p. 615, ante); and this case was distinguished in Yorkshire Miners' Association v. Howden, [1905] A. C. 256, per Lord LINDLEY, at p. 283, and in Osborne v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, supra, but not questioned; see ibid., per FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., at p. 564. Possibly, too, both Rigby v. Connol (1880), 14 Ch. D. 482, and Chamberlain's Wharf, Ltd. v. Smith, supra, may be supported on the ground that to restore the plaintiff to membership would have involved an inquiry into the validity of the action of the society under a rule which came within the unenforceable agreements (see Osborne v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, supra, per BUCKLEY, L.J., at p. 569), whereas in Osborne v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, supra, the plaintiff was not expelled for breach of any rule covered by the provisions of the Trade Union Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 31), s. 4. In Duke v. Littleboy (1880), 49 L. J. (CH.) 802, where the officers of a union sued the officers of a branch (i.) to restrain them from dividing the branch funds in contravention of the rules, and (ii.) for payment over of the funds, DENMAN, J., refused both remedies. The refusal of (ii.) was, apparently, right; see Cope v. Crossingham, [1909] 2 Ch. 148, C. A.; and note (l), p. 616, ante; the refusal of (i.) was on a ground similar to that of Rigby v. Connol, supra, disapproved as above; and though in Yorkshire Miners' Association v. Howden, supra, Lord LINDLEY suggested, at p. 283, that the decision in Duke v. Littleboy, supra, was due to the fact that the object of the action was wider than the object in Yorkshire Miners' Association v. Howden, supra, it must probably be taken that on this point Duke v. Littleboy, supra, is overruled. In Aitken v. Associated Carpenters and Joiners of Scotland (1885), 12 R. (CH. OF SESS.) 1206, the court assumed that no rights flowing from membership were enforceable at all and refused a declaration that the expulsion was illegal on the ground that its effect would be nil, but this view seems clearly wrong; see note (l), p. 620, post; and compare Cope v. Crossingham, supra (a claim by a union for the payment of funds in the hands of trustees of a branch is an attempt to enforce directly an agreement for the application of funds to provide benefits; otherwise, where the claim is to restrain the misapplication of the funds; see note (i), infra; but quare whether the society in this case was illegal at common law; see note (c), p. 602, ante). Cope v. Crossingham, supra, appears to overrule a dictum in Madden v. Rhodes, [1906] 1 K. B. 534, per Lord ALVERSTONE, C.J., at p. 537, to the effect that the trustees of a union may recover by civil proceedings money, securities, books etc. withheld by trustees of a branch. As to the recovery of such by criminal proceedings, see p. 636, post.

(i) Wolfe v. Matthews (1882), 21 Ch. D. 194, distinguishing Rigby v. Connol, supra; Taff Vale Railway v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, [1901] A. C. 428, 428; Alfin v. Hewlett (1902), 18 T. L. R. 664; Yorkshire Miners' Association v. Howden, supra; compare ibid., per Lord HALSBURY, L.C., at p. 261; Denaby and Cadeby Main Collieries Co., Ltd. v. Motherwell Branch of the Society) (1880), 7 R. (CH. OF SESS.) 867. Ordinarily the trustees are the proper persons to sue to protect the funds from misapplication, but if they refuse to do so an individual member may sue (Howden v. Yorkshire Miners' Association, [1903] 1 K. B. 308, 328, 330, 336, C. A.; affirmed, sub nom. Yorkshire an injunction restraining the union from expelling a member (k). In neither of these cases is an agreement to provide benefits directly enforced, for such proceedings need not have either the object or the effect of involving the administration of the funds or their application to provide benefits (l).

Miners' Association v. Howden, [1905] A. C. 256. Such member need not have first applied to the trustees when it is clear that such application would have been useless (Howden v. Yorkshire Miners' Association, [1903] 1 K. B. 308, 331, 341). As a matter of form it may be advisable that the member be expressed to sue on behalf of himself and the other members (ibid., at p. 331); but, apparently, this is not necessary (ibid., at p. 336). In such an action the trustees should be made defendants (ibid., at pp. 308, 309, 323, 340); and see Trade Union Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 31), s. 9; and p. 665, post. The injunction should take the form of prohibiting directly and in terms the diversion of the funds to the particular purpose which is held to be unauthorised (Yorkshire Miners' Association v. Howden, [1905] A. C. 256, 266 (form of order restraining the defendants from misapplying the funds and dealing with them contrary to the rules, disapproved)); for a similar variation of the form of an injunction, see Lyons (J.) & Sons v. Wilkins, [1896] 1 Ch. 811, 826, 832, C. A. As to injunctions generally, see title INJUNCTION, Vol. XVII., pp. 197 et seq.

(k) Osborne v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, [1911] 1 Ch. 540, C. A.; Luby v. Warwickshire Miners' Association, [1912] 2 Ch. 371; Pair v. Lancashire and Cheshire Miners' Federation, [1913] 1 Ch. 366.

(l) See the cases in note (i), p. 619, ante, note (k), supra. As to the meaning of the words "directly enforce" in Rigby v. Connol (1880), 14 Ch. D. 482, JESSET, M.R., considered that to declare an expelled member entitled to share in the benefits and to restrain the union from excluding him therefrom were equivalent to directly enforcing an agreement for the application of the funds to provide benefits. As the plaintiff claimed to participate, the actual decision has not been overruled; but the reasoning of the decision has been criticised and disapproved: see Wolfe v. Matthews (1882), 21 Ch. D. 194, where FRY, J., distinguished Rigby v. Connol, supra, and illustrated the word "direct" at p. 196: "An order that the defendants should pay money to the plaintiffs would be a direct enforcement of an agreement for the application of the funds, but all that is sought here is to prevent the payment of the money to somebody else. Either that is no enforcement of the agreement at all or it is an indirect enforcement. To take a simple case, if there is a contract by A. to pay £100 to B., that contract is directly enforced by a judgment of the court directing A. to pay B. And the contract is only indirectly enforced or not at all by a judgment restraining A. from paying the money to some one else. It is only by a stretch of language that such an order can be said to enforce A.'s contract; the utmost that can be said is that it is then more likely that A. will pay B." This view was adopted in Yorkshire Miners' Association v. Howden, supra, per Lord HALSBURY, L.C., at p. 261, and per Lord LINDLEY, at p. 280 (compare S. C., [1903] 1 K. B. 308, per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., at p. 328), although Lord MACNAGHTEN, at p. 264, suggested that the word "directly" merely pointed the antithesis between "proceedings to enforce agreements directly and proceedings to recover damages for breach of contract"; for a similar suggestion, see Cope v. Crossingham, [1909] 2 Ch. 148, C. A., per BUCKLEY, L.J., at p. 159; Osborne v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, supra, per COZENS-HARDY, M.R., at p. 554 ("The statement of claim asks . . . an injunction to restrain the society from acting upon and enforcing the resolution [to expel the plaintiff]. It does not claim the payment of any sum of money out of the funds of the union. If the plaintiff obtains the relief he seeks, he will be entitled, not as a matter of legally enforceable right, but as a matter of reasonable expectation, to certain benefits for which he has subscribed"); and ibid., at p. 555 ("FRY, J., in Wolfe v. Matthews, supra, drew a distinction between 'directly (iv.) Time for Taking Objection to Jurisdiction.

1163. It appears that the objection to the jurisdiction may be taken on appeal, even though not taken in the court below (m). Where, however, an order has been made, although wrongly, by a court entertaining legal proceedings for the enforcement of any of the agreements so declared unenforceable, the objection that the proceedings cannot be entertained comes too late, if taken at a later stage during the working out of the order (n), and rules which are only illegal because they are in restraint of trade will be taken into consideration and enforced (o). Where a member sues officers of a union for a benefit payment and obtains a judgment against which no appeal is brought, and subsequently sues other officers for further instalments of the same benefit, the matter is not res judicata, if the society is illegal at common law and the action is not maintainable, and the defence in the second action is good (p).

enforcing' and 'indirectly enforcing.' . . . This view was distinctly adopted by the Court of Appeal and by the House of Lords in Yorkshire Miners' Association v. Howden, [1905] A. C. 256; and see Osborne v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, [1911] 1 Ch. 540, C. A., per FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., at p. 559, and per BUCKLEY, L.J., at pp. 567, 568. It is to be noted that in Osborne v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, supra, the whole of this discussion went on the assumption that the society was illegal at common law, an assumption which was held to be unfounded. Where a society is legal, no question of the prohibitions in the Trade Union Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 31), s. 4, arises, unless the judgments of Lord LOREBURN, L.C., and Lord ATKINSON in Russell v. Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners, [1912] A. C. 421, at pp. 428, 430, are to be taken to have altered the law, as to which see note (t), p. 612, ante.

(m) See Burke v. Amalgamated Society of Dyers, [1906] 2 K. B. 583, where, however, it was unnecessary to decide the point; and compare London, Edinburgh and Glasgow Assurance Co. v. Partington (1903), 19 T. L. R. 389; General Union Society of Operative Carpenters and Joiners v. O'Donnell (1877), 11 I. L. T. (Journal) 282. The objection can of course be taken in a defence, and also presumably in a clear case on an application to stay under R. S. C., Ord. 25, r. 4.

(n) Strick v. Swansea Tin-plate Co. (1887), 36 Ch. D. 558, 561, 562 (see note (b), p. 614, ante), quoted in Taff Vale Railway v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, [1901] A. C. 426, per FARWELL, J., at p. 428, as deciding that on a winding-up the funds are distributed among the members in accordance with the rules of the society; but quære whether it decides more than that such is the result if the objection has not been taken in time. It would appear that on a winding-up the court may enforce the rules as to the rights of members to participate, on the ground that such rules do not come within the agreements declared unenforceable (see note (d), p. 618, ante), but that if a member has been expelled under a rule declared unenforceable, and his restoration to membership involves an inquiry into the validity of and the enforcement of that rule, the objection to the jurisdiction of the court, if taken in time, will be good; see note (h), p. 618, ante.

their names to its rules may register the union. (q). The registration is void if any one of the purposes of the union is unlawful (r).

1165. An application to register, and printed copies of the rules with a list of the titles and names of the officers, must be sent to the Registrar (s), who, upon being satisfied that the union has complied with the regulations in force respecting registry, must register the union and the rules (t). If two applications are made by two sections of the same union each applying for registration in the same name and each claiming to have the authority of the governing body of the union, the Registrar is justified in refusing to register on either application (u).

The Registrar may not register any combination as a trade union unless in his opinion, having regard to the constitution of the combination, its principal objects are statutory objects (w).

If a union applying for registration has been in operation for more than a year before the date of application, a general statement of receipts, funds, effects and expenditure in the form of the annual general statement hereafter referred to must be sent to the Registrar (a).

Certificate.

The Registrar, on registering the union, issues a certificate which, unless proved to have been withdrawn or cancelled, is conclusive evidence that the regulations with respect to registry have been complied with (b).

The Trade Union Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 31), ss. 6, 13 (5) (see note (b), infra), are to be read with the Trade Union Act Amendment Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 22), s. 8 (see note (z), p. 626, post), and the result is that a registered union can be sued in its registered name until its certificate of registration is withdrawn or cancelled, notwithstanding that one of its rules is illegal (*Parr v. The fees are the maximum fees set out above except that for inspection on the same day of one or more documents relating to the same union the fee is 1s., and certain additional fees; see Regulations (1876 and 1890) Governing Registered Trade Unions, r. 24. The Registrar may dispense with the fee for inspection of documents in cases where he may consider it to be in the public interest to do so (ibid.).

B. 741, the following regulations of the Home Secretary (8th December, 1871) were considered to be intra vires: "(1) The Registrar shall not register a trade union under a name identical with that of any other existing trade union known to him, whether registered or not registered. . . [for the words of the Act, see p. 624, post]; (2) Upon an application for the registration of a trade union which is already in operation, the Registrar, if he has reason to believe that the applicants have not been duly authorised by such trade union to make the same, may, for the purpose of ascertaining the fact, require from the applicants such evidence as may seem to be necessary." But no power is given by the Act to administer an oath or compel the production of any evidence; and, apparently, the duties of the Registrar are ministerial and not judicial; see the report of the Registrar, set out in R. v. Registrar of Friendly Societies, supra, at p. 743. The existing regulations, Regulations (1876 and 1890) Governing Registered Trade Unions, rr. 2, 3, are identical with the above.

- SECT. 4. registered name is to be used and applied in all legal proceedings, unless there is any provision inconsistent with such use (m).
- Registered Trade Unions. 1169. Whether a trade union is registered or not is irrelevant to the question whether its agreements are enforceable, as is the fact that it describes itself as a trade union or as formed to regulate the relations between employers and workmen (n).
- Enforcement of agreement.

SUB-SECT. 3.—Name.

- Resemblance of name. 1170. No trade union may be registered under a name identical with that by which any other existing union has been registered, or so nearly resembling such name as to be likely to deceive the members or the public (o).

Change of name. A union may change its name with the approval in writing of the Registrar and the consent of not less than two-thirds of the total number of members. No change of name affects any right or obligation of the union or of any member, and any pending legal proceedings may be continued by or against the trustees of the union or any other officer who may sue or be sued on behalf of the union, notwithstanding the change (p).

Notice in writing of every change of name signed by seven members and countersigned by the secretary, together with a statutory declaration by the secretary that the statutory provisions in respect of changes of name have been complied with, must be sent to the Central Office of the Registry of Friendly Societies and there registered. Till registration the change does not take effect (q).

[1901] A. C. 426, 442. It is described in Osborne v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, [1909] 1 Ch. 163, C. SUB-SECT. 4.—*Office.*SECT. 4.
Registered
Trade Unions.Registered office.

1171. Every registered trade union must have a registered office; and if any union under the Trade Union Acts, 1871—1913 (r), is in operation for seven days without such an office the union and every officer is liable to a penalty not exceeding £5 for every day during which the union is so in operation. Notice of the situation of such office and of every change therein must be given to the registrar and recorded by him, and till such notice is given the union has not complied (s) with the Trade Union Acts, 1871—1913 (r).

A trade union carrying or intending to carry on business in more than one country (t) must be registered in the country in which its registered office is situate; but copies of the rules, and of all amendments thereto, must, when registered, be sent to the Registrar of Friendly Societies of each of the other countries to be recorded by him. Till such rules are recorded in any country the union is not entitled to any of the privileges of the Trade Union Acts, 1871—1913 (r), in that country, and amendments do not take effect in any country till recorded there (u).

countries.SUB-SECT. 5.—Cancellation of Registration.

1172. No certificate of registration may be withdrawn or cancelled otherwise than by the Registrar (w), and by him only at the request of the union, to be evidenced as he may from time to time direct; or on proof to his satisfaction that a certificate has been obtained by fraud or mistake, or that the registration has become void by (r) 34 & 35 Vict. c. 31; 39 & 40 Vict. c. 22; 6 Edw. 7, c. 47; 2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 30.

(s) Trade Union Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 31), s. 15; Regulation 15; Form M. It may be noted that it is not stated, as in the Trade Union Act Amendment Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 22), s. 15, who is to prosecute; therefore, it seems, any person may; see note (k), p. 635, post. Apparently, this provision does not in itself confine the union to the jurisdiction of the courts within whose jurisdiction the office is situated (Mackendrick v. National Union of Dock Labourers in Great Britain and Ireland (1910), 48 Sc. L. R. 17). No fee is payable on registry of notice of a change of office (Regulations (1876 and 1890) Governing Registered Trade Unions, r. 24).

(t) "Country" here means England, Scotland, or Ireland (Trade Union Act Amendment Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 22), s. 6).

(u) Trade Union Act Amendment Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 22), s. 6; Regulations (1876 and 1890) Governing Registered Trade Unions, rr. 11, 15b. As to the penalty for failure to send these documents, see Trade Union Act Amendment Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 22), s. 15; and p. 635, post. Apparently, a union registered in one country but having branches in another country, where also a copy of its rules has been recorded, is subject to the jurisdiction of both countries (Mackendrick v. National Union of Dock Labourers in Great Britain and Ireland, supra); and, apparently, a union may be registered in each country (ibid.). The removal of the registered office from one country to another does not render it necessary to re-register the union in the country in which its new registered office is situate (Regulations (1876 and 1890) Governing Registered Trade Unions, r. 15a). No fee is payable for recording rules or documents already registered in another country (ibid., r. 24).

(w) As to the Registrar, see p. 609, ante.

SECT. 4. Registered Trade Unions. reason of one of the purposes of the union being unlawful (x), or that the union has wilfully and after notice from a registrar violated any of the provisions of the Trade Union Acts, 1871—1913 (y), or has ceased to exist (z); or if the constitution of the union has been altered in such a manner that in the opinion of the Registrar its principal objects are no longer “statutory objects” (a), or if, in his opinion, the principal objects for which the union is actually carried on are not “statutory objects” (b).

Notices. Before a certificate can be withdrawn or cancelled the Registrar must, except when the withdrawal or cancellation is at the request of the union, give to the union not less than two months’ notice in writing specifying briefly the ground of the proposed withdrawal or cancellation. If, however, the registration is shown to have become void by reason of one of the purposes of the union being unlawful (c), such notice is unnecessary, and it is the duty of the Registrar to cancel the certificate forthwith (i).

Appeals. Any person aggrieved by the withdrawal of a certificate of registration on the ground that the constitution of the union has been so altered that the principal objects are no longer statutory objects, or that the principal objects for which the union is actually carried on are not “statutory objects,” may appeal to the High Court within the time and in the manner and on the conditions directed by rules of court (r).

Effect of cancellation. A trade union whose certificate has been withdrawn or cancelled ceases forthwith to enjoy as such the privileges of a registered union, but without prejudice to any liability actually incurred by it; such liability may be enforced against it as if the withdrawal or cancellation had not taken place (r’).

No fee is payable for registry of cancellation or withdrawal of a certificate (ibid., r. 24). Till the withdrawal or cancellation of its certificate a registered union can be sued in its registered name notwithstanding that one of its objects is illegal (*Parr v. 1174. An infant above the age of sixteen may be a member of a trade union, unless its rules contain a provision to the contrary; and may, subject to the rules of the union, execute all instruments and give all acquittances, necessary under the rules and enjoy all the rights of a member, except that he cannot be a member of the committee of management, a trustee or treasurer (a).

Sub-SECT. 7.—Rules.

(i.) Statutory Requirements.

1175. The rules of every registered trade union must contain the following provisions (b):—

Contents of rule

(1) The name of the union (c) and its place of meeting for business;

(2) The whole of the objects for which the union is to be established (d), the purposes for which its funds shall be applicable, the CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 340, 341. The statutory provisions seem clearly to apply only to registered unions. As to the special provisions relating to nomination and payments on death, see titles EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, Vol. XIV., p. 192; FRIENDLY SOCIETIES, Vol. XV., pp. 152 et seq.; INDUSTRIAL, PROVIDENT, AND SIMILAR SOCIETIES, Vol. XVII., p. 17; and see *Crocker v. If the total personal property of any person entitled to make a nomination exceeds £100, any sum paid without probate or letters of administration is, notwithstanding such nomination or payment, liable to probate duty as part of the amount on which such duty is charged. The trustees may before making any such payment require a statutory declaration by the claimant, or by one of the claimants, that the total personal estate of the deceased, including the sum in question, does not, after deduction of debts and funeral expenses, exceed the value of £100 (Provident Nominations and Small Intestacies Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 47), s. 10 (2)).

(h) Luby v. Warwickshire Miners' Association, [1912] 2 Ch. 371; Parr v. Lancashire and Cheshire Miners' Federation, [1913] 1 Ch. 366, 373. The principle of these cases is, it is conceived, not confined to registered unions.

(c) As to the name, see p. 624, ante.

(d) Before the Trade Union Act, 1913 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 30), the objects which could be specified in the rules included only objects strictly within the scope of the Trade Union Acts (Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants v. Osborne, [1910] A. C. 87, 96), and the rules were held to constitute an exhaustive code (Re Durham Miners' Association, Watson v. Cann (1900), 17 T. L. R. 39, C. A.; Oram v. Hutt, [1913] 1 Ch. 259, 266). It is conceived that the rules must still be treated as an exhaustive code; but as to the extension of the objects which they may include by the Trade Union Act,

(7) Provisions for the manner of dissolving the union (i).

Copy of rules. 1176. A copy of the rules must be delivered to every person on demand on payment of not exceeding 1s. (k).

(ii.) Amendment of Rules.

Effect of amendment. 1177. Amendments must be made in strict accordance with the rules (l), and amended rules, if ultra vires, are not validated by registration (m). Rules capable of amendment must be adhered to 1913 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 30), see note (b), p. 597, ante. As to the Trade Union Acts, see note (c), p. 625, ante.

(e) As to amendment, see the text, infra. As to the registration of alterations and the distinction between a partial and a complete alteration, see Regulations (1876 and 1890) Governing Registered Trade Unions, rr. 6—10. The fee for registration of an alteration is 10s. (ibid., r. 24).

(f) As to trustees and their powers, see pp. 631, 632, post. It is not necessary under the Acts that a trustee should be a member of the union (Yorkshire Miners' Association v. Howden, [1905] A. C. 256, per Lord DAVEY, at p. 271; Russell v. Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners, [1912] A. C. 421, per Lord ROBSON, at p. 438; Vacher & Sons, Ltd. v. London Society of Compositors, [1913] A. C. 107, per Lord ATKINSON, at p. 124).

(g) As to infants becoming officers, see p. 627, ante.

(h) The right to inspect the books may in a proper case be exercised by the agency of an accountant, subject to an undertaking by him to divulge the information so obtained only to his clients (Norey v. Keep, [1909] 1 Ch. 561 (where, however, PARKER, J., at p. 565, seems to have regarded it as possible that the right to inspect by accountant might validly be negatived by a rule), following Bevan v. Webb, [1901] 2 Ch. 59, C. A.).

(i) Trade Union Act Amendment Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 22), s. 14. The rules of a union registered before the passing of the Act (30th June, 1876) were not invalidated by the absence of a provision for dissolution (ibid.). As to dissolution, see pp. 634, 635, post.

(k) Trade Union Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 31), s. 14 (2).

(l) Thus, if an amendment can, at any given time, be made only if recommended by the executive committee as being urgently required, there must be a resolution of the committee to that effect (Osborne v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, [1909] 1 Ch. 163, 178, C. A.; compare Harington v. Sendall, [1903] 1 Ch. 921). But a rule providing that a rule may not be altered unless notice of the proposed alteration has been given does not mean that the notice must set out the identical alteration ultimately adopted (Amalgamated Society of Engineers v. Jones (1913), 29 T. L. R. 484); to justify the court in interfering with the internal government of a union an informality is not enough; there must be something in the nature of an illegality (ibid., per BAILHACHE, J., at p. 485).

(m) Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants v. Osborne, [1910] A. C. 87, till amended (n); but if a rule is duly amended in accordance with the rules regulating amendments, such amendment is binding upon a member even though he was insane at the time of the amendment (o).

(iii.) Construction of Particular Rules.

1178. A rule (p) giving power to the executive committee to institute any legal proceedings which it may deem to be in the interests of the members does not authorise the payment of the costs of the separate defence of one of the officers, sued together with the union, in the absence of evidence that the committee deemed such separate defence to be in the interests of the members (q).

Institution

Rules authorising the union to give legal aid to members in cases

Legal aid.

101; S. C., [1909] 1 Ch. 163, 176, 178, C. A. Cases under other Acts containing similar, but not identical, words, as, for instance, Deichurst v. Clarkson (1854), 3 E. & B. 194 (Friendly Societies Acts); Rosenberg v. Northumberland Building Society (1889), 22 Q. B. D. 373, C. A. (Building Societies Acts), are not authorities on the construction of the Trade Union Acts (Osborne v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, [1909] 1 Ch. 163, 176, C. A.). The rules are not given statutory authority, nor is there any provision whereby the registrar is instructed or enabled to ascertain whether the rules have been properly observed in making any alteration; two contradictory applications to register alterations might be made to the registrar and he would apparently be compelled to register both without deciding which was right; see ibid., per FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., at p. 181. But as to the case of two contradictory applications for registration of a union, see p. 622, ante. As to the duty to send a copy of alterations to the registrar, see p. 631, post; but, apparently, valid alterations take effect from the time of their making, independently of whether or not notice has been sent to the registrar; see Osborne v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, supra, per FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., at p. 180; compare title FRIENDLY SOCIETIES, Vol. XV., pp. 141, 142.

(n) Howden v. Yorkshire Miners' Association, [1903] 1 K. B. 308, 338, C. A., compare Re Durham Miners' Association, Watson v. Gann (1900), 17 T. L. R. 39, C. A. As to the date at which amendment or alteration is deemed to have taken place, see note (m), supra.

(o) Burke v. Amalgamated Society of Dyers, [1906] 2 K. B. 583 (where a county court judge had awarded sick pay up to the date of the registration of the amendment, and it was held that the plaintiff was not entitled to more); but quære whether there was jurisdiction to award any sum at all, it being assumed that the objects of the society were illegal at common law (see pp. 615 et seq., ante); as to whether this assumption was correct, see note (c), p. 602, ante. Compare the provisions relating to the alteration of rules of building societies and friendly societies; see titles BUILDING SOCIETIES, Vol. III., pp. 332 et seq.; FRIENDLY SOCIETIES, Vol. XV., pp. 139 et seq.

(p) As to the power of the court to make declarations as to the meaning of rules, see pp. 617, 618, ante. In cases where the union is not illegal at common law, its agreements and rules are all enforceable unless the judgments of Lord LOREBURN, L.C., and Lord ATKINSON in Russell v. Society of Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners, [1912] A. C. 421, 428, 430, are to be taken to have altered the law; see note (t), p. 612, ante. Apparently, the cases as to the construction of rules are applicable whether a union be registered or not. As to the validity of a rule of a trade defence association authorising the expulsion of a member for dishonourable conduct, see Merrifield, Ziegler & Co. v. Liverpool Cotton Association, Ltd. (1911), 105 L. T. 97. As to the power to expel at common law, see Luby v. Warwickshire Miners' Association (1912), 28 T. L. R. 509; Parr v. Lancashire and Cheshire Miners' Federation of Great Britain, [1912] 2 Ch. 371; and see note (h), p. 627, ante.

of disputes arising between members of a union and their employers, or of unlawful treatment of members by their employers authorise the giving of legal aid where there is a common interest, but they do not authorise such a proceeding in circumstances which constitute the offence of maintenance; for no rule can justify an act which would be wrongful in an individual (r). Thus, it might be justifiable to take steps to recover wages on a member's behalf, but not to instigate him to take proceedings for libel and to conduct such proceedings at the expense of the union (s).

Strikes in breach of rule.

(r) Greig v. National Amalgamated Union of Shop Assistants, Warehousemen and Clerks (1906), 22 T. L. R. 274; Oram v. Hutt, [1912] 1 Ch. 259. As to maintenance generally, see titles ACTION, Vol. I., pp. 51 et seq.; CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., pp. 499, 500.

(s) Greig v. National Amalgamated Union of Shop Assistants, Warehousemen and Clerks, supra (where a union having first assisted a discharged member to recover damages from his employer, then instigated the member to sue the employer for libel, but no person appearing on the member's behalf the action was struck out with costs: held, that there was no reasonable and probable cause and no common interest, and that the union was liable in damages to the employer; apparently the employer could have recovered his solicitor and client costs, but he had only claimed party and party costs). Since the Trade Disputes Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 47), s. 4 (see p. 663, post), the trade union would no longer be liable; but, apparently, an official in his private capacity would be liable (see note (q), p. 667, post); and an injunction could be obtained restraining such an application of the funds (see p. 618, ante). In Oram v. Hutt, [1913] 1 Ch. 259, the payment of the costs of an action by a union secretary for damages for a slander reflecting upon his conduct as such secretary and possibly affecting the union by bringing it into disrepute, was held ultra vires on the ground that such payment constituted maintenance, and also on the ground that there was no rule authorising such payment. In Howden v. Yorkshire Miners' Association (1903), as reported in the Times, 16th, 17th, 28th January, the appellant was supported by a masters' union, being a member of the union sued, the common interest between him and the masters being the cessation of the strike. An appeal in forma pauperis will be allowed, even though the appellant is supported by his union (Gordon v. Pyper (1892), 20 Rettie (House of Lords), 23).

(t) Howden v. Yorkshire Miners' Association, [1903] 1 K. B. 308, 331, C. A., affirmed, [1905] A. C. 256. The words "thrown out of employment" only apply to men already in employment, not to men who have already struck and are unable to get back into employment. It is to be noted that the court regarded the offer to return to work in this case as being not a bond fide offer but one made by the men with a view to

If members strike in breach of rules requiring them first to lay their case before the committee or council of the union and obtain its consent or approval, on penalty of forfeiting all claims upon the union, a subsequent resolution of the council to grant them lock-out pay does not operate as an approval of or consent to the strike, and is ultra vires (u).

SUB-SECT. 8.—Accounts.

1181. A general statement of the receipts, funds, effects and expenditure of every registered trade union must be transmitted to the Registrar before the 1st June in every year (b).

General statement.

With the above statement there must be sent a copy of all alterations of rules, new rules and changes of officers made during the year preceding the date up to which the statement is made out, and a copy of the rules as they exist at that date (c).

1182. Every trade union which fails to comply with or contravenes the above provisions as to the general statement, and the matter to be sent therewith, and every officer of the union so failing, is liable to a penalty not exceeding £5 for each offence (d).

Penalties.

Every person who wilfully makes, or orders to be made, any false entry in, or omission from, the general statement, or the return of copies of rules or alterations, is liable to a penalty not exceeding £50 for each offence (e).

putting themselves right under the rules of the union (Howden v. Yorkshire Miners' Association, [1903] 1 K. B. 308, 333, 343, C. A.). If an employer has accepted a repudiation of their contracts by his employees, he does not treat the contracts as still existing by taking out summonses against them for absenting themselves without leave (Employers and Workmen Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 90), s. 4; *Howden v. The statement must show fully the assets and liabilities at the date, and the receipts and expenditure during the year preceding the date, to which it is made out; and, separately, the expenditure in respect of the several objects of the union. It must be made out up to such date, in such form and with such particulars as the registrar may from time to time require. Every member of, and depositor in, the union is entitled to a free copy (ibid.).

amount of personal property (f), and such union, and any branch thereof, may purchase (g), or take upon lease, in the name of its trustees, any land not exceeding one acre, and may sell, exchange, mortgage or let the same. The purchaser, assignee, mortgagee, or tenant need not inquire into the trustees' authority, and the trustees' receipt is a good discharge (h).

The power to acquire land is limited to the acquisition of land required for purposes connected with the administration of the business of the union, such as, for instance, for an office; it does not extend to land acquired as part of the substratum of the union (i). A devise of land, therefore, to a trade union for the furtherance of its objects is not within the statutory power, and is void (j). Moreover, apart from this, a devise of land to a trade union is void as a perpetuity, or as a gift tending to a perpetuity (k).

(ii.) Vesting of Property in Trustees.

Union and branches.

1184. All real and personal estate belonging to a registered trade union is vested in the trustees of the union for the use and benefit of the union and its members, and the real and personal estate of a branch is vested in the trustees of the branch (l), or, if the rules of the union so provide, in the trustees of the union (m), and is under the control of such trustees, their respective executors or administrators, according to their respective claims and interests (n).

In all actions, indictments, or summary proceedings concerning such property it must be stated to be the property of the trustees for the time being in their proper names, as trustees of the union, without further description (o).

When a trustee, or late trustee, in whose name, solely or jointly, any stock belonging to his union or branch, transferable at the Bank of England or Ireland, is standing is absent from Great Britain or Ireland, or becomes bankrupt, or files a petition, or executes any deed of assignment or arrangement, or for composition with his creditors, or becomes lunatic, or is dead or has been removed, or if it is unknown whether he be living or dead, then, on application from the secretary and three members of the union or branch, the Registrar, on satisfactory proof, is empowered to direct the transfer of such stock into the names of any other persons as trustees; and the transfer must be made by the surviving or continuing trustees, or if there are none, or they refuse or are unable to make the transfer, and the Registrar so directs, then by the Accountant-General, or Deputy, or Assistant Accountant-General of the Bank of England (or Ireland), indemnity being given to the Banks against any claim arising therefrom (q).

1186. A trustee of a registered trade union is liable only for the moneys actually received by him on account of the union, and not for any deficiency which may arise in the funds of the union (r). Liability of trustee.

(v.) Rendering of Accounts to and Actions thereon by Trustees.

1187. Every treasurer or other officer of a registered trade union must render an account to the trustees or members at times provided by the rules, or, upon being required to do so, of all moneys received and paid by him, and of the balance in his hands, and of all bonds or securities of the union; and the trustees must have such accounts audited. After audit the treasurer must, if required, forthwith hand over the balance and all securities and effects, books, papers and property of the union in his custody to the trustees. If he fails to do so, the trustees may sue for the said balance and for all moneys since received on account of the union, and for the said securities and effects, books, papers and property, leaving him to set off any sums which he may have paid on account of the union. In such action the trustees are entitled to solicitor and client costs (s).

SUB-SECT. 10.—Exemption from Income Tax.

Extent of exemption.

1188. A registered trade union is entitled to exemption from income tax under Schedules A, C, and D in respect of its interest and dividends applicable and applied solely for the purpose of provident benefits (b); but the exemption does not extend to any union by the rules of which the amount assured to any member exceeds £300, or the amount of any annuity granted to any member exceeds £52 a year (c).

Claim for exemption.

The exemption is claimed and allowed in the same manner as in the case of income applicable or applied to charitable purposes (d).

SUB-SECT. 11.—Amalgamation.

Consent of members.

1189. Any two or more trade unions may, by the consent of not less than two-thirds of the members of each union, be amalgamated as one union, with or without any dissolution, or division of funds, but without prejudice to any right of a creditor of any union (e).

Registration.

Notice in writing of every amalgamation signed by seven members, and countersigned by the secretary, of each union, together with a statutory declaration by each secretary that the statutory provisions in respect of amalgamations have been complied with, must be sent to the Central Office of the Registry of Friendly Societies and there registered. Till registration the amalgamation does not take effect (f).

SUB-SECT. 12.—Dissolution.

Provision in rules.

1190. The dissolution of a registered trade union must be provided for in its rules (g).

Notice of every dissolution of a trade union, signed by the secretary and seven members, must be sent within fourteen days of the dissolution to the Central Office of the Registry of Friendly Societies and there registered (h).

SECT. 4.
Registered
Trade Unions.

On the dissolution of a registered trade union, in the absence of rules for the distribution of the funds, there is a resulting trust of the funds in favour of all the existing members; and the funds should be divided among them in proportion to the amounts contributed by each of them, disregarding amounts paid for fines, forfeitures or annuities (i).

SUB-SECT. 13.—Offences and Penalties.

1191. A trade union (k) failing to give any notice or send any document which it is required to send in the case of a union carrying on, or intending to carry on, business in more than one country (l), or in the case of change of name (m), or amalgamation (n), or dissolution (o), and every officer or other person bound by the rules to give or send the same, or, if there be no such officer, every member of the committee of management, unless proved to have been ignorant of, or to have attempted to prevent, the omission, is liable to a penalty of not less than £1 and not more than £5, recoverable at the suit of the Chief or any Assistant Registrar of Friendly Societies, or of any person aggrieved, and to an additional penalty of a like amount for each week during which the omission continues (p).

rules.

1192. It is a misdemeanour to give, with intent to mislead or defraud, to any member or intending member of a registered trade union a copy of any rules or alterations or amendments of rules other than those in existence for the time being, on the pretence that the same are the existing rules, or that there are no other rules; or, with such intent, to give a copy of any rules to any person on the pretence that they are the rules of a union registered which is not registered (q).

Offences as to property.

1193. It is an offence for any officer, member or other person being or representing himself to be a member or the nominee, executor, administrator or assignee of a member of a registered trade union, or for any person whatsoever, by false representation or imposition, to obtain possession of any moneys, securities, books, papers or other effects of the union, or, having the same in his possession, wilfully to withhold or fraudulently to misapply the same or wilfully to apply any part of the same to purposes other than those expressed in the rules of the union (r). On complaint by any person on behalf of the union or by the registrar, the court of summary jurisdiction for the place where the registered officer of the union is situate, or where the offence was committed (s), may summarily order the delivery up of all such moneys, securities, books, papers, or other effects to the union, or the repayment of the money improperly applied, with, at the discretion of the court, a further sum of not exceeding £20 and costs not exceeding £1. In default of such delivery up or payment, the court may order imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for not exceeding three months (t).

Under this provision jurisdiction arises only in cases of fraud or dishonesty (a). Recourse to this remedy against a defaulting officer, if such officer is summarily ordered to pay the amount misapplied and is fined or imprisoned, or both fined and imprisoned, precludes a subsequent action for the sum misapplied (b).

The union may be sued for such penalties by its registered name (Taff Vale Railway v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, [1901] A. C. 426, 440, 441).

T. 188 (on non-compliance with order to pay a sum withheld within twenty-eight days, a magistrate refused to convict, the order having been drawn up as for a civil debt: held, that the order was in accordance with the statute, though it was also competent for the magistrate to order imprisonment in default of payment); and compare Vernon v. Watson, [1891] 2 Q. B. 288, C. A. (a case on similar words in the Friendly Societies Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 60), s. 16 (9)). A trade union, even though unregistered, may proceed under the Larceny Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 116), s. 1 (see R. v. Blackburn (1868), 11 Cox, C. C. 157; and title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 635), and under the Falsification of Accounts Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 24), s. 1 (see title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 659).

(a) Madden v. Rhodes, [1906] 1 K. B. 534 (in civil cases the remedy lies under the Trade Union Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 31), s. 9), following Barrett v. Markham (1872), L. R. 7 C. P. 405; but see note (h), pp. 618, 619, ante.

The foregoing provisions are without prejudice to the right of the union to proceed by indictment, unless a conviction by such summary procedure has already been obtained (c), and they do not oust the jurisdiction of the superior courts so as in any way to prevent an action in the name of the union against its trustees to restrain, or compel an account for, a breach of trust (d).

SECT. 4.
Registered
Trade Unions.

1194. All offences and penalties under the Trade Union Acts, 1871—1913 (e), may be prosecuted and recovered in manner directed by the Summary Jurisdiction Acts (f), and summary orders may be made and enforced on complaint before a court of summary jurisdiction in manner provided by those Acts (g).

Summary
procedure.

The court of summary jurisdiction, when hearing and determining an information or complaint, is constituted (1) in any place within the jurisdiction of a metropolitan police magistrate or other stipendiary magistrate, of such magistrate or his substitute; (2) in the City of London, of the Lord Mayor or any alderman; (3) in any other place, of two or more justices of the peace sitting in petty sessions (h).

The description of any offence under any of the Trade Union Acts, 1871—1913 (i), in the words of such Act is sufficient in law; and any exception, exemption, proviso, excuse or qualification, whether Watson, [1891] 2 Q. B. 288, C. A.; see ibid., per Lord HALSBURY, L.C., at p. 290 (the proceedings are partly of a civil and partly of a criminal kind: "if the operation of the statute had been confined to criminal proceedings I should have entertained no doubt that imprisonment for the criminal offence afforded no answer to a civil claim for the debt . . . In the statute in question two different proceedings have been mixed together by the Act of the legislature," namely (i.) a penalty for wilfully withholding or misapplying property or money; and (ii.) an order to deliver up or repay; with, in both cases, imprisonment in default of payment, "which is to be a satisfaction for the criminal offence and also for the non-payment of the civil debt and costs." The imprisonment is execution for, and satisfaction of, the civil debt). Lord ESHER, M.R. (ibid., at p. 291), doubted whether the magistrates had any power, unless they inflicted the penalty, to order the delivery up of the property or repayment of the money. He also thought that the society had an alternative of proceeding under the statutory provision or bringing a civil action. Apparently, also, a distress warrant cannot issue to enforce the order. But in United Builders' Labourers' Union v. Stevenson (1906), Times, 7th February, FARWELL, J., ordered payment of the amount of the defalcations of an official of a registered union after he had been convicted and imprisoned under the Falsification of Accounts Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 24); and compare Agnew v. Addison (1892), 20 Keeble (Justiciary), 19 (unregistered union). It seems that if a society, registered or unregistered, proceeds otherwise than under the Trade Union Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 31), s. 12, the reasoning of Vernon v. Watson, [1891] 2 Q. B. 288, C. A., does not apply.

accompanying the description of the offence in the Act or not, may be proved by the defendant, but need not be specified or negatived in the information, and if it is so specified or negatived, no proof in relation to the matters so specified or negatived is required on the part of the informant or prosecutor (k).

If a party is aggrieved by any order or conviction by a court of summary jurisdiction under the Trade Union Acts, 1871—1913 (l), appeal lies to quarter sessions (m).

Disqualification of justice.

A person who is a master, or the father, son or brother of a master in the particular manufacture, trade or business in, or in connexion with, which any offence under the Trade Union Acts, 1871—1913 (n), is charged to have been committed, may not act as, or as a member of, a court of summary jurisdiction or appeal (o).

SUB-SECT. 1.—Conspiracy.

Early law.

1195. A long series of Acts culminating in the year 1800 (p), made it a criminal offence (q) for workmen to agree together for the purpose of obtaining in combination higher wages or shorter hours of work, or preventing any person from employing whomsoever he thought proper, or controlling or in any way affecting any person carrying on any manufacture, trade, or business in the conduct or management thereof; or for any workman by persuasion or intimidation or any other means wilfully and maliciously to endeavour to prevent any person from taking employment, or to induce any person to leave his employment. The consequence was that the courts were not called upon to decide whether such a combination constituted a conspiracy at common law (r), and statements to the effect that it does constitute a criminal offence may be explained either by reference to the statutes in force at the time (s), or on the ground that they referred to offences against the State, or of a public nature (t).

(o) Trade Union Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 31), s. 22. But it was held (though it was not necessary to the decision) no evidence of bias that three of the magistrates were shareholders in shipping companies which were insured in an association which was a member of a federation of which the informant was an official (R. v. McKenzie, [1892] 2 Q. B. 519; and see title MAGISTRATES, Vol. XIX., p. 552).

1196. The above-mentioned Acts were, however, repealed in 1824(u) and 1825(x), and though in cases since those dates there have been decisions and dicta to the contrary(x), it is now clear that a combination in restraint of trade is not a criminal offence at common law(y), unless it is a combination in pursuit of a malicious purpose to ruin or injure a person, as opposed to a combination for the purpose of a legitimate trade object(z).

By statute an agreement or combination by two or more persons to do, or procure to be done, any act in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute(a), is not indictable as a conspiracy if such act committed by one person would not be punishable as a crime(b).

words "trade dispute," but were repealed by the Trade Disputes Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 47), s. 5(3), and the definition of a trade dispute in that Act was applied to the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 86). As to the effect of this in extending the area of protection, see note (a), p. 662, post.

(b) Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 86), s. 3; Vacher & Sons, Ltd. v. London Society of Compositors, [1913] A. C. 107, per Lord ATKINSON, at p. 122: "It [s. 3], thus struck, in the particular instance mentioned, at the principle of the criminal law of conspiracy to the effect that it is the 'agreement or combination' which is the essence of the crime and that therefore a combination or agreement to do, or procure to be done, something not in its own nature criminal if done by one person, might still be a crime." The provision does not exempt from punishment any persons guilty of a conspiracy for which a punishment is awarded by any Act of Parliament, or affect the law relating to riot, unlawful assembly, breach of the peace, sedition, or any offence against the State or the Sovereign; see title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 563. As to the effect of the provision on the legality of strikes, see Gibson v. Lawson, [1891] 2 Q. B. 545, 557 et seq. In Gooney v. Bristol Trade and Provident Society, [1909] 1 K. B. 901, C. A., COZENS-HARDY, M.R., said, during the argument, at p. 914, that the provision legalised strikes in the broadest terms, whilst FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., said, at p. 923, that were a strike illegal at common law (which it is not) then it would have been legalised by the above Act, for "the only ground upon which an agreement simultaneously to decline to work on proposed conditions could be held to be unlawful would be that it was one of the instances where a combination by two or more persons to do an act permissible to a single individual can be held to be unlawful"; and see pp. 601, 602, ante. In Lyons (J.) & Sons v. Wilkins, [1896] 1 Ch. 811, C. A., and Quinn v. Leathem, [1901] A. C. 495, 541, it was held that the provision did not legalise a combination to call out the workmen of A., with whom there was no dispute, in order to prevent A. from dealing with B., with whom there was a dispute; quære whether this is now the law in view of the extension of the definition of a trade dispute in the Trade Disputes Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 47); see note (a), p. 662, post. The object of this provision may be seen from the Report of the Royal Commission of 1874 (quoted in the Report of the Royal Commission on Trade Disputes, 1906 [Cd 2825]), which, at p. 12, stated the law as to criminal conspiracy as follows:—"Conspiracy may be divided into three classes. First where the end to be accomplished would be a crime in each of the conspiring parties, a class which offers no difficulty. Secondly, where the purpose of the conspiracy is lawful, but the means to be resorted to are criminal, as where the conspiracy is to support a cause believed to be just by perjured evidence. Here the proximate or immediate intention of the parties being to commit a crime, the conspiracy is to do something criminal, and here again the case is consequently free from difficulty. The third and last case is where, with a malicious design to do an injury, the purpose is to affect a wrong, though not such a wrong as when perpetrated by a single individual would amount to an offence under the criminal law. Thus an attempt to destroy a man's credit and effect his ruin by spreading reports of his insolvency would be a wrongful act, which would entitle the party whose credit was thus attacked to bring an action as for a civil wrong; but it would not be an indictable offence. If it be asked on what principle a combination of several to effect the like wrongful purpose becomes an offence, the answer is—upon the same principle that any other civil wrong, when it assumes a more aggravated and formidable character, is constituted an offence and becomes transferred from the domain of the civil to that of the criminal law." The provision of the Act, while not affecting the law as to the first and second classes of conspiracy, was designed to protect the members of trade unions from the uncertainty necessarily incidental to the third class.

The cases on the subject of conspiracy and offences by individuals must be read in conjunction with the Acts in operation at their dates, and the history of the law leading up to the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 86), was as follows:—By stat. (1825) 6 Geo. 4, c. 129, s. 3, which was repealed by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 32), s. 7, Schedule, it was a criminal offence by violence to the person or property, or by threats or intimidation or by molesting or obstructing another, to force or endeavour to force any workman to leave his employment, or to prevent or endeavour to prevent any workman from accepting employment, or by such means to force or induce a person to belong to any association, or to punish him for not complying with rules made to obtain an advance or reduce the rate of wages, or to lessen or alter the hours of work, or to regulate the mode of carrying on any trade; or by such means to force or endeavour to force any person to make any alteration in the mode of regulating or carrying on his trade, or to limit the number or description of his workmen etc. By stat. (1825) 6 Geo. 4, c. 129, "threats," "intimidation," "molestation," and "obstruction" were left at large to the jury; and it was held criminal to combine for the purpose of dictating to employers what men they should employ, as involving illegal compulsion (R. v. Bykerdyke (1832), 1 Mood. & R. 179); to strike for the like purpose, to circulate bills announcing a picket, to patrol the employer's premises, and watch and interfere with his men, and to use expressions such as "You had better not go there, you will repent it" (R. v. Selsby (1847), 5 Cox, C. C. 495, n.; though in his summing up, ROLFE, B., confined intimidation to threats of personal violence, and, at p. 498, said of persuasion, "It is doubtless lawful for people to agree among themselves not to work except upon certain terms; that being so, I am not aware of any illegality in their peacefully trying to persuade others to adopt the same view," unless the words used convey an impression of intimidation; it was also suggested (ibid., at p. 493) that the object of a picket was to see that members of the union were not going to work while receiving strike pay); to strike, and support a strike, in order to procure the dismissal of a member who refused to pay a fine (R. v. Hewitt (1851), 5 Cox, C. C. 162); to combine to persuade men to leave their employment in order to compel an employer to raise wages (that being a combination to "obstruct" an employer), and to combine to molest, intimidate or annoy men who refuse to strike (R. v. Duffield (1851), 5 Cox, C. C. 404 (where certain employees and a trade union secretary from London watched and conferred with the employer's men, distributed a placard stating that his wages were below the average, assisted with money the removal of some of his men to other parts of the country and persuaded others not to enter into his employment and were found guilty of conspiracy but not of threats or intimidation: and ERLE, J., emphasised the right to strike, so long as no efforts were made to induce others to join the strike; and spoke of a "threat" (ibid., at p. 432) as "threatening a man either with personal injury or with the loss of comfort in any way")); to intoxicate imported labourers and remove them to a distance, in addition to the acts done in R. v. Duffield, supra (R. v. Rowlands (1851), 5 Cox, C. C. 436, 466 (where ERLE, J., at p. 460, laid it down (i.) that workmen might combine to raise wages, and, apparently, others not workmen might combine with them, but that such combination was only lawful while its purpose was to obtain a benefit for the parties combining; (ii.) that whether or not a combination to force a manufacturer to assent to certain wages was lawful, it was clearly unlawful to bring about that purpose by unlawful means, such as, intimidation or threats; (iii.) that an intention to create alarm and so force assent supported a charge of conspiracy to molest; and (4) that an agreement to obstruct an employer by intoxicating his workmen and inducing them to leave his employment was indictable, as was, apparently, an agreement to obstruct by persuading men, not under contract, to leave him; and he extended the meaning of "threat" and "intimidation" to an intimation of intended interference with a man's freedom of action, including possibly a threat to call men out)); to say to men, "If you work there we shall consider you as blacks and we shall strike against you," and to follow a man to his home (Re Perham (1859), 5 H. & N. 30).

By the Molestation of Workmen Act, 1859 (22 Vict. c. 34), s. 1, also repealed by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 32), "molestation" and "obstruction" in stat. (1825) 6 Geo. 4, c. 129, were qualified as follows: "No workman or other person, whether actually in employment or not, shall by reason merely of his entering into an agreement with any workman or workmen, or other person or persons, for the purpose of fixing or endeavouring to fix the rate of wages or remuneration at which they or any of them shall work or by reason merely of his endeavouring peaceably, and in a reasonable manner and without threat or intimidation, direct or indirect, to persuade others to cease or abstain from work, in order to obtain the rate of wages or the altered hours of labour so fixed or agreed upon or to be agreed upon shall be deemed or taken to be guilty of 'molestation' or 'obstruction' within the meaning of the said Act . . . provided always that nothing herein contained shall authorize any workman to break or depart from any contract or authorize any attempt to induce any workman to break or depart from any contract." Under the stat. (1825) 6 Geo. 4, c. 129, as thus amended, it was held to be criminal to present, in combination, to an employer a copy of a resolution of men threatening to strike unless certain men were discharged, this being a "threat" and "molestation" (Walsby v. Anley (1861), 3 E. & E. 516 (where COCKBURN, C.J., at p. 521, distinguished between a combination of men who put the employer to the alternative of retaining either themselves or the obnoxious persons, which he regarded as legal, and a combination of men who did not fairly give him the alternative but sought to coerce him by threats of doing something to his injury, which he regarded as illegal; and CROMPTON, J., at p. 523, held it a criminal offence to combine to procure the discharge of a fellow workman by a threat of a strike (as to this see note (y), p. 639, ante)); to order a member of a union to come out from a yard where a person objected to was employed, and to abuse such member, threaten to turn him out of the union and send his name round the country (O'Neill v. Longman (1863), 4 B. & S. 376), though it was not intimidation of an employer merely to discuss with him the terms of arranging a dispute, without communicating to him a resolution to strike (O'Neill v. Kruger (1863), 4 B. & S. 389), or, where such a resolution had been passed, to communicate it to the employer at his request (Wood v. Bowron (1866), L. R. 2 Q. B. 21); to threaten to call men out unless a certain person be discharged (Shelbourne v. Oliver (1866), 13 L. T. 630); to place pickets to note people coming in and out, which pickets used insulting expressions and gestures and followed persons, this being intimidation, molestation, and obstruction (R. v. Druit (1867), 10 Cox, C. C. 592 (where, though it was said to be no offence to endeavour to persuade, without coercion or intimidation, or to place pickets if they excited no reasonable alarm and did not coerce or annoy, BRAMWELL, B., said, at p. 601, "even if the jury should be of opinion that the picket did nothing more than his duty as a picket and if that duty did not extend to abusive language and gestures . . . still, if that was calculated to have a deterring effect on the minds of ordinary persons by exposing them to have their motions watched and to encounter black looks, that would not be permitted by the law"; but for disapproval of this, see Gibson v. Lawson, [1891] 2 Q. B. 545, 557 et seq.)); to serve a notice on an employer that his men would be called out unless one of them joined the union (Skinner v. Kitch (1867), L. R. 2 Q. B. 393); to issue a placard requesting persons not to enter into the service of a certain employer (Springhead Spinning Co. v. Riley (1868), L. R. 6 Eq. 551; compare ibid., per MALINS, V.-C., at p. 558 ("Every man is at liberty to induce others, in the words of the Act of Parliament 'by persuasion or otherwise' to enter into a combination to keep up the price of wages and the like: but directly he enters into a combination which has as its object intimidation or violence or interfering with the perfect freedom of action of another man, it then becomes an offence")). But mere peaceful persuasion without menace or violence, or abuse, shouting or hooting was held protected by the stat. (1859) 22 Vict. c. 24, no matter what the consequence was (R. v. Shepherd (1869), 11 Cox, C. C. 325); and in Wood v. Bowron, supra, where union officials called out men without breach of contract and in reply to a request for the reason forwarded a copy of a resolution not to work for that employer unless he limited the number of his apprentices, it was doubted whether the combination and the resolution were in themselves unlawful, and Cock-

BURN, C.J., said: "The cases ought not to be pressed further than they have gone: and we ought, as long as nothing is done contrary to the law, to leave it open to labour on the one hand and capital on the other to make the best terms they can for themselves. Large numbers of men, who have not the advantage of wealth, very often can protect their own interests only by means of association and co-operation and we ought not to strain the law against men who have only their own labour and their association by which they can act in the assistance of one another"; and see Wood v. Bowron (1866), L. R. 2 Q. B. 21, per MELLOR, J., at p. 28 ("Lord CAMPBELL, C.J., in Hilton v. Eckersley (1855), 6 E. & B. 47, expresses a strong opinion in favour of the right of labour to combine as to wages; and the late CROMPTON, J., in that case, and in the case of Walsby v. Anley (1861), 3 E. & E. 516, seems to differ in opinion with Lord CAMPBELL").

By the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 32), s. 1, which repealed the foregoing Acts, and was itself repealed by the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 86), s. 17, it was declared a criminal offence in any person "who shall do any one or more of the following acts, that is to say . . . (2) threaten or intimidate any person in such manner as would justify a justice of the peace, on complaint made to him, to bind over the person so threatening or intimidating to keep the peace . . . with a view to coerce such person,

(1) Being a master to dismiss or to cease to employ any workman or being a workman to quit any employment or to return work before it is finished; (2) Being a master not to offer or being a workman not to accept any employment or work; (3) Being a master or workman to belong to or not to belong to any temporary or permanent association or combination; (4) Being a master or workman to pay any fine or penalty imposed by any temporary or permanent association or combination; (5) Being a master to alter the mode of carrying on his business or the number or description of any persons employed by him. . . . A person shall, for the purposes of this Act, be deemed to molest or obstruct another person in any of the following cases; that is to say, (1) If he persistently follow such person about from place to place; (2) If he hide any tools, clothes or other property owned or used by such person, or deprive him of, or hinder him in the use thereof; (3) If he watch or beset the house or other place where such person resides or works, or carries on business or happens to be, or the approach to such house or place, or if with two or more other persons he follow such person in a disorderly manner in or through any street or road. . . . Provided that no person shall be liable to any punishment for doing or conspiring to do any act on the ground that such act restrains or tends to restrain the free course of trade, unless such act is one of the acts hereinbefore specified in this section and is done with the object of coercing as hereinbefore mentioned." In the same year, by the Trade Union Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 31), s. 3, the purposes of a trade union were declared not unlawful by reason merely that they were in restraint of trade; see p. 613, ante. But it was held that these two Acts had not affected the common law as to conspiracy, and where a number of servants of a gas company struck in breach of contract in order to secure the reinstatement of a dismissed employee, but used no threats or violence, they were convicted of having agreed to force their employer to conduct his business as they desired by improper threats and molestation; molestation being anything done with improper intent to the unjustifiable annoyance of and interference with the employer, and such as would be likely to deter a man of ordinary nerve (R. v. Bunn (1872), 12 Cox, C. C. 316 (where BRETT, J., also laid it down that the defendants might be criminally liable for having agreed to hinder the employer in his business by simultaneous breaking of contracts of service, the breach of which was criminal under the Master and Servant Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 141), s. 4 (now repealed), though the defendants were not convicted on this ground). R. v. Bunn, supra, was disapproved in Gibson v. Lawson, [1891] 2 Q. B. 545, 557; and see Wright, Law of Criminal Conspiracies and Agreements, pp. 50—59. In R. v. Hibbert (1875), 13 Cox, C. C. 82, Mr. RUSSELL GURNEX, in his charge to the grand jury under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 32) (quoted in argument in Lyons (J.) & Sons v. Wilkins, [1899]

This enactment has no effect upon civil remedies (c).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Offences by Individuals.

1197. Every person commits an offence (d) who, with a view to compel (e) any other person (f) to abstain from doing, or to do, any act (g) which such other person has a legal right to do or to abstain Intimidation.

1 Ch. 255, 262, C. A.), declared it to be legal to attend at a place "to ascertain who were the persons working there or peaceably to persuade them or any others who were proposing to work there to join their fellow workmen"; but CLEASBY, B., in his summing up (R. v. Hibbert (1875), 13 Cox, C. C. 82, at p. 87), used expressions which suggested that picketing otherwise lawful became unlawful if carried on to such a length and to such an extent as to cause in the employer a dread of loss: "for instance, suppose it was proved that there was a confederacy which rendered it impossible for the employers to continue their business from the want of workpeople, carried out by waylaying and offering money to their workmen and men seeking employment from them, this would be an indictable offence"; and the defendants were convicted on proof that they, while picketing, invited men to quit work, promised money if they did so, and threatened that they would be known as "black sheep" and would be unable to get employment elsewhere if they refused.

(c) Quinn v. Leatham, [1901] A. C. 495, per Lord LINDLEY, at p. 542. As to civil remedies, see pp. 648 et seq., post.

(d) Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 86), s. 7. The penalty is a fine not exceeding £20 or imprisonment for not exceeding three months (ibid.). Where in any Act relating to employers or workmen a pecuniary penalty is imposed, and no power is given to reduce such penalty, the court may impose by way of penalty a sum not less than one-fourth of the penalty imposed by the Act (ibid., s. 8), but this, apparently, does not apply to the above-mentioned penalty which is expressed to be "not exceeding £20." The information may be laid by a police officer, and need not necessarily be laid by the person intimidated etc. (Young v. Peck (1912), 77 J. P. 49). The defendant is entitled to be tried before a jury (R. v. Mitchell, Ex parte Livesey, [1913] 1 K. B. 561). As to the procedure generally, see title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 660, note (a). As to the history of the law leading up to this Act, see note (b), p. 640, ante. The Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 86), does not apply to offences committed by seamen or apprentices to the sea service (ibid., s. 16), but it does apply to offences committed against seamen by persons who are not seamen (Kennedy v. Cowie, [1891] 1 Q. B. 771; compare R. v. Wall (1890), 112 C. C. Ct. Cases, 880; R. v. Phillips (1891), 113 C. C. Ct. Cas. 622). Offences of a similar character are dealt with by the Merchant Shipping Acts; see title SHIPPING AND NAVIGATION, Vol. XXVI., note (d), p. 14. By "seamen" are meant persons employed or engaged on board ship, as defined in the Merchant Shipping Acts (R. v. Lynch, [1898] 1 Q. B. 61, C. C. R. (persons are not exempt from the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 86), though they follow the sea as a calling if they are not engaged or employed as seamen on board ship at the time of the offence). But, apparently, if they are so engaged or employed, it does not affect their exemption that they were at the moment on shore (ibid., at p. 66); and see title SHIPPING AND NAVIGATION, Vol. XXVI., note (d), p. 14.

(e) Apparently, whether the compulsion was effective or not (Agnew v. Munro (1891), 28 So. L. R. 335). This "view to compel" is the gist of the offence; see note (g), infra; see also Lyons (J.) & Sons v. Wilkins, [1896] 1 Ch. 811, C. A.; Lyons (J.) & Sons v. Wilkins, [1899] 1 Ch. 255, C. A., per LINDLEY, M.R., at p. 267.

(f) Whether an employer or a workman (Lyons (J.) & Sons v. Wilkins, [1896] 1 Ch. 811, C. A., per KAR, L.J., at p. 830).

(g) It is not sufficient in a conviction to use the words "with a view to compel him to abstain from doing acts which he had a legal right to do"

from doing, wrongfully and without legal authority (h) uses violence to or intimidates (i) such other person, or his wife or children, or (R. v. McKenzie, [1892] 2 Q. B. 519, where the justices had found that the "acts" were "following his occupation as the agent of the Shipping Federation"). The defect is one of substance and cannot be cured by amendment; the gist of the offence is not the following, but the view to compel a person to abstain etc. (ibid.). But, apparently, if the conviction had followed the words of the statute and said "act" instead of "acts," it would be sufficient (ibid., per BRUCE, J., at p. 523; compare Ex parte Wilkins (1895), 64 L. J. (M. C.) 221, where CAVE, J., said that the only point in R. v. McKenzie, supra, was that the conviction did not follow the exact words of the statute; and it was held a sufficient description of a specified act to say "with a view to compel one A. B. to abstain from working as a shoe finisher in the employment of one C. D. a shoe manufacturer, carrying on business in the parish of E."). In Smith v. Moody, [1903] 1 K. B. 56, distinguishing and explaining R. v. McKenzie, supra, it was held that the act was sufficiently specified by the words "to abstain from working for J. B. at F. colliery"; and see Lyons (J.) & Sons v. Wilkins, [1899] 1 Ch. 253, C. A., per LINDLEY, M.R., at p. 266.

(h) The words "wrongfully and without legal authority" should be inserted in the complaint or indictment (Lyons (J.) & Sons v. Wilkins, supra, per LINDLEY, M.R., at p. 266; Clarkson v. Stuart (1894), 32 Sc. L. R. 4 (where their absence was not fatal)). If the evidence is consistent with the legality of the acts, this possible legality must be disproved before the defendant can be convicted (Lyons (J.) & Sons v. Wilkins, supra), the words being inserted to provide for any unforeseen case in which the evidence of the acts may show some lawful authority (ibid., per CHITTY, L.J., at p. 272). But in Ward, Lock & Co., Ltd. v. Operative Printers' Assistants' Society (1906), 22 T. L. R. 327, C. A., VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., at p. 329, expressed the view that the words were introduced for the purpose of limiting the remedy by criminal prosecution to cases so tortious as to give a civil remedy; and it was held that merely to compel a person to pay union wages or employ union men by trying to get all the men into the union, so that there would be no non-union men to employ, was neither a civil nor a criminal offence; see ibid., per FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., at p. 330 ("It is inaccurate to say that the masters have a right to employ men on any specific terms. They have only a right to employ such, if any, as are willing to accept those terms, and no wrong is done them by any one who by lawful means lessens the number of those willing to accept them"). It is, apparently, not essential to specify in the complaint the particular sub-section of the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 86), s. 7, which has been contravened (Wilson v. Renton (1900), 47 Sc. L. R. 209); the sub-sections merely specify different modes of committing one offence (ibid.). As to indictments generally, see title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., pp. 329 et seq.

(i) An indictment charging that a person "used violence to or intimidated" is bad for duplicity (R. v. Edmondson (1895), 59 J. P. 776). In Judge v. Bennett (1887), 52 J. P. 247, it was held to be intimidation to write to an employer that his shop would be picketed, in language such as to make him afraid, whether the picketing amounted to an unlawful watching or besetting within the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 86), s. 7 (4) (see p. 646, post), or not; but see Gibson v. Lawson, [1891] 2 Q. B. 545, per MATHEW, J., at p. 550, commenting on Judge v. Bennett, supra. In R. v. McKeever (1890), Times, 16th December, referred to in Gibson v. Lawson, supra, at pp. 550, 562, it was apparently held that to constitute intimidation there must be a threat of personal violence; and in Gibson v. Lawson, supra, it was held that it was not intimidation to communicate to a person and his employer an intention to strike and thus put that person in fear of being unable to get work. Apparently, intimidation in the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 86), is not wider in meaning than in the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1871 (34 & 35 injures his property, or persistently follows him about from place to place (k), or hides any tools, clothes or other property owned or used by him, or deprives him of or hinders him in the use thereof, or watches or besets the house or other place where he resides, or works, or carries on business, or happens to be, or the approach to such house or place (l), or follows him with two or more other persons in a disorderly manner in or through any street or road.

Vict. c. 32), s. 1 (see note (b), p. 643, ante), where it was limited to such intimidation as would justify a man being bound over, namely, a threat of personal violence (Gibson v. Lawson, [1891] 2 Q. B. 545); see Curran v. Treleaven, [1891] 2 Q. B. 545, 562, where a threat to an employer that the unions would combine to stop his business, and a speech to his men calling upon them in moderate terms to leave their work, were held not to be intimidation, even though the men left, as the defendant knew, in breach of contract; and compare R. (Lanktree) v. McCarthy, [1903] 2 I. R. 146; Young v. Peck (1912), 77 J. P. 49. But a distinction is to be drawn between intimidation and threats as a criminal offence under the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 86), and the like as forming a ground of civil liability (Allen v. Flood, [1898] A. C. 1, per Lord HERSCHELL, at p. 128); see note (n), p. 653, post. The word "intimidation" is not a word of art, but a word of common use (Gibson v. Lawson, supra, at p. 559; O'Connell v. R. (1844), 11 Cl. & Fin. 155, 11 L. J., per TINDAL, C.J., at p. 235). Apparently, it is not essential to set out the words of threats alleged in a complaint (Clarkson v. Stuart (1894), 32 Sc. L. R. 4), but the specific acts of intimidation must be set out in the conviction (Metcalf v. Wiseman (1888), 52 J. P. 439); compare R. v. Rowlands (1851), 5 Cox, C. C. 436, 466; Re Perham (1859), 5 H. & N. 30; and title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 260, note (b).

(k) The gist of the offence is not the following, but the view to compel a person to abstain etc. (R. v. McKenzie, [1892] 2 Q. B. 519); and it is illegal to follow with a view to compelling an employer to take back a dismissed employee (R. v. Wall (1907), 21 Cox, C. C. 401; compare Re Perham, supra; Mackinlay v. Hart (1897), 35 Sc. L. R. 32; Wilson v. Renton (1909), 47 Sc. L. R. 209). It is an offence to follow silently at a short distance if at the same time a crowd is following with hostile words and gestures (Smith v. Thomasson (1890), 16 Cox, C. C. 740); and compare Young v. Peck, supra.

(l) Such watching is illegal if done with a view to compelling an employer to take back a dismissed employee (R. v. Wall, supra). To beset A.'s house in order to compel B. is within the provision (Lyons (J.) & Sons v. Wilkins, [1899] 1 Ch. 255, C. A., per LINDLEY, M.R., at p. 268, and per CHITTY, L.J., at p. 272; and see Lyons (J.) & Sons v. Wilkins, [1896] 1 Ch. 811, C. A.). Watching and besetting is an actionable nuisance at common law, as an interference with the ordinary comfort of existence and the enjoyment of the house (Lyons (J.) & Sons v. Wilkins, [1899] 1 Ch. 255, C. A., per LINDLEY, M.R., at p. 267, though VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., at p. 274, dissented from this view; and compare Wallis v. United French Polishers (1905), Times, 28th November (where an interim injunction was granted against pickets on affidavits that their proceedings were a nuisance and annoyance, though there was no allegation of disorder). The watching or besetting may be for even a short time (Charnock v. Court, [1899] 2 Ch. 35; Walters v. Green, [1899] 2 Ch. 696), and may be of any place where the workman is casually found, such as, for instance, the landing stage of a port at which men are being imported (Charnock v. Court, supra), or a railway station (Walters v. Green, supra); compare Farmer v. Wilson (1900), 69 L. J. (Q. B.) 496, where the place beset was a vessel in a river used by employers as a dépôt for the supply of men. Apparently, however, the operations of the defendants in these cases would now be protected by the Trade Disputes Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 47), s. 2; see note (o), p. 647, post. The persons in the place beset need not be in the service of any person; and a person has a legal right to remain in a place and there receive board and wages even 1198. One or more persons acting on their own behalf or on behalf of a trade union, or a branch (m) of a trade union, or of an individual employer or firm, may, however, in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute (n), attend at or near a house or place where a person resides or works or carries on business, or happens to be, if they so attend merely for the purpose of peacefully obtaining or communicating information, or of peacefully persuading any person to work or abstain from working (o).

though the object of his so doing is to fulfil a contract which he has no right to fulfil because it is in violation of a statute (Farmer v. Wilson (1900), 69 L. J. (Q. B.) 496). Apparently, evidence of previous acts of the defendant is admissible against him, his intention being in question (Topin v. Feron (1909), 43 L. L. T. 100).

(m) See Trade Disputes Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 47), s. 5.

(n) As to the meaning of these words, see p. 662, post.

(o) Trade Disputes Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 47), s. 2 (1). By ibid., s. 2 (2), the following words in the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 86), s. 7, are repealed: "Attending at or near the house or place where a person resides or works or carries on business or happens to be or the approach to such house or place, in order merely to obtain or to communicate information shall not be deemed a watching or besetting within the meaning of this section." The alterations, therefore, are (i.) the omission of the words "the approach to such house or place," which may narrow the area of permissible "attendance," but, apparently, makes no practical difference; (ii.) the addition of "peacefully" before "obtaining or communicating information"; (iii.) the addition of "peacefully persuading any person etc.,"; and (iv.) the addition of the general requirement that the act, if it is to be protected, must be done "in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute"; the result of this being, apparently, that if the existence or contemplation of a trade dispute be negatived (see p. 662, post), such protection as was given to pickets by the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 86), is withdrawn by the Trade Disputes Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 47). Ibid., s. 2 (1), deals with civil as well as with criminal responsibility (Vacher & Sons, Ltd. v. London Society of Compositors, [1913] A. C. 107, per Lord ATKINSON, at p. 123). Under the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 86), proof of an intention peacefully to persuade was held to be no defence in Lyons (J.) & Sons v. Wilkins, [1899] 1 Ch. 255, C. A., per LINDLEY, M.R., at p. 267, though VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., at p. 274, thought that the fact that the "communication" invited the men to leave their work as soon as they lawfully might did not thereby cause it to cease to be a communication within the proviso, and that there were no facts to constitute such persuasion a common law nuisance; and in Ward, Lock & Co., Ltd. v. Operative Printers' Assistants' Society (1906), 22 T. L. R. 327, C. A., the Court of Appeal held (before the passing of the Trade Disputes Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 47)) that no wrong, civil or criminal, was committed by stationing pickets who caused no violence, obstruction, or nuisance, did nothing beyond communicating and obtaining information, and invited no breach of contract but were employed to induce the plaintiffs' workmen to join the union and then to determine their employment by proper notice; see ibid., per FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., at p. 329: "I cannot see that this section [Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 86), s. 7] affects or is intended to affect civil rights or remedies. It legalizes nothing, and it renders nothing wrongful that was not so before. Its object is solely to visit certain selected classes of acts which were previously wrongful, i.e., were at least civil torts, with penal consequences capable of being summarily inflicted"; and at p. 330: "No wrong would have been done to the plaintiffs in the present case if the defendants had succeeded in persuading every printer's assistant in the country to join the union, and they had rendered it impossible for the plaintiffs to get men to work for them on the terms

1199. The fact that this summary jurisdiction is given to the magistrate does not affect the right of the High Court to grant an interlocutory injunction (p), and an injunction will be granted to restrain any of the acts which are crimes by common law or by statute if it tends to the destruction or deterioration of property (q).

they desired. . . . In support of the plaintiffs' claim with regard to picketing, it must be shown that the defendants, or one of them, were guilty of a wrongful act, i.e., that the picketing constituted an interference with the plaintiffs' action wrongful at common law, or as I think it may accurately be phrased, were guilty of a common law nuisance." It is to be noted that in this case the pickets do not appear to have persuaded men to join the union and terminate their service; but the object of the defendants, the union and its secretary, was so to persuade. In R. v. Bauld (1876), 13 Cox, C. C. 282 (a conviction under the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 86), wrongly referred to in the report as the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875), HUDDLESTON, B., at pp. 283, 284, 291, had limited the words "obtaining or communicating information" to obtaining etc. information as to union members who, while receiving strike pay, were also going to work; compare R. v. Selsby (1847), 5 Cox, C. C. 495, n., per ROLFE, B., at p. 498. The Trade Disputes Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 47), s. 2 (1), does not change the nature of the offence under the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 86), s. 7, or make it necessary to allege intimidation expressly in the complaint; it merely provides a defence (Wilson v. Renton (1909), 47 Sc. L. R. 209); nor does it confer any right to enter upon private property against the will of the owner (Larkin v. Belfast Harbour Commissioners, [1908] 2 I. R. 214). It has been suggested that the Trade Disputes Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 47), s. 2 (1), does not apply to the "watching" of a private residence (R. v. Wall (1907), 21 Cox, C. C. 401, per PALLES, C.B., summing up at p. 403 ("They [the defendants] rely on their right under the Trade Disputes Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 47), s. 2 (1), to attend at the house for the purpose of peaceably persuading other employees to abstain from working. The Trade Disputes Act, 1906, refers to a 'mere attending,' which is more temporary than 'watching.' In any case, it is not suggested that there were any workmen there to be persuaded, as this count refers to watching the house in the suburbs, not the business premises in the city")). Apparently, there must be evidence that information was in fact received or communicated, or that there was an intention to receive or communicate information (Wilson v. Renton, supra). Quare whether peaceably picketing a theatre to persuade the public to abstain from going there is within the provision (Topin v. Feron (1909), 43 I. L. T. 190). It is to be noted that the Trade Disputes Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 47), s. 2 (1), is general in its application and is not confined to the case of members of a trade union (Fischer & Sons, Ltd. v. London Society of Compositors, [1913] A. C. 107, per Lord HALDANE, L.C., at p. 114, and per Lord ATKINSON, at p. 123).

Edison-Bell Consolidated Phonograph Co., Ltd.*, supra, at pp. 369, 370), but not necessarily special damage in the narrow sense of the words (*National Phonograph Co., Ltd. v. When a person does a wrongful act calculated as its natural and probable consequence to produce injury, and in fact producing injury, it is no answer that the natural and probable consequence is an act done by a third person in breach of duty or contract (Bowen v. Manchester Racecourse Co., [1901] 2 Ch. 37, 51, C. A., following Lumley v. Wagner (1852), 1 De G. M. & G. 604, and, apparently, overruling Heathcote v. North Staffordshire Rail. Co. (1850), 2 Mac. & G. 100. In Bowen v. Hall, supra, the act induced was a breach of contract, and the decision was therefore correct on the principle stated in the text; but the ground of the decision was the presence of an intent to injure the plaintiff, a ground disapproved in Allen v. Flood, supra, per Lord HERSCHELL, at p. 119. In Temperton v. Russell, supra, it was laid down that it was immaterial whether the act induced was a breach of contract or not; this was similarly disapproved in *Allen v. wrong, apart from cases where there is a trade dispute in contemplation or existence (b), to induce men to leave their employment in breach of their contracts, if the inducement is made with knowledge of such contracts (c), or, with knowledge that such contracts have been broken, to assist in supporting the men who have broken them (d).

It is not actionable in an individual to ask or persuade a person to do or to refrain from doing an act which such person may lawfully do or refrain from doing, even though a third party is thereby injured in his trade (f), for an act in itself legal does not become actionable merely because it interferes with another in his trade (g).

If an act is not in itself a civil wrong, a bad motive will not make it so (h), and where "malice" is used in this connexion it means an

R. 645; compare Keeble v. Hickeringill (1707), 11 East, 573, n.; Boots v. Grundy (1900), 82 L. T. 769; Workman v. London and Lancashire Fire Insurance Co. (1903), 19 T. L. R. 360. But in Conway v. Wade, [1909] A. C. 508, Lord LOREBURN, L.C., at p. 510, treated it as still doubtful whether an action would or would not lie for inducing a person not to employ or not to serve another where there was no breach of contract, no violence, and no threat alleged. The basis of the legality of the acts of a trader who injures another by competition has been the subject of a considerable difference of opinion. One view is that there is a right to trade, interference with which is prima facie unlawful, but may be justified by a plea of competition (Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor, Gow & Co. (1889), 23 Q. B. D. 598, C. A., per FRY, L.J., at p. 625; compare Keeble v. Hickeringill, supra, at p. 576; Gloucester Grammar School Case (1410), Y. B. 11 Hen. 4, 47, f. 21). The other view is that the acts by which competition is pursued are all lawful acts, and require no justification (Allen v. Flood, [1898] A. C. 1, per Lord HERSCHELL, at p. 140; and see note (h), infra). In Quinn v. Leathem, [1901] A. C. 495, however, the court apparently returned to the first principle; see ibid., at pp. 525, 527; and in Giblan v. National Amalgamated Labourers' Union of Great Britain and Ireland, [1903] 2 K. B. 600, C. A., per STIRLING, L.J., at p. 622, the words of FRY, L.J., in Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor, Gow & Co. (1889), 23 Q. B. D. 598, C. A., at p. 625, were quoted as good law; see also A.-G. of Australia v. Adelaide Steamship Co. (1913), 109 L. T. 258, P. C.; and pp. 655, 656, post.

(h) Allen v. Flood, supra, per Lord WATSON, at p. 92 ("although the rule may be otherwise with regard to crimes"; and if the act be a civil wrong, it is none the less so because done with a good motive); ibid., per Lord MACNAGHTEN, at p. 152 ("Many cases may be put of harm done out of malice without any remedy being available at law. Suppose a man takes a transfer of a debt with which he has no concern, for the purpose of ruining the debtor, and then makes him bankrupt out of spite, and so intentionally causes him to lose some benefit under a will or settlement—suppose a man declines to give a servant a character because he is offended with the servant for leaving—suppose a person of position takes away his custom from a country tradesman in a small village, merely to injure him on account of some fancied grievance not connected with their dealings in the way of buying and selling—no one, I think, would suggest that there could be any remedy at law in any of those cases. But suppose a customer, not content with taking away his own custom, says something not slanderous or otherwise actionable or even improper in itself to induce a friend of his not to employ the tradesman any more. Neither the one nor the other is liable for taking away his own custom. Is it possible that the one can be made liable for inducing the other not to employ the person against whom he has a grudge?"). intent to do an act which is wrongful, not merely an act which is harmful, to the detriment of another (i). It is, therefore, not an actionable wrong for an individual merely to induce a person not to serve or not to employ another, where no breach of contract is thereby caused (k), unless such inducement be accompanied by violence or threats (l), or fraud, misrepresentation, intimidation, obstruction, or molestation, or other illegal means (m), whether the means of compulsion used be physical or moral (n).

C. 587 (a case applicable not only to rights of property, but to the exercise by an individual of any right; see Allen v. Flood, [1898] A. C. 1, per Lord HERSCHELL, at p. 124). Carrington v. Taylor (1809), 11 East, 571, was overruled in Allen v. Flood, supra, per Lord WATSON, at p. 103; compare ibid., per Lord HERSCHELL, at pp. 135, 136. Keeble v. Hickeringill (1707), 11 East, 573, n., does not decide that an evil motive will render unlawful an act otherwise lawful (Allen v. Flood, supra, per Lord HERSCHELL, at p. 135), or if it does, is overruled (ibid., per Lord WATSON, at p. 102, and per Lord HERSCHELL, at pp. 132, 133); and see generally, titles MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND PROCEDURE, Vol. XIX., p. 680; TORT, pp. 466 et seq., ante.

"Malice" in such cases cannot be left at large to the jury (ibid., per Lord HERSCHELL, at p. 118, and per Lord DAVEY, at p. 171); compare the meaning of "malice" in defamation, as to which see title LIBEL AND SLANDER, Vol. XVIII., pp. 608, 609. As to malice in torts generally, see title TORT, pp. 466 et seq., ante.

(k) Allen v. Flood, supra. This case was decided on the hypothesis that the defendant had neither uttered nor carried into effect any threat, and that there was no conspiracy or combination; it does not affect cases where there are conspiracy, threats, loss of business and interference with legal rights (Quinn v. Leatham, [1901] A. C. 495, per Lord HALSBURY, L.C., at pp. 406, 407). It decided no new law, but merely set aside dicta in Bowen v. Hall (1881), 6 Q. B. D. 333, C. A., and Temperton v. Russell, [1893] 1 Q. B. 715, which were unnecessary to the decision of either case (Quinn v. Leatham, supra, per Lord MACNAGHTEN, at p. 508); see also ibid., per Lord SHAND, at p. 514, and per Lord LINDLEY, at p. 536, distinguishing Allen v. Flood, supra, on the ground that in that case the defendant's purpose was to promote his own trade interest as distinguished from a purpose to injure the plaintiff in his trade, which latter purpose was held to be present in Quinn v. Leatham, supra; and see Workman v. London and Lancashire Fire Insurance Co. (1903), 19 T. L. R. 360; McElreath v. United Society of Drillers (1905), Times, 17th February, C. A.; *Jose v. the jury unless there is something in the manner or circumstances of their utterance which might constitute them a threat (s).

(ii.) When there is a Trade Dispute.

1204. If an act is done by a person in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute (t), it is not actionable on the ground only that it induces some other person to break a contract of employment (u), or that it is an interference with the trade, business, or employment of some other person, or with the right of some other person to dispose of his capital or of his labour as he wills (a).

objecting to work with the plaintiff; and that the defendant did more than merely act on behalf of the men. In view of these findings the case was treated in the House of Lords on the basis that the defendant, acting as a mere mischief-maker in order from unworthy motives to injure the plaintiff, and in a matter in which he, the defendant, had no concern, procured the plaintiff's dismissal by a threat that the men would strike, which was untrue; that the complaint as to non-payment of the fine was a mere excuse to cover an intention to injure the plaintiff because he had been promoted, and that the whole story as to the men's objection to work with the plaintiff was a fabrication; compare Allen v. Flood, [1898] A. C. 1, per Lord HERSCHELL, at p. 128, and per Lord SHAND, at p. 164; and see Santen v. Busnack (1913), 29 T. L. R. 214, C. A.; Gaskell v. Lancashire and Cheshire Miners' Federation (1912), 28 T. L. R. 518, C. A.

(t) As to the meaning of these words, see pp. 662 et seq., post.

(u) As to what constitutes a contract of employment, see title MASTER AND SERVANT, Vol. XX., pp. 75 et seq., 268. It is to be noted that the Trade Disputes Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 47), s. 3, does not affect inducements to break contracts other than contracts of employment. As to the liability against which protection is afforded by this provision, see p. 649, ante. Nor does the provision protect a man from liability for a libel (Dallimore v. Williams and Jesson (1912), 29 T. L. R. 67, 68, C. A.).

(a) Trade Disputes Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 47), s. 3. As to the general application of this provision, compare note (o), p. 647, ante; as to its general effect, see Conway v. Wade, [1909] A. C. 506, per Lord LOREBURN, L.C., at p. 511 ("It is clear that if there be threats or violence, this section gives no protection, for then there is some other ground of action besides the ground that 'it induces some other person to break a contract' and so forth. So far there is no change. If the inducement be to break a contract [of employment] without threat or violence then this is no longer actionable, provided always that it was done 'in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute.' . . . If there be no threat or violence, and no breach of contract, and yet there is 'an interference with the trade, business or employment of some other person or with the right of some other person to dispose of his capital or his labour as he wills' there again there is perhaps a change. It is not to be actionable, provided that it was done 'in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute.' So there is no longer any question in such cases whether there was 'sufficient justification' or not. The condition contained in these words as to trade disputes is made sufficient"); S. C., [1908] 2 K. B. 844, C. A., per COLLINS, M.R., at p. 849 ("It will be observed that this leaves Lumley v. Gye [(1853), 2 F. & B. 217], and Giblan v. National Amalgamated Labourers' Union of Great Britain and Ireland [(1903) 2 K. B. 600, C. A.] untouched except as to trade disputes"); see also Gaskell v. Lancashire and Cheshire Miners' Federation, supra. The words "or that it is an interference with" to the end of the enactment seem to be designed to protect the doer against the consequences of the doctrine that there is a right to trade, any interference with which, even by an 1205. It is not possible to state with certainty the position at common law of officials and members of a trade union or other persons who carry out in combination the operations usually associated with the activities of trade unions, as the cases on the subject have left the law in considerable doubt (b).

It is clear, in the first place, that acts actionable (c), if done by an individual, are a fortiori actionable if done by two or more in combination and if causing actual damage (d).

There is much authority of great weight in support of the proposition that no action will lie against persons who in combination do acts which apart from the combination would not be either criminal or actionable, unless the combination is itself a criminal conspiracy (e). Where, on the other hand, a combination to do certain acts is alleged and proved, the effect of the combination has been held to give rise to a cause of action even though the acts done which constitute the means by which that effect is attained would not have been individual, requires to be justified on the ground, for instance, of trade competition, a doctrine repudiated in Allen v. Flood, [1898] A. C. 1, but asserted in Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor, Gow & Co., [1892] A. C. 25; Quinn v. Leathem, [1901] A. C. 495, and Giblan v. National Amalgamated Labourers' Union of Great Britain and Ireland, [1903] 2 K. B. 600, C. A.; see note (f), p. 651, ante, and p. 656, post. If there was a trade dispute and the act was done in furtherance of it, the fact that the act was done with a bad motive does not take it out of the protection of the statute (Dallimore v. Williams and Jesson (1912), 29 T. L. R. 67, C. A.).

(b) As to criminal conspiracy generally, see pp. 638 et seq., ante; title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., pp. 260 et seq. As to the statutory exemption of trade unions from liability, see pp. 665, 666, post. The essential elements of criminal conspiracy and conspiracy giving rise to a cause of action are the same, but in the latter case special damage must be proved (Quinn v. Leathem, supra, per Lord MACNAGHTEN, at p. 510, per Lord BRAMPTON, at p. 528, and per Lord LINDLEY, at p. 542; Vacher & Sons, Ltd. v. London Society of Compositors, [1913] A. actionable if done by an individual (f). Even in this case, however, there must be an interference with some legal right (g), and such legal right is apparently to be found in the principle that every man has a right to carry on his trade or dispose of his labour in any lawful way in which he thinks fit and that an interference with such right is prima facie wrongful and requires justification (h).

1206. The result appears to be that though when an individual interferes by legal means with the right of another person to trade his acts may be lawful and require no justification (i), when several in combination are responsible for a similar interference, the effect of their combination constitutes their acts unlawful by reason, presumably, of the greater extent of the injury which can be caused by the co-operation of numbers (k), and so supplies the violation of a legal right which is essential to the cause of action. Consequently, it is necessary for the defendants to show some justification, and in the inquiry into justification a malicious intention, in the sense of ill-will and intention to injure, becomes a material element (l). A distinction, therefore, is to be drawn according as the combination is in pursuit of a legitimate trade object, such as success against a rival trader (m), or is in pursuit of an intention to injure, apart from such object (n).

(f) Compare Quinn v. Leatham, [1901] A. C. 495, 510, 511, 530 (approving dicta in Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor, Gow & Co. (1889), 23 Q. B. D. 598, 616, 630, 631, C. A.; S. C., [1892] A. Warner* (1891), 65 L. T. 132, C. A.

(h) Compare Lyons (J.) & Sons v. Wilkins, [1896] 1 Ch. 811, C. A.; Quinn v. Leatham, supra, per Lord BRAMPTON, at p. 526 (where it seems to be implied that a combination with intent to injure a man in his trade, as apart from a combination in defence of legitimate trade interests, is a criminal conspiracy at common law); and see p. 639, ante; see also Erle, The Law Relating to Trades Unions, p. 12.

(i) See p. 651, ante.

(k) Compare Quinn v. Leatham, supra, per Lord MACNAGHTEN, at p. 511.

(l) Allen v. Flood, supra, per Lord WATSON, at p. 108, per Lord HERSCHELL, at p. 124, and per Lord MACNAGHTEN, at p. 153 (where the rule that a legal act cannot be made illegal by a bad motive was regarded as probably not applicable in a case of conspiracy).

(m) As in Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor, Gow & Co., [1892] A. C. 25; Jenkinson v. Nield (1892), 8 T. L. R. 540; *Scottish Co-operative Wholesale Society, Ltd. v. (n) Compare Allen v. Flood, supra, per Lord SHAND, at p. 169;

If, however, the object is not unlawful, and the acts done would not have been actionable if done by an individual, no action lies (o).

1207. In accordance with the above principle, it has been held an actionable wrong requiring justification (p) for two or more in combination to induce persons not to work for an employer, and to induce persons not to work for a customer of that employer, whether the inducement involve breaches of contract or not, if damage results to that employer (q); or, with the object of preventing a person from obtaining or retaining employment, to cause or threaten to cause a strike of the men employed by the employer of such person, if the defendants have power to cause such strike and thereby in fact deprive such person of his employment (r).

It is a sufficient justification if the acts were done not with intent to injure, but with intent to further a legitimate trade purpose (s).

the rule.

Quinn v. Leatham, [1901] A. C. 495, per Lord SHAND, at p. 512. It is to be noted that Lord SHAND (ibid., at p. 514) and Lord LINDLEY (ibid., at p. 536) apparently applied the same test to the acts of an individual; but see p. 651, ante.

(o) Hutley v. Simmons, [1898] 1 Q. B. 181 (an unsatisfactory case as reported (see Quinn v. Leatham, supra, at p. 540), but approved by Lord BRAMPTON (ibid., at p. 531), on the ground that apparently DARLING, J., held the object to be lawful ("If he had held that, although the object of the conspiracy was unlawful, yet if [sic] the overt acts were not so, because they would not have been unlawful if done by one individual without any conspiracy, and had decided on that ground, I should have differed")); compare Kearney v. Lloyd (1896), 26 L. R. Ir. 268.

(p) As to what may be justification, see pp. 659, 660, post.

(q) Quinn v. Leatham, supra.

(r) Read v. Friendly Society of Operative Stonemasons of England, Ireland and Wales, [1902] 2 K. B. 732, C. A. (where breach of contract was involved); Giblan v. National Amalgamated Labourers' Union of Great Britain and Ireland, [1903] 2 K. B. 600, C. A. (where no breach of contract was involved and it was held that if such acts are done by officials of a union in its service and for its benefit the union is liable; but, as to the liability of trade unions, see p. 665, post); compare Thomas v. Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners (1902), Times, 28th April. But in Giblan v. National Amalgamated Labourers' Union of Great Britain and Ireland, supra, ROMER, L.J., at p. 619, was of opinion that in such a case combination was not essential to the cause of action, the ground of the action being "unjustifiable molestation" and "improper and inexcusable interference with the man's ordinary rights of citizenship." This, however, appears to be contrary to the principle that a bad motive will not make a legal act illegal; see p. 651, ante. There is a distinction between a threat to call men out and a mere warning that men will come out; see Giblan v. National Amalgamated Labourers' Union of Great Britain and Ireland, supra, per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., at p. 617, and per STIRLING, L.J., at p. 623; and see p. 653, ante.

(s) Thus, in Bulcock v. St. Anne's Master Builders' Federation (1902), 19 T. L. R. 27, the defendants, a masters' federation, finding that the plaintiff, one of their employees, having struck or been locked out, had obtained employment with a member of an allied federation, asked the central federation to which they were allied to induce that member to discharge the plaintiff, and the plaintiff was in consequence, without breach of contract, discharged; but it was held that no action lay, as

"Black Lists,"

1208. The same principle has been applied in the case of "black lists" and circulars issued in the course of trade disputes.

It is actionable to publish lists of a person's customers for the purpose and with the effect of injuring that person in his business by holding him up to unpopularity or by intimidating those who would otherwise have dealt with him (t), or to publish lists of the names of men who refuse to strike, with the object of intimidating them or coercing their employer (a); and a fortiori, such conduct is actionable if the circulars or lists contain statements which are false (b).

If, however, such lists or circulars contain no false statement, they may be justified by showing that they were issued in pursuit of a legitimate trade object and without ill-will towards the person injured by them, or if there is no evidence to the contrary (c).

the acts done were not done with intent to injure the plaintiff, but only with intent to further the defendants' own interests; and see Workman v. London and Lancashire Fire Insurance Co. (1903), 19 T. L. R. 360; and note (m), p. 656, ante.

(t) See Quinn v. Leatham, [1901] A. C. 495, per FITZ-GIBBON, L.J., at p. 500; in the House of Lords the "black lists" were not in issue except as overt acts showing conspiracy; but see ibid., per Lord LINDLEY, at p. 538 ("Black lists are real instruments of coercion, as every man whose name is on one soon discovers to his cost").

(a) Trollope v. London Building Trades Federation (1896), 12 T. L. R. 373 (distribution of a poster edged with black containing the names of members of the union who refused to strike held actionable, on a finding by a jury that it was not published bonâ fide in the interests of the union, but for the purpose of compelling an employer to dismiss men in breach of contract); compare McKernan v. United Operative Masons' Association of Scotland (1874), 11 Sc. L. R. 219 (where a rule requiring the circulation among the members of a list of members who had worked in opposition to the society was regarded as in unlawful restraint of trade).

(b) Pink v. Federation of Trades and Labour Unions (1892), 8 T. L. R. 216, 711 (injunction granted restraining a circular which falsely alleged that the plaintiffs (employers) had boycotted men in their employment because they belonged to a union, and which invited secretaries of co-operative societies not to deal with, and to induce their members not to deal with, the plaintiffs; but the impropriety of the circular was not disputed by the defendants); and see Dallimore v. Williams and Jesson (1912), Times, 27th April (where, however, a new trial was ordered on account of misdirection as to the meaning of "trade dispute"; see S. C. (1912), 29 T. L. R. 267, C. A.); Vacher & Sons, Ltd. v. London Society of Compositors, [1912] 3 K. B. 547, C. A.; S. C., [1913] A. C. 107.

(c) Peto v. Apperley (1891), 35 Sol. Jo. 792 (distribution of a notice by a trade union secretary merely inviting carpenters and joiners to keep away from a certain employer during a strike held justified as being merely in furtherance of the union's objects and not done with any personal feeling against the plaintiff); Haile v. Lillingstone (1891), 35 Sol. Jo. 792 (distribution of notice by trade union secretary appealing for a boycott of a tradesman and calling him a blackleg and sweater: held justified, following Peto v. Apperley, supra); Jenkinson v. Nield (1892), 8 T. L. R. 540 (association of masters issued a "black list," containing the plaintiff's name, and asking all masters in the trade not to employ him and others who had been locked out: held no action lay, in the absence of evidence that the masters were actuated by any other motive than self-interest, or by a desire to injure the plaintiff); Bulcock v. St. Anne's Master Builders' Federation (1902), 19 T. L. R. 27 (masters' federation allied to a central federation sent to the central federation a list of names of men who had struck and

(ii.) When there is a Trade Dispute.

1209. An act done in pursuance of an agreement or combination by two or more persons, if done in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute, is not actionable unless the act if done without any such agreement or combination would be actionable (d).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Justification.

1210. No justification is required where, in the case of an individual, the acts done are all legal, or, in the case of a combination, the acts done and their effect are all legal (e).

The acts of an individual, or the acts or effect of a combination, may, though illegal, be justified; and, though in the cases the distinction is not very clearly made, it appears that what may justify an illegal effect of a combination will not necessarily justify the illegal acts of an individual or a combination (f).

found employment elsewhere, for the purpose of preventing such men from obtaining employment with any federated employer: held that this was no evidence of an unlawful threat; see note (s), p. 657, ante.

(d) Trade Disputes Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 47), s. 1. As to the meaning of "trade dispute," see pp. 662 et seq., post; compare Conway v. Wade, [1908] 2 K. B. 844, C. A. (reversed, [1909] A. C. 506, without affecting this point), per COZENS-HARDY, M.R., at p. 849 ("Section 1 alters the law of conspiracy—or rather, I should say, repeals the law of conspiracy—where there is a trade dispute, but leaves it intact in every other case"). The effect of the provision seems to be to do away, in the case of trade disputes, with the doctrine that though all the overt acts be legal, the combination itself may be illegal by reason of its object; see p. 655, ante; Vacher & Sons, Ltd. v. London Society of Compositors, [1913] A. C. 107, per Lord ATKINSON, at p. 122 ("The 1st section simply aims at assimilating the civil and criminal law in respect of the particular kind of conspiracy mentioned in the section"). As to the general application of the provision, compare note (o), p. 647, ante.

(e) Allen v. Flood, [1898] A. C. 1, per Lord WATSON, at p. 94 ("Whilst it is true that no act in itself lawful requires an excuse, it is equally true that some acts in themselves illegal admit of a legal excuse"); see ibid., per Lord HERSCHELL, at p. 138. As to the distinction between the acts of an individual and of a combination, see pp. 655 et seq., ante. In Read v. Friendly Society of Operative Stonemasons of England, Ireland and Wales, [1902] 2 K. B. 732, C. A., COLLINS, M.R., at p. 739, said: "It is, however, desirable to guard against the notion that if the act done be illegal, 'just cause' may still be averred to purge the wrong. For instance, where illegal means have been used to bring about the breach of a contract to the detriment of a party thereto, 'just cause' cannot come into the discussion at all." If, however, this is so, it is not easy to see how "just cause" ever comes into the discussion; for if both the object and the means are legal it is not required as a defence; see Allen v. Flood, supra. The phrase "without justification" or its equivalent is frequently used in relation to acts which without justification would be illegal (see pp. 649, 656, 657, ante), and in the view of COLLINS, M.R., in Read v. Friendly Society of Operative Stonemasons of England, Ireland and Wales, supra, is correct, the whole of the discussion as to what constitutes justification would appear to be unnecessary.

(f) In Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor, Gow & Co. (1889), 23 Q. B. D. 598, C. A.; S. C., [1892] A. C. 25, the overt acts were all held legal, but justification was nevertheless discussed, and BOWEN, L.J., in the Court of Appeal, at pp. 615, 617, 618, held it to be a justification that the act is an act of 1211. What is a sufficient justification is a matter to be decided by the court on the circumstances of each case (g). Any justification, to be available as a defence, must cover the whole conduct of those who set it up, the means as well as the end (h).

It is no justification that the object was to compel a person to pay, or to punish him for not paying, a debt or fine (i).

What

ordinary trade competition, as distinguished from an act done merely with the intention of causing harm. Whether this was relevant to the decision was doubted in Allen v. Flood, [1898] A. C. 1 (see note (f), p. 651, ante), but it may be explained perhaps by the presence of the element of conspiracy which might render a justification necessary (see note (l), p. 656, ante). The case may, therefore, be one of justification of the object or effect by the plea of competition. In South Wales Miners' Federation v. Glamorgan Coal Co., [1905] A. C. 239, on the other hand, the overt acts, namely, the inducement of persons to break contracts, were illegal; and for such acts it was held no justification that the intention was to benefit both the doers of the acts and the other parties to the contracts, without any ill-will towards such other parties. In Giblan v. National Amalgamated Labourers' Union of Great Britain and Ireland, [1903] 2 K. B. 600, C. A., the overt acts were not illegal, but the combination was illegal, and it was held no justification that the intention was to compel the person injured to pay a debt. In Smithies v. National Association of Operative Plasterers, [1909] 1 K. B. 310, C. A., the overt acts, namely, procuring breach of contract, were illegal, and it was held no justification that the parties injured had in fact, or that the union bond fide believed that such parties had, broken a prior contract between them and the union. As to cases where trade competition has been held a justification, see pp. 657, 658, ante; and title MASTER AND SERVANT, Vol. XX., pp. 268, 269. For acts such as damaging a person in his trade by fraud, misrepresentation, intimidation, molestation, or obstruction, there clearly can be no justification (Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor, Gow & Co. (1889), 23 Q. B. D. 598, 614, C. A.; see note (m), p. 652, ante); but an act is not "molestation" or "obstruction" in an illegal sense merely because it damages another in his trade (Allen v. Flood, supra, per Lord HERSHELL, at p. 138).

(g) Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor, Gow & Co., supra, per BOWEN, L.J., at p. 618; South Wales Miners' Federation v. Glamorgan Coal Co., supra; S. C., [1903] 2 K. B. 545, C. A., per ROMER, L.J., at p. 574. As to cases where it would be justifiable to advise a breach of contract, as, for instance, where the claims of relationship or guardianship demand an interference amounting to protection, compare South Wales Miners' Federation v. Glamorgan Coal Co., supra, per Lord HALSBURY, L.C., at p. 245, per Lord JAMES OF HEREFORD, at p. 249, and per Lord LINDLEY, at p. 254; Giblan v. National Amalgamated Labourers' Union of Great Britain and Ireland, supra; Conway v. Wade, [1909] A. C. 506, per Lord LOREBURN, L.C., at p. 511.

(h) Read v. Friendly Society of Operative Stonemasons of England, Ireland and Wales, [1902] 2 K. B. 732, C. A., per COLLINS, M.R., at p. 737 (where a union threatened to call out its men as a protest against the employment of the plaintiff, such employment being believed by the union to constitute a breach of an agreement between the union and the employer, it was held, that the plaintiff, being in consequence dismissed, had a cause of action; for that whether the union was right or wrong in its interpretation of the agreement, there was no justification for combining to coerce the employers by threats to break their contract with the plaintiff).

(i) Giblan v. National Amalgamated Labourers' Union of Great Britain and Ireland, supra. The presence or absence of a desire to punish is immaterial (ibid.); compare Smithies v. National Association of Operative Plasterers, supra; Conway v. Wade, supra; and see, generally, title MASTER AND SERVANT, Vol. XX., pp. 268, 269.

SECT. 7.—Agency.

SECT. 7.

Agency.

1212. The question of the responsibility of a trade union for the acts of its branches, or of its officials, or other persons who are alleged to have acted as its agents, no longer arises where the claim is in respect of a tort alleged to have been committed on behalf of the union (k), but it still arises in cases of contract (l).

Liability of union.

1213. Whether a central union and its branches stand in the relation of principal and agent is a question to be determined by examination of the rules regulating the relations between them, and of the circumstances of the case as proved in evidence (m).

Relation between union and branches.

In the absence of anything to the contrary in the rules, a union and a branch do not stand in the relation of principal and agent, or constitute one body so as to make the action and knowledge of the branch the action and knowledge of the union (n), though the union may be responsible for the act of a branch or its officials which it has in fact authorised or ordered (o).

The mere fact that a branch asks the union to sanction a strike and the union accedes to the request does not, it appears, affect the union with knowledge, possessed by the branch, that the strike will involve breaches of contract (p).

Agency is not created by the fact that the union is on certain conditions bound to furnish strike pay (q).

(l) As to a claim for an injunction against a threatened tort, see note (n), p. 666, post.

(m) Denaby and Cadeby Main Collieries, Ltd. v. Yorkshire Miners' Association, [1906] A. C. 384, 389, 403 (the branches collected funds, defrayed local expenses therewith, handed the balance to the union for general expenses (including strike pay), elected branch officials and central officials, and sent delegates to a central council in which was vested the supreme government of the union; no branch was allowed to strike except after a ballot and on the vote of a specified majority, and the members were only entitled to strike pay after all peaceful means had been employed to secure settlement of the dispute and with the sanction of the union; and a plebiscite of the whole union might adopt a strike after it had commenced: held, that if a branch struck in violation of these rules, the branch delegates or officials or committees did not involve the union in responsibility for their acts; they are not agents of the union to procure even a lawful and regular strike, still less an unlawful irregular strike); compare Mackendrick v. National Union of Dock Labourers in Great Britain and Ireland (1910), 48 Sc. L. R. 17 (union held liable on a guarantee by a branch to its solicitor for his costs).

SECT. 7.
Agency.
Liability of officials.

1214. Prima facie the officials of trade unions cannot be presumed to have authority to do or sanction acts other than acts which unions may lawfully do (r).

An official of a union who calls men out in breach of contracts of which he is ignorant is not personally liable; nor is he personally liable if after knowledge that contracts have been broken he in correspondence with other officials supports their claim to a continuance of strike pay, and such strike pay passes through his hands (s).

In the absence of evidence of direct authority a district delegate is not the agent of a union or of its officials so as to make it or them liable for his tort (t).

SECT. 8.—Meaning of "Trade Dispute."

Definitions.

1215. By a trade dispute is meant any dispute between employers and workmen or between workmen and workmen which is connected with the employment or non-employment, or the terms of the employment, or with the conditions of labour, of any person; and by "workmen" is meant all persons employed in trade or industry, whether or not in the employment of the employer with whom a trade dispute arises (a).

Association, [1906] A. C. 384, 392. The situation as concerns third parties is not affected by the fact that strike pay has been furnished in contravention of the rules (Denaby and Cadeby Main Collieries, Ltd. v. Yorkshire Miners' Association, [1906] A. C. 384, 393); and see Yorkshire Miners' Association v. Howden, [1905] A. C. 256.

(t) Flood v. Jackson, [1895] 2 Q. B. 21, C. A.; reversed, without affecting this point, sub nom. Allen v. Flood, [1898] A. C. 1. As to torts generally, see title TORT, pp. 461 et seq., ante.

(a) Trade Disputes Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 47), s. 5 (3), which extends the definitions in the Trade Disputes Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 47), s. 5 (3), to the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 86), and repeals the words "between employers and workmen" in ibid., s. 3; and see the similar definition of a trade dispute in the National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 107 (1). In Quinn v. Leathem, [1901] A. C. 495, it had been held (see particularly ibid., at pp. 511, 528, 536, 541) that where a union called out the men of L., an employer, because he employed non-union men (though he had offered to pay all fines etc. due from his men and asked that they should be admitted to the union) thereby causing a breach of contract by one of the men so employed, and further threatened to call out the men employed by M., a customer of L., unless he withdrew his custom, thereby causing him to withdraw his custom but without breach of contract, these acts were not done in "contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute between employers and workmen," because L. had no quarrel with his men, and there was no trade dispute in the case of M.; compare ibid., per Lord LINLEY, at p. 541 ("I am not at present prepared to say that the officers of a trade union who create strife by calling out members of the union working for an employer with whom none of them have any dispute can invoke the benefit of this section [Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 86), s. 3], even on an indictment for conspiracy"). Apparently, therefore, where an act was done causing damage to A., the protection afforded to the doers by the existence of a trade dispute only came into operation if A. had a dispute with the men in his own 1216. The dispute must be something fairly definite and of real substance, not a mere personal quarrel or a grumbling or an agitation (b). For an act to be done in contemplation or furtherance of a dispute, the dispute must be imminent, and the act must be done in expectation of and with a view to it, or it must be already existing and the act must be done in support of one of the parties to it (c).

SECT. 8.
Meaning of
"Trade Dispute."
Requisites.

Workmen must be a party to it on each side, or workmen on one side and an employer on the other (d). There is no trade dispute where all that happens is that an intruder intervening as a mere mischief-maker, actuated by personal, sectarian, or political motives, stirs up strife which was previously not thought of by any of the employers or workmen concerned, and the dispute only exists in the mind of such intruder as a possible result of his intervention (e).

employment; whereas under the Trade Disputes Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 47), it comes into operation where another body of workmen have a dispute with the workmen in his employment, or where a body of workmen not in his employment have a dispute with another body of workmen not in his employment, or with their own employer, or with the employer of such other body; see Dallimore v. Williams and Jesson (1912), 29 T. L. R. 67, C. A., where it was held a misdirection to say that a trade dispute meant a dispute between an employer and his men or between the men; and see the Report of the Royal Commission on Trade Disputes, 1906 [Cd. 2825], p. 15.

(b) Conway v. Wade, [1909] A. C. 506, per Lord LOREBURN, L.C., at p. 510. For the facts on which it was found that there was no trade dispute, see note (r), p. 653, ante.

(c) Conway v. Wade, supra, per Lord LOREBURN, L.C., at p. 512, and per Lord SHAW OF DUNFERMLINE, at p. 522. In Vacher & Sons, Ltd. v. London Society of Compositors, [1912] 3 K. B. 547, C. A., VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., at p. 556, was of opinion that there was a trade dispute within the words of Lord LOREBURN, L.C., in Conway v. Wade, supra, where a union had circulated among customers of the plaintiffs a "fair list" in which the plaintiff's name was not included, with a request that they should employ only the persons mentioned in the list, and had written to one such customer stating that the plaintiffs "certainly cannot be recognised as conforming to trade union principles," and had threatened to withdraw their political support from such customer (a political association) unless it ceased to employ the plaintiffs. This was, however, unnecessary to the decision of the case, and a doubt was expressed upon it in S. C., [1913] A. C. 107, per Lord HALDANE, L.C., at p. 116, though the doubt was, apparently, only as to whether such a conclusion could be arrived at on the facts as stated in the statement of claim without hearing evidence on the point; see also Gaskell v. Lancashire and Cheshire Miners' Federation (1912), 28 T. L. R. 518, C. A.; Scrutton, Ltd. v. Lewis (1913), Times, 16th January, C. A.

(d) Conway v. Wade, supra, where Lord ATKINSON, at pp. 517, 518, seemed of the opinion that a disagreement between two single workmen might constitute a "trade dispute," but Lord SHAW OF DUNFERMLINE, at pp. 520, 521, said: "I cannot see my way to hold that 'trade dispute' necessarily includes accordingly every case of personal difference between any one workman and one or more of his fellows. It is true that after a certain stage even such a dispute, although originally grounded, it may be, upon personal animosity, may come to be a subject in which sides are taken, and may develop into a situation of a general aspect containing the characteristics of a trade dispute; but until it reaches that stage I cannot hold that a trade dispute necessarily exists."

(e) Ibid., per Lord LOREBURN, L.C., at p. 512, per Lord ATKINSON, at pp. 517, 518, and per Lord SHAW OF DUNFERMLINE, at p. 522.

SECT. 8. It is not, however, necessarily the case that the act protected, because done in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute, must be an act of one of the parties to the dispute (f).
Meaning of "Trade Dispute."
 Functions of jury. 1217. The question whether there was a trade dispute or not is one of fact for the jury (g).

SECT. 9.—Rights of Action and Procedure.

Trade union. 1218. Save in the case hereinafter stated, a registered trade union may sue and be sued in its registered name (h), and a union, registered or unregistered, may sue or be sued in a representative action if the parties are by their position fairly representative of the union (i).

Portsmouth "A" Branch of the Ship Constructive etc. Association* (1912), 28 T. L. R. 372, 373, 374).

(i) Taff Vale Railway v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, supra, per Lord MACNAGHTEN, at p. 438; and per Lord LINDLEY, at p. 433; Parr v. Lancashire and Cheshire Miners' Federation, [1913] 1 Ch. 366, 375 (where the president, vice-president, treasurer and secretary were held to be sufficiently representative and the committee and trustees were not essential). In Temperton v. Russell, [1893] 1 Q. B. 435, C. A., officers and members of several unions were sued in tort in their representative capacity, but the words indicating such capacity were struck out on the ground that the words of R. S. C., Ord. 16, r. 9, "having the same interest in one cause or matter," only extended to persons having or claiming some beneficial or proprietary interest. In Wood v. McCarthy, [1893] 1 Q. B. 775, the right to a benefit was held to be such an interest, so that two members of a union, sued for a benefit (assuming that such an action was maintainable at all; as to which see p. 616, ante), could be authorised against their will to defend on behalf of all the members. But in Bedford (Duke) v. Ellis, [1901] A. C. 1, the ratio decidendi of Temperton v. Russell, supra, was disapproved, and it was held that for a person to sue in a representative character it is enough that he has a common interest with those he represents; though the decision in Temperton v. Russell, supra, was supported on the ground that the defendants were not in fact representative; and see Taff Vale Railway v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, supra, at p. 439; Parr v. Lancashire and Cheshire Miners' Federation, supra. In Charnock v. Court, [1899] 2 Ch. 35, three members of a masters' union sued on behalf of themselves and all other members; but by agreement all the members were subsequently made plaintiffs, and some, who had been added without authority, were made defendants; see Walters v. Green, [1899] 2 Ch. 696, 703, n. Apparently, a branch secretary is not a person in a representative capacity (Thomas v. Portsmouth "A" Branch of the Ship Constructive etc. Association, supra, at pp. 373, 374). As to representative actions generally, see Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), ss. 16, 23—25; R. S. C., Ord. 16, r. 9; and titles PARTNERSHIP, Vol. XXII., p. 67; PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE, Vol. XXIII., pp. 103, 104.

1219. The trustees of a registered trade union or any other officer of such union authorised by its rules to do so may bring or defend, or cause to be brought or defended, any action or prosecution touching or concerning the property, right, or claim to property of the union, and must and may in all cases concerning the real or personal property of the union sue and be sued in their proper names without other description than the title of their office (k).

SECT. 9.
Rights of Procedure.

Trustees and officers.

No such action or prosecution is discontinued or abated by the death or removal from office of such persons or any of them, but it must and may be proceeded in by their successor or successors, and such successors pay or receive the like costs as if the action or prosecution had been commenced in their names, for the benefit of or to be reimbursed from the funds of the union (l).

The liability of such trustees to be sued in respect of the property of the union is apparently not confined to a case where specific property is in question, but extends to cases where the assets of the union are threatened by a claim for damages; and trustees so sued are entitled to be indemnified out of the funds of the union (m).

1220. No action lies against a trade union or any branch of a union, whether of workmen or masters, or against any members or officials thereof on behalf of themselves and all other members of the union or branch, in respect of any tortious act alleged to have been committed by or on behalf of the union or branch (n), and the liability of the trustees to be sued does not

(k) Trade Union Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 31), s. 9. An official of a union may sue the trustees for his salary (Curle v. Lester (1893), 9 T. L. R. 480); and, apparently, new trustees may maintain an action to recover the funds from former trustees; see Cope v. Crossingham, [1909] 2 Ch. 148, C. A., per COZENS-HARDY, M.R., at p. 159; but it is otherwise when trustees seek to recover funds from the trustees of a branch (ibid.; and see note (h), p. 619, ante).

(l) Trade Union Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 31), s. 9. The summons to such trustee or other officer may be served by leaving it at the registered office of the union (ibid.). As to service of summons generally, see title PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE, Vol. XXIII., pp. 114 et seq.

(m) Linaker v. Pilcher (1901), 70 L. J. (K. B.) 396 (a claim for damages for libel in a paper owned by the society and registered in the name of the trustees); but compare Taff Vale Railway v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, [1901] A. C. 426, per FARWELL, J., at p. 431 ("Sections 8 and 9 of the Act of 1871 [Trade Union Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 31)] expressly provide for actions in respect of property being brought by and against the trustees and this express intention impliedly excludes such trustees from being sued in tort"); Vacher & Sons, Ltd. v. London Society of Compositors, [1912] 3 K. B. 547, C. A., per FARWELL, L.J., at p. 560. As to the right of the trustees to be indemnified, see ibid.

(n) Trade Disputes Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 47), s. 4 (1); as to branches, see ibid., s. 5 (2). Ibid., s. 4 (1), was enacted for the purpose of modifying the decision in Taff Vale Railway v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, supra, which was that (i.) a registered union may be sued in its registered name in respect of a tort committed by its agents; this, therefore, is no longer the law if it is a case of a tort alleged to have been committed by or on behalf of the union; (ii.) a trade union, registered or unregistered, may be sued in a representative action if the persons selected as defendants are by their position fairly representative of the union, as, for instance, the executive committee and the trustees (see note (i), p. 664, ante); this also is in the like case no longer the law; (iii.) a trade union is responsible for unlawful acts committed by men acting as agents of the union in furtherance of a strike sanctioned by the authorised officers of the union; as to this, an action no longer lies against the union or any officials or members in a representative capacity if the acts, being tortious, are alleged to have been committed by or on behalf of the union; (iv.) the trustees may be joined and an order made against them for payment of damages and costs out of the property of the union (Taff Vale Railway v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, [1901] A. C. 426, per Lord LINDLEY, at p. 443); this is no longer the law where the claim is in respect of a tortious act committed by or on behalf of a union in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute; see note (o), infra; Vacher & Sons, Ltd. v. London Society of Compositors, [1913] A. C. 107, per Lord HALDANE, L.C., at p. 113, and per Lord ATKINSON, at p. 120. The provision is not retrospective, and afforded no defence to an action already commenced (Smithies v. National Association of Operative Plasterers, [1909] 1 K. B. 310, C. A.; compare Russell & Co. v. United Society of Boilermakers (1907), 15 Scots Law Times, 118). The provision does not merely provide a defence to be pleaded, but forbids the court to entertain the action; and under it a statement of claim may be struck out without waiting till trial (Vacher & Sons, Ltd. v. London Society of Compositors, supra); and the court must take cognisance of the Act though it is not pleaded (ibid., per Lord SHAW OF DUNFERMLINE, at p. 126, and per Lord MOUTON, at p. 127). The question of the liability of a trade union to be sued in its registered name had been touched upon in Pink v. Federation of Trades and Labour Unions (1892), 8 T. L. R. 216, 711, where an injunction was granted against the union, the objection being apparently not seriously pressed, and in Lyons (J.) & Sons v. Wilkins, [1896] 1 Ch. 811, C. A., where the society were originally joined as defendants, but struck out on motion; see Lyons (J.) & Sons v. Wilkins, [1899] 1 Ch. 255, 259, C. A. It is to be noted that an action against a union in its registered name and a representative action against a union are prohibited only in the case of a tortious act "alleged to have been committed"; quære, therefore, whether the provision prohibits such an action for an injunction against an act threatened but not yet committed. In general the right to an injunction depends upon the legal right to sue; compare De Francesco v. Barnum (1889), 43 Ch. D. 165, per CHITTY, J., at p. 172; White v. Mellin, [1895] A. C. 154, 163, 167, 170; and see title INJUNCTION, Vol. XVII., pp. 206 et seq. But, apparently, the provision does not make the tortious act any the less illegal, and it is probable that the prohibition of an action would be strictly confined within the words in which it is expressed. It seems possible, therefore, that an injunction may be obtained against the application of the funds of a union to assist the future commission of a tort; but see, contra, Vacher & Sons, Ltd. v. London Society of Compositors, [1912] 3 K. B. 547, C. A., per FARWELL, L.J., at p. 559. Quære whether the provision prohibits an action against an individual for conspiring with a union; compare R. v. Duguid (1906), 75 L. J. (K. B.) 470. It does not prohibit an action for an injunction to restrain the misapplication of the funds or the expulsion of a member (Parr v. Lancashire and Cheshire Miners' Federation, [1913] 1 Ch. 366).

(o) Trade Disputes Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 47), s. 4 (2); and see note (n), p. 665, ante. In all other respects it seems that the liability of the trustees to be sued under the Trade Union Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 31), s. 9, remains unaffected; and probably Linaker v. Pilcher (1901), 70 L. J. (K. B.) 396, is still the law in all cases where no trade dispute is in question; see Vacher & Sons, Ltd. v. London Society of Compositors, supra, at p. 115, where Lord HALDANE, L.C., pointed out the distinction between the union and its trustees, and said that Parliament appeared to have desired to preserve the liability of the trustees even in the case of tortious acts committed by the union, subject to their exemption when the act was committed in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute; see Vacher & Sons, Ltd. v. London Society of Compositors, [1913] A. C. 107, per Lord ATKINSON, at p. 125, and per Lord MACNAGHTEN, at p. 119; S. C., [1912] 3 K. B. 547, per KENNEDY, L.J., at p. 566; compare Rickards v. Bartram (1908), 25 T. L. R. 181, in so far as it decided that an action for libel lay against the trustees.

The prohibition of an action against the union applies whether a trade dispute exists or is in contemplation or not (p).

An official sued in his individual capacity is not protected even though he acted on behalf of the union (q).

1221. A number of plaintiffs claiming to have suffered damage from acts of watching and besetting may be joined in one action (r), and a number of defendants can properly be joined against whom it is alleged that they committed a series of acts of watching and besetting, such acts having been jointly committed, and judgment may be recovered against such only as are proved to have committed the acts (s).

(p) Vacher & Sons, Ltd. v. London Society of Compositors, supra (where Lord HALDANE, L.C., and Lord MACNAGHTEN laid down broadly the proposition that the words of the Trade Disputes Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 47), s. 4 (1), were to be taken in their literal meaning, and were not in any way qualified by the words referring to a trade dispute in other provisions of the Act, or by anything in ibid., s. 4 (2)). In S. C., [1912] 3 K. B. 547, C. A., it was said that the words "trade union" must be read as meaning "trade union as such," and that the provision did not protect a union in respect of a tortious act which was entirely outside of its sphere of operations as a trade union; see ibid., per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., at p. 555 ("If, for example, a trade union conducted a newspaper in which it criticised a book having no relation to trade unions, and in the course of the criticism defamed the author of the book, the Legislature cannot have intended that no action for libel should be entertained against the trade union or its officials"). The same suggestion was made by FARWELL, L.J., in his dissenting judgment (ibid., at pp. 558–560), but there is nothing to support it in the judgment of KENNEDY, L.J. (ibid., at p. 562), or in the judgments in the House of Lords (Vacher & Sons, Ltd. v. London Society of Compositors, [1913] A. C. 107), nor does it seem necessary even according to the general view of the justice of the case taken by VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., and FARWELL, L.J., if, as appears probable, the trustees of the union remain liable for torts not committed in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute. It is to be noted, however, that FARWELL, L.J. (Vacher & Sons, Ltd. v. London Society of Compositors, [1912] 3 K. B. 547, at p. 560), was of the opinion that the liability of the trustees did not extend to cases of libel; compare Rickards v. Bartram (1908), 25 T. L. R. 181; but see Bussy v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants (1908), 24 T. L. R. 437.

Where the men watched and beset and induced to refrain from entering into employment are under contract to work for such firm in an employers' association as the association may decide or as a particular firm may decide, and at the time of the watching and besetting no such firm has been specified, the loss of the chance of employing a man is damage sufficient to enable an individual employer to sue (t).

Affidavit of documents.

1222. In an action for damages for conspiracy to induce workmen to break their contracts it is no objection to the making of an order for an affidavit of documents by the defendant that the documents may tend to incriminate him (u).

Statute not pleaded.

1223. It appears that in a High Court action the Trade Disputes Act, 1906 (a), may be relied on by way of defence without pleading it, but it is advisable to plead the Act where it applies (b).

SECT. 10.—Relation of Trade Unions to Companies and Other Societies.

Friendly

societies;
companies.

1224. Trade unions are not subject to the provisions (c) of the Friendly Societies Acts (d) (with the exception hereafter stated (e)), the Industrial and Provident Societies Acts (f), or the Companies (consolidation) Act, 1908 (g), and the registration of a union under any of these Acts is void (h).

(g) 8 Edw. 7, c. 69, s. 294. There is no power under this Act to wind up a trade union; see title COMPANIES, Vol. V., pp. 46, 394. Apparently, however, an unregistered trade union which is an assurance company may be wound up in accordance with the provisions of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 69); see Assurance Companies Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 49), s. 15; and p. 669, post. Registration as a company is not conclusive that the association is rightly registered (British Association of Glass-Bottle Manufacturers, Ltd. v. Nettlefold (1911), 27 T. L. R. 527); and the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 69), s. 294, is merely declaratory (British Association of Glass-Bottle Manufacturers, Ltd. v. Nettlefold, supra. at p. 529).

Jenkinson & Co.* (1903), 5 F. (Ct. of Sess.) 1159; British Association of Glass-Bottle Manufacturers, Ltd. v. Nettlefold, supra.

A trade union, registered or unregistered, which insures or pays money on the death of a child under ten years of age is, however, deemed to be within the provisions of the Friendly Societies Act, 1896 (i), relating to payments on the death of children (j).

SECT. 10.
Relation of Trade Unions to Companies and Other Societies.

1225. A registered trade union or a branch of a registered trade union may contribute to the funds and take part by delegates or otherwise in the government of a medical society (k) as provided in the rules of the union or branch without becoming a branch of such medical society (l), and may not withdraw from contributing to the funds of such medical society except on three months' notice and payment of all contributions accrued or accruing due to the expiration of the notice (m).

Medical societies.

1226. A registered trade union is not an "assurance company" within the Assurance Companies Act, 1909 (n), but an unregistered trade union is, if it carries on life, fire, accident, or employers' liability business, or bond investment business, as defined in the Act (o), and it may be wound up by order of the court in accordance with the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (p), but only on a petition of ten or more policy-holders owning policies of an aggregate value of not less than £10,000, which may only be presented by

By the Trade Union Act Amendment Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 22), s. 7, the Life Assurance Companies Acts did not apply to trade unions, but this provision was repealed by the Assurance Companies Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 49), s. 37, Sched. IX. As to the duties and liabilities of assurance companies under the Act, see title COMPANIES, Vol. V., pp. 620 et seq. It is to be noted, however, that the definition of life assurance does not include superannuation allowances and annuities payable out of any fund applicable solely to the relief and maintenance of persons engaged or who have been engaged in any particular profession, trade or employment, or of the dependants of such persons (Assurance Companies Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 49), s. 29); and a policy is not deemed to be a policy of fire insurance by reason only that loss by fire is one of the various risks covered (ibid., s. 28 (3)); see title COMPANIES, Vol. V., p. 622.

Relation of Trade Unions to Companies and Other Societies. The Assurance Companies Act, 1909 (r), however, does not apply where the trade union carries on employers' liability insurance business and is an association of employers which satisfies the Board of Trade that it is carrying on or about to carry on business wholly or mainly for the purpose of the mutual insurance of its members against liability to pay compensation or damages to workmen employed by them, either alone or in conjunction with insurance against any other risk incident to their trade or industry, and an unregistered trade union originally established more than twenty years before the 1st July, 1910 (s), may be exempted by the Board of Trade from the Act in the same manner as a registered union (t).

National health insurance.

Unemployment insurance.

1227. Any registered trade union and any unregistered trade union whose constitution is of the prescribed character, which complies with certain requirements, may become an approved society for the purposes of national health insurance (u).

With regard to unemployment insurance, the Board of Trade has power, on the application of any trade union of workmen (a) the rules of which provide for payments to its members, being workmen in an insured trade (b) or any class thereof, whilst unemployed, to make an arrangement with such union that, in lieu of the payment of unemployment benefit to workmen who prove that they are members of the union, there shall be repaid periodically to the union out of the unemployment fund (c) such sum as appears to be, as nearly as may be, equivalent to the aggregate amount which such workmen would have received during that period by way of unemployment benefit if no such arrangement had been made, but in no case exceeding three-fourths of the amount of the payments made during that period by the union to such workmen while unemployed (d).

Part VIII.—Slander of Title and Trade Libel.

SECT. 1.—In General.

1228. Trade libel is a term frequently though loosely applied to the action on the case (i) which arises from words which disparage a person's property without being defamatory of the person himself (k). Action on the case.

The action is analogous to the action of slander of title, and there is no hard and fast line between the two (l).

members to the union, and the rates of such subscriptions may be reduced accordingly (National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 105 (2)).

(e) Ibid., s. 106 (1), which in this case speaks of "any association of persons not trading for profit."

(f) See note (b), p. 670, ante.

(g) Not out of the unemployment fund, as in the preceding case; see the text, supra.

(h) National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 106 (1). No repayment under this provision may be made in respect of any period before the expiration of six months from the 15th July, 1912, the date of the commencement of the Act (ibid., s. 106 (2)); see, further, title WORK AND LABOUR.

Wright, Crossley & Co.* (1900), 18 R. P. C. 95, H. L., where the words were a notice to the trade of intention to proceed against persons selling goods under certain labels, Lord DAVEY, at p. 99, described the action as "slander of title," and Lord JAMES OF HEREFORD, at p. 101, described it as "trade libel," as did Lord ROBERTSON, at p. 103. In Halsey v. Brotherhood (1881), 19 Ch. D. 386, C. A., a case of threats of proceedings by a person claiming a patent, Lord COLERIDGE, C.J.,

SECT. 2.
Slander of Title.

SECT. 2.—Slander of Title.

SUB-SECT. 1.—In General.

When action lies.

1229. The action of slander of title lies against any person who, whether orally or in writing (m), asserts falsely (n) and with actual malice, or in circumstances where malice will be implied (o), that an owner of property, real or personal (p), has no title to it (q), or no right to deal with it (r), if, but only if, such assertion causes special damage (s).

at p. 386, treated the action as slander of title, while BAGGALLAY, L.J., at p. 389, apparently confined the term "slander of title" to cases of real estate; see, further, title TORT, p. 474, ante; as to threats by a patentee, generally, see title PATENTS AND INVENTIONS, Vol. XXII., p. 227; and compare title LIBEL AND SLANDER, Vol. XVIII., p. 677.

(m) Malachy v. Soper (1836), 3 Bing. (N. C.) 371, 385, 386.

(p) Though it has been suggested that the term "slander of title" applies only to cases of real estate (Halsey v. Brotherhood (1881), 19 Ch. D. 386, 389, C. A.), it seems clear that it may be applied even in its strictest sense to cases of personal property (Wren v. Weild (1869), L. R. 4 Q. B. 730, 734; Baker v. Piper (1886), 2 T. L. R. 733); and purely personal property was in question in Newman v. Zachary (1846), Aleyn, 3; Rowe v. Roach (1813), 1 M. & S. 304; Green v. Button (1835), 2 Cr. M. & R. 707; Gutsole v. Mathers (1836), 1 M. & W. 495; Carr v. Duckett (1860), 5 H. & N. 783; Steward v. Young (1870), L. R. 5 C. P. 122. As to leaseholds, see Smith v. Spooner (1810), 3 Taunt. 246; Millman v. Pratt (1824), 2 B. & C. 486; Watson v. Reynolds (1826), Mood. & M. 1. It is immaterial whether the plaintiff's title is in possession or in reversion or remainder (Bliss v. Stafford (1573), Owen, 37; Vaughan v. Ellis (1608), Cro. Jac. 213; Baker v. Piper, supra). If a plaintiff alleges a right to sell property and that he put such property up for sale, it is not sufficient to prove that he put up for sale a lease of the property; for the right to lease may be doubtful, and the defendant ought to have an opportunity of raising the question of the validity of the proposed lease (Millman v. Pratt, supra). But the point there raised would now be met by amendment on terms.

(q) The slander must be such as goes to defeat the plaintiff's title (Gane v. Golding (1649), Sty. 169, 176; Hargrave v. Le Breton (1769), 4 Burr. 2422, 2423); or causes another to disturb the plaintiff's possession (Newman v. Zachary, supra); or to withhold property to which the plaintiff is entitled (Green v. Button, supra).

(r) Manning v. Avery (1673), 3 Keb. 153 (allegation that the plaintiff had mortgaged all his land); Green v. Button, supra; Pater v. Baker (1847), 3 C. B. 831.

(s) Law v. Harwood (1628), Cro. Car. 140 (no such action lies without showing "special prejudice . . . without showing particularly the cause of loss . . . as that he could not let or sell the said lands"); Gane v. Golding, supra, at p. 176 ("a particular damage"; "a special damage"); Hargrave v. Le Breton, supra; Green v. Button, supra; Gutsole v. Mathers, supra; Malachy v. Soper, supra, at p. 386; Pater v. Baker, supra; Brook v. Rowl (1849), 19 L. J. (EX.) 114; Wren v. Weild, supra; Royal Baking Powder Co. v. Wright, Crossley & Co. (1900), 18 R. P. There is no slander of title in a man giving his own house a name identical with that of his neighbour's house, and thereby causing annoyance and inconvenience to his neighbour (Day v. Brownrigg (1878), 10 Ch. D. 294, C. A. (where, in addition to there being no violation of legal right, there was no allegation of malice

The words complained of must be set out verbatim as in the case of libel and slander (t).

SECT. 2.
Slander of Title.

§ 1. SUB-SECT. 2.—Damage.

1230. The particularity required in the allegation of special damage depends upon the circumstances: for instance, a plaintiff who has lost an intended sale cannot be expected to set out the names of persons who would have been prepared to purchase (a). Special damage.

It is sufficient evidence of such damage that the person to whom the words were spoken wrongfully deprived the plaintiff of his property, and it is no answer to say that the only remedy is against such person (b).

1231. According to the old cases it was necessary in proof of special damage to show that before the words were spoken there had been a communication or colloquium between the plaintiff and some person with regard to a sale of, or other dealing with, the property, and that by reason of the words such sale or dealing went off (c), and it was not enough that the plaintiff merely intended to sell or deal with the property (d), or merely had an interest therein (e). Colloquium.

These cases, however, may possibly have afforded merely instances of the special damage necessary (f), though it is necessary that there shall be at the least an express allegation of some particular damage (g).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Malice.

1232. Malice must be proved by the plaintiff and will not be inferred (h). Necessity for proof.

or intent to injure)); compare Street v. Union Bank of Spain and England (1885), 30 Ch. D. 156 (where the adoption by the defendants of a telephone address identical with the name by which the plaintiffs were known was held to give no cause of action, even on proof of special damage, there being no intent to injure or representation that the defendants were carrying on the plaintiff's business).

(g) Ibid., at p. 384 (where it was held not sufficient to allege that the plaintiff was injured in his rights and the shares held by him were depreciated in value and that he had been hindered from selling them); apparently, as in slander not actionable per se, the plaintiff can only recover such damages as he alleges and proves; see title LIBEL AND SLANDER, Vol. XVIII., pp. 610, 719.

(h) Smith v. Spooner (1810), 3 Taunt. 246. In Watson v. Reynolds (1826), Mood. & M. 1, evidence of the truth of the statements was admitted

SECT. 2.
Slander of Title.

Malice in this case means a bad motive (i), and it is no evidence of malice if all that is shown is that the defendant wrote or spoke honestly, even though wrongly, in defence of a real or supposed title to the property (k), or in the honest execution of a real or supposed duty (l).

In judging of the bona fides of the defendant, the question is not whether his belief was founded on such grounds as would persuade a man of sound sense and business knowledge, but whether in all the circumstances he acted bona fide considering his character and situation, his prejudices and passions, for it is important that a person interested in the property should have liberty to put forward his objections to the title (m) and that a purchaser should be protected from the possibility of buying property which may involve him in a lawsuit (n).

When malice inferred.

1233. Want of reasonable and probable cause may, but does not necessarily, lead to the inference of malice (o); but it is clearly to disprove malice even though no justification had been pleaded: compare title LIBEL AND SLANDER, Vol. XVIII., p. 719.

(i) Pater v. Baker (1847), 3 C. B. 831, 868, 869, per MAULE, J.; Brook v. Rawl (1849), 19 L. J. (EX.) 114, per PARKE, B., at p. 115 (to benefit a friend who was a bidder, or to obtain the premises for himself at a lower price, or otherwise to injure the plaintiff); see title TORT, p. 467, ante; as to the distinction between malice implied by law and express or actual malice, see title LIBEL AND SLANDER, Vol. XVIII., pp. 608, 609, 722. Apparently, if a statement is partly bona fide and partly malâ fide and causes injury, the person injured is not entitled to recover damages unless he can trace the injury to that part of the statement which is malâ fide (Brook v. Rawl, supra).

Royden* (1873), L. R. 17 Eq. 190 (where the defendants, the officials of an underwriters' association which kept a register of vessels, placed opposite to the name of the plaintiffs' vessel the words "class suspended," because the plaintiffs had made alterations of which the defendants bona fide disapproved: held, that the defendants were justified, in the absence of any proof of malice).

Perrin* (1862), 3 F. & F. 179 (where the jury were asked to say (i.) whether the belief of the defendant was genuine, and (ii.) whether, if genuine, it was such as a reasonable man might hold; but in that case the defendant had alleged the existence of a will which might throw doubt upon the plaintiff's title after he had been definitely told that no will existed and more than a year had elapsed since the death of the deceased); compare Watson v. Reynolds, supra, per LITTLEDALE, J.; Green v. Button (1835), 2 Cr. M. & R. 707, per PARKE, B., at p. 715 (action held maintainable "though the defendant makes a claim of right, if it be

But the mere fact that the plaintiff has told the defendant, who claims under a bill of sale, that the bill is invalid is not evidence of malice on the defendant's part (Steward v. Young (1870), L. R. 5 C. P. 122); and it is no evidence of malice that an officer acting under complicated Acts of Parliament makes a mistake as to the law (Pater v. Baker (1847), 3 C. B. 831), or that, having a proper motive, and being bound to select some person against whom to take action, he selects the plaintiff as the most influential person concerned (ibid., per WILDE, C.J., at p. 866).

(q) Mildmay's Case, supra, at p. 177 a; Pennyman v. Rabanks (1595), Cro. Eliz. 427; Northumberland (Earl) v. Byrt (1607), Cro. Jac. 163; Pitt v. Donovan (1813), 1 M. & S. 639, 646 (where the defendant had an interest in that he was the husband of a woman to whom the property might come); Rowe v. Roach (1813), 1 M. & S. 304 (plea held bad as not showing any connexion between the defendant and the persons who had an interest); and see Johnson v. Smith (1584), Moore (K. B.), 187.

(r) Hargrave v. Le Breton (1769), 4 Burr. 2422 (where a slight and immaterial variation from his instructions was held not to show malice); Watson v. Reynolds (1826), Mood. & M. 1; and see Johnson v. Smith, supra. Apparently, if the agent, exceeding his instructions, makes a statement which is unauthorised and untrue, the question is, would the principal have acted honestly if he had made that statement, and, if so, the agent is also protected (Watson v. Reynolds, supra).

(s) As to this point, see generally, title LIBEL AND SLANDER, Vol. XVIII., pp. 610 et seq., 618, 628, 629, and the cases there referred to; see also Burnet v. Wells (1700), 12 Mod. Rep. 420 (the statement "he has nothing but rotten goods in his shop" is actionable (apparently, as a libel or slander), whereas the statement "he has rotten goods" would not be actionable); Ingram v. Lawson (1840), 6 Bing. (N. C.) 212 (it is libellous to say of a man that the ship of which he is the captain was in such a state as to require additional hands to keep her afloat and that she was sold to the Jews to carry convicts); S. C., as reported in L. J. (C. P.) 145, per COLTMAN, J., at p. 147 ("The case is as if it were said of an innkeeper that his wine was poison; or of a tea dealer that his teas were turned from black to green by being prepared on copper and that they would kill those by whom they were consumed"); Evans v. Harlow (1844), 5 Q. saying that the plaintiff's machines wasted tallow, were held not libellous, as implying no imputation of fraud or misrepresentation; the case was not decided merely on the absence of special damage; see White v. Mellin, [1895] A. C. 154, per Lord HERSCHELL, L.C., at p. 164; Jenner v. A'Beckett (1871), L. R. 7 Q. B. 11 (words describing the title of plaintiff's goods as "very silly, very slangy, and very vulgar, and which has been forced upon the public ad nauseam," held capable of being a libel); Thorley's Cattle Food Co. v. Massam (1880), 14 Ch. D. 763, C. A.; S. C., on motion (1877), 6 Ch. D. 582 (words warning customers against a company "in seeking to foist upon the public an article which they pretend is the same as that manufactured" by the plaintiff's predecessor in title, held a libel). In Clark v. Freeman (1848), 11 Beav. 112, advertisements by the defendants of pills called "Sir James Clarke's Consumption Pills" (using, slightly altered, the name of the plaintiff, who was a well-known specialist on consumption) were discussed on the basis that they were a libel in the strict sense; and see Dockrell v. Dougall (1899), 80 L. T. 556, C. A.; and title LIBEL AND SLANDER, Vol. XVIII., p. 632. The question in the case of Clark v. Freeman, supra, was the power of the Court of Chancery to grant injunctions in libel, as to which see Springhead Spinning Co. v. Riley (1868), L. R. 6 Eq. 551, 561; Dixon v. Holden (1869), L. Johnston* (1816), 2 Mer. 29 (injunction granted against the publication under the plaintiff's name of poems which were not by the plaintiff, the defendant being unable to swear that they were by the plaintiff); Routh v. Webster (1847), 10 Beav. 561 (injunction granted against placing the plaintiff's name against his will on a list of trustees of a company and thus exposing him to possible liability); Lee v. Gibbings (1892), 67 L. T. 263; and title LIBEL AND SLANDER, Vol. XVIII., p. 736. As to acts which are libellous or analogous thereto, see Plunket v. Gilmore (1724), Fortes. Rep. 211 (procuring a person to come to the plaintiff's house dressed as a woman and causing a mob to cry out "a bawdy-house" and to break windows); and title LIBEL AND SLANDER, Vol. XVIII., p. 606, note (g). As to a case where circulars falsely representing that a business in the hands of a receiver and manager was at an end, and inviting customers to transfer their custom, was held a contempt of court, see Helmors v. Smith (2) (1886), 35 Ch. D. 449, C. A.; and title CONTEMPT OF COURT, ATTACHMENT, AND COMMITTAL, Vol. VII., pp. 281, 288. As to the right of a corporation to sue, see title LIBEL AND SLANDER, Vol. XVIII., pp. 612, 613. As to the functions of judge and jury respectively, see ibid., pp. 652 et seq. As to the question whether words of praise may be actionable if spoken maliciously in circumstances which give rise to special damage, see *Kelly v. (t) The burden lies upon the plaintiff to show that they are (Griffiths v. Benn (1911), 27 T. L. R. 346, C. A., per COZENS-HARDY, M.R., at p. 350); see title LIBEL AND SLANDER, Vol. XVIII., p. 630, note (n).

(a) Ratcliffe v. Evans, [1892] 2 Q. B. 524, 527, C. A.; and see p. 672, ante.

(b) On a motion for an interlocutory injunction the burden is upon the plaintiff to satisfy the court as to their untruth (Anderson v. Liebig's Extract of Meat Co., Ltd. (1881), 45 L. T. 757; Burnett v. Tak (1882), 45 L. T. 743). There is no decision as to the burden of proof on the trial of the action; but, apparently, the same rule would apply, for, the words being prima facie not actionable, no cause of action arises till their untruth, inter alia, is established; see Hatchard v. Mege (1887), 18 Q. B. D. 771, 775.

compared the plaintiff's oil with another to the disadvantage of the former, and the court, while admitting that an action might lie for a false and malicious disparagement of another's goods causing special damage, held that this had not been sufficiently alleged, for "it may be that all the falsehood consists in this, that the defendant has alleged what is true of the plaintiff's oil and what is false of that of some other man, by attributing to that other man's oil a character of superiority which it does not possess"; Western Counties Manure Co. v. Lawes Chemical Manure Co. (1874), L. R. 9 Exch. 218, distinguishing Young v. Macrae (1862), 3 B. & S. 264; Halsey v. Brotherhood (1881), 19 Ch. D. 386, C. A.; S. C. (1880), 15 Ch. L., per Lord DAVEY, at p. 99; Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co., Ltd. v. Maison Talbot (1903), 20 T. L. R. 88; Alcott v. Millar's Kurri and Jarrah Forests, Ltd. (1904), 21 T. L. R. 30, 31, C. A.; Lyne v. Nicholls (1906), 23 T. L. R. 86. In Riding v. Smith (1876), 1 Ex. D. 91, KELLY, C. B., at p. 93, said: "If a man states of another who is a trader earning his livelihood by dealing in articles of trade anything, be it what it may, the natural consequence of uttering which would be to injure the trade and prevent persons resorting to the place of business, and it so leads to loss of trade, it is actionable"; and in Thorley's Cattle Food Co. v. Massam (1880), 14 Ch. D. 763, C. A., MALINS, V.-C., at p. 774, treated this case as establishing the propositions that "you may not issue any advertisement calculated to injure a person in his business," and, at p. 780, that it is not necessary to prove damage if the thing is itself calculated to be injurious. In Thomas v. Williams (1880), 14 Ch. D. 864, where the words alleged that the plaintiffs' needles were spurious, a final injunction was granted without proof of special damage, on the ground that the libel was calculated to do serious injury, approving Riding v. Smith, supra, and citing Thorley's Cattle Food Co. v. Massam, supra, as showing that positive injury is not necessary if the libel is itself calculated to injure. But the words in Thorley's Cattle Food Co. v. Massam, supra, were held by the Court of Appeal to be libellous in the strict sense; the dicta of MALINS, V.-C., if they were intended to apply to words not libellous in themselves, seem clearly too wide, and Riding v. Smith, supra, is of doubtful authority; see Ratcliffe v. Evans, [1892] 2 Q. B. 524, 534, C. A. In White v. Mellin, supra, Lord WATSON, at p. 166, said, "the fact that the representations made by the defendant . . . might be calculated to disparage the food manufactured by the plaintiff and to interfere with its sale can afford no cause of action." As to the possibility that in certain cases an injunction may be granted before the damage has been caused, see p. 681, post: as to injunctions generally, see title INJUNCTION, Vol. XVII., pp. 197 et seq.; LIBEL AND SLANDER, Vol. XVIII., pp. 628, note (l), 629, 719; as to threats by patentees generally, see title PATENTS AND INVENTIONS, Vol. XXII., pp. 227, 228. A company may sue on words causing damage (Linotype Co., Ltd. v. British Empire Typesetting Machine Co., Ltd. (1899), 81 L. T. 331, 333, H. L.).

(c) *Ratcliffe v. intended by the defendant and be the direct and probable result of his words (f).

There is no damage on which a claim can be sustained if the loss merely arises because the plaintiff is prevented from doing something which he is not legally entitled to do (g).

1237. The damage must be alleged and proved with such certainty and particularity as are reasonable having regard to the circumstances; sometimes a general loss is the natural and direct result of the words, and particular instances of loss cannot from the nature of the case be specified (h).

business is sufficient; but see note (h), infra; Barrett v. Associated Newspapers, Ltd. (1907), 23 T. L. R. 666, C. A. (allegation that a house was haunted, but no evidence of special damage, the depreciation in the value of the house being due to previous allegations of a similar kind by others); see the cases on slander of title at pp. 672, 673, ante; and, as to special damage, see title LIBEL AND SLANDER, Vol. XVIII., pp. 620, note (i), 730 et seq. The plaintiff can only recover the special damage which he alleges and proves; see ibid., p. 719.

D. 91 (where a general loss of business was held to give a cause of action when the wife of the plaintiff, a trader, was charged with adultery; but as to this case, see note (d), p. 677, ante; Ratcliffe v. Evans, supra, at p. 534); Dicks v. Brooks (1879), 15 Ch. D. 22, C. A. (there must be a "sensible, appreciable damage"); Hatchard v. Mège (1887), 18 Q. B. D. 771 (allegation that the plaintiff was greatly injured in his trade held sufficient); and see Iveson v. Moore (1699), 1 Ld. Raym. 486, per GOULD, J., at p. 489 ("In actions upon the case where damages are only recoverable, a precise certainty of the damages is not necessary to be shown in the declaration"); Evans v. Harries (1856), 1 H. & N. 251, per MARTIN, B., at p. 254. In Evans v. Harlow (1844), 5 Q. B. 624, 633, it was said: "It is a caution against the goods . . . which is not actionable unless it were shown that the plaintiff by reason of the publication was prevented from selling his goods to a particular person"; but, apparently, this may be taken as an instance rather than a rule; see p. 672, ante. In Lyne v. Nicholls (1906), 23 T. L. R. 86, where the words reflected upon the circulation of the plaintiffs' newspaper, SWINFEN EADY, J., held that damage was not sufficiently shown by proving that the plaintiffs accepted lower rates from advertisers (who referred to the alleged circulation of the defendant's paper) than they thought the circulation warranted, as it was not shown that the said advertisers were old customers, and it therefore did not follow that the rates would in other circumstances have been higher. The plaintiffs also failed to show that the advertisement revenue had fallen off. In Alcott v. Millar's Karri and Jarrah Forests, Ltd. (1904), 91 L. T. 722, C. A., there was held to be sufficient evidence of special damage where the words were contained in a letter written to a road authority which was about to enter into a contract, and the plaintiff in consequence had to reduce his price and allow special terms, although a circular which might have contributed to that result was also before the authority, and there was a public agitation on the subject. In Dicks v. Brooks, supra, it was apparently not regarded as evidence of any sufficient damage that one customer, having bought goods from the plaintiff, returned them; see, generally, title LIBEL AND SLANDER, Vol. XVIII., p. 733.

SUB-SECT. 3.—Malice.

SECT. 3.

Trade Libel.Proof of malice.

1238. Malice is an essential element in the cause of action (i). There is no evidence of malice if all that is shown is that the defendant wrote or spoke honestly, even though wrongly, in defence of a real or supposed right or title to the property (k) or merely for the purpose of advancing the sale of his own goods (l) or in pursuance of a duty (m).

(i) Capital and Counties Bank v. Henty (1882), 7 App. Cas. 741, per Lord BLACKBURN, at p. 777; see the cases cited in note (d), p. 676, ante, and the cases on slander of title relating to this point, cited at pp. 673, 674, ante; as to malice generally, see titles LIBEL AND SLANDER, Vol. XVIII., pp. 608, 711 et seq.; TORT, p. 467, ante. The question whether the words were false and malicious is for the jury (Hatchard v. Mège (1887), 18 Q. B. D. 771, 775; Halsey v. Brotherhood (1881), 19 Ch. D. 386, C. A., per BAGGALLAY, L.J., at p. 389). In Western Counties Manure Co. v. Lawes Chemical Manure Co. (1874), L. R. 9 Exch. 218, BRANWELL, B., at p. 222, doubted whether "actual malice" was necessary, and regarded "maliciously" as possibly meaning "without reasonable cause calling for a statement by the defendants on the subject," or "without lawful occasion"; see ibid., per POLLOCK, B., at p. 223 ("I do not attach any special meaning to the word 'maliciously,' except so far as it must be taken with the words 'contriving and intending to injure the plaintiffs.' I think that deprives the plaintiffs of what I may call any legal occasion or opportunity on which they might use words of this kind"). See also Royal Baking Powder Co. v. Wright, Crossley & Co. (1900), 18 R. P. C. 95, H. L. (where Lord DAVEY, at p. 99, described maliciously as meaning "without just cause or excuse . . . the threat to sue must be shown to have been made for the purpose of injuring the plaintiffs and not for the bonâ fide protection of the defendants' rights and without any real intention to follow it up by action or other legal proceedings"); Halsey v. Brotherhood, supra, per BAGGALLAY, L.J., at p. 389 ("reasonable and provable cause" is necessary). But it is not essential that the defendant should actually follow up a threat by proceedings; the question is, was the threat made bonâ fide (S. C. (1880), 15 Ch. D. 514, per JESSEL, M.R., at pp. 517, 518, disapproving Rollins v. Hinks (1872), L. R. 13 Eq. 355, in so far as it decided that there was no presumption in favour of the validity of a patent); Azmann v. Lund (1874), L. R. 18 Eq. 330; as to threats by patentees, see, generally, title PATENTS AND INVENTIONS, Vol. XXII., pp. 227, 228.

(k) Halsey v. Brotherhood, supra, per Lord COLERIDGE, C.J., at p. 388: "there must be some evidence either from the nature of the statement itself or otherwise to satisfy the court or the jury that the statement was not only untrue, but was made malâ fide for the purpose of injuring the plaintiff and not in the bonâ fide defence of the defendants' own property"; Burnett v. Tak (1882), 45 L. T. 743; Capital and Counties Bank v. Henty, supra, per Lord BLACKBURN, at p. 777; Royal Baking Powder Co. v. Wright, Crossley & Co., supra, per Lord DAVEY, at p. 99; Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co., Ltd. v. Maison Talbot (1903), 20 T. L. R. 88; and see the cases on slander of title relating to this point, p. 674, ante. It does not matter whether the defendant's title be legal or equitable (Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co., Ltd. v. Maison Talbot, supra, at p. 90); and there is no distinction between the defence of a legal right under a patent and the defence of any other legal right (Halsey v. Brotherhood, supra, affirming S. C. (1880), 15 Ch. D. 514, per JESSEL, M.R., at p. 518); as to threats by patentees, see, generally, title PATENTS AND INVENTIONS, Vol. XXII., pp. 227, 228.

Puffa.

A mistake of law is no evidence of malice (n), but it is clearly malicious to publish the words knowing them to be untrue (o).

1239. It is not actionable for a trader to proclaim that his own goods are equal or superior to those of his rivals, even though the words be false and cause special damage (p), but it is otherwise when the words go beyond a mere puff and constitute definite untrue statements of fact about the goods of a rival (q).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Miscellaneous.

Devolution of cause of action.

1240. The cause of action survives to an executor or administrator (r), and passes to a trustee in bankruptcy (s).

(n) Dicks v. Brooks (1879), 15 Ch. D. 22, C. A., per BRAMWELL, L.J., at p. 39 (where it was suggested that the defendants, who complained that a printed pattern for wool work was an infringement of their copyright in a picture, might with impunity have warned the public that that particular kind of copy was a piracy, though the statement was wrong in law; whereas a statement that the defendants had the sole subsisting copyright might reasonably be taken as a wrong statement of fact that they had got such a right in the picture that any reproduction of it in any form was an infringement; but the plaintiff failed through absence of special damage; and it seems doubtful whether there is any substance in the above distinction); see also the cases on slander of title relating to this point, cited in note (p), p. 675, ante. As to mistake generally, see title MISTAKE, Vol. XXI., pp. 1 et seq.

(o) White v. Mellin, [1895] A.C. 154, per Lord HERSHELL, L.C., at p. 160; Halsey v. Brotherhood (1880), 15 Ch. D. 514, per JESSEL, M.R., at p. 518; and see the cases on slander of title relating to this point, cited at p. 675, ante.

(p) Evans v. Harlow (1844), 5 Q. B. 624; Young v. Macrae (1862), 3 B. & S. 264; White v. Mellin, supra; Hubbuck & Sons, Ltd. v. Wilkinson, Heywood and Clark, [1899] 1 Q. B. 86, C. A.; Alcott v. Millar's Karri and Jarrah Forests, Ltd. (1904), 91 L. T. 722, C. A.; and see Harman v. Delany (1731), 2 Stra. 898; Western Counties Manure Co. v. Lawes Chemical Manure Co. (1874), L. R. 9 Exch. 218, per BRAMWELL, B., at p. 221; Spalding Brothers v. Gamage (A. W.), Ltd., and Benetfink & Co., Ltd. (1913), 29 T. L. R. 541. But, apparently, the case may be otherwise where the parties are not rivals in trade (Hubbuck & Sons, Ltd. v. Wilkinson Heywood and Clark, supra, at p. 94); and see, generally, title LIBEL AND SLANDER, Vol. XVIII. pp. 627, 628.

(q) As, for instance, a statement that the circulation of the defendant's newspaper is twenty to one of that of the plaintiff's paper (Lyne v. Nicholls (1906), 23 T. L. R. 86; compare Heriot v. Stuart (1796), 1 Esp. 437); that the wood paving blocks of the plaintiff are "in a rotten condition" (Alcott v. Millar's Karri and Jarrah Forests, Ltd., supra, distinguishing Hubbuck & Sons, Ltd. v. Wilkinson, Heywood and Clark Ltd., supra); that the defendant's goods are the only genuine ones and the article manufactured by others is spurious (James v. James (1872), L. R. 13 Eq. 421); Young v. Macrae, supra (to compare the plaintiff's goods to those of another is not actionable, for the only falsehood therein may be in attributing superiority to the latter; but to make untrue disparaging statements about the plaintiff's goods is actionable if done with malice and causing special damage; see ibid., per WIGHTMAN, J., at p. 270 ("There is no statement in the alleged libel that the article sold or manufactured by the plaintiffs is a bad article; it is only said that it is inferior to that of someone else; and that is consistent with the plaintiffs' article being in itself a very good article"))).

(r) Hatchard v. Mege (1887), 18 Q. B. D. 771; see titles EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, Vol. XV. pp. 226, 227; LIBEL AND SLANDER, Vol. XVIII., p. 613.

1241. In general no injunction will be granted where no special damage is alleged or proved, for no injunction lies unless an actionable wrong is shown (t); but an exception may perhaps be made where the words are clearly false and malicious and are calculated and intended naturally, directly, and immediately to cause damage which is so highly probable as to be properly described as imminent (a).

But if the argument goes so far as to say that in a case where there is no mala fides whatever and no damages could under any possible circumstances be obtained the court will grant an injunction, all I can say is that I know of no authority whatever for that proposition"); see also Anderson v. Liebig's Extract of Meat Co., Ltd. (1881), 45 L. Part I.—Registered Trade Marks.

SECT. 1. Definitions.

SECT. 1.—Definitions.

"Mark."

1242. "Mark" includes a device, brand, heading, label, ticket, name, signature, word, letter, numeral, or any combination thereof (a).

"Trade mark."

"Trade mark" means a mark used or proposed to be used upon or in connexion with goods for the purpose of indicating that they are the goods of the proprietor of such trade mark by virtue of manufacture, selection, certification, dealing with or offering for sale (b).

"Registered trade mark."

"Registered trade mark" means a trade mark which is actually upon the register (c).

"Register."

"The register" means the register of trade marks kept at the Patent Office under the provisions of the Trade Marks Act, 1905 (d).

SECT. 2.—Nature of Property in Trade Marks.

Unregistered marks.

1243. Unregistered marks can only be directly protected by an action for infringement when they were used before the 13th August, 1875, and have been refused registration (e).

The owner of such mark may still bring an action for passing off (f).

Extent of right.

1244. Trade mark law protects the trader who has established a reputation from the unfair competition of other persons who might sell their goods in such a guise that the purchaser would think that they were his. Although the owner of a registered trade mark (g) has now a statutory monopoly, and it is no longer necessary for the proprietor of such a mark to show that the use by other persons of the mark has in fact prejudicially affected his trade(h), yet the registration of a trade mark may be terminated if the mark is not being used in trade (i), and such mark cannot be transferred apart from the goodwill in the trade or in the goods for which it registered (j).

Marks.

1245. The Board of Trade may permit a person or association undertaking the examination of any goods in respect of origin, material, manufacture, quality, accuracy or other characteristics, to register a trade mark which shall certify the result of such examination. Such marks are only transmissible or assignable by permission of the Board of Trade(k).

Standardisation

SECT. 3.—The Register of Trade Marks.

1246. A register is kept at the Patent Office(l) in which are entered all registered trade marks(m). All registers kept under former statutes(n) are incorporated with and deemed to form part of the register. The trade marks entered in such previous registers retain their date of registration, and their validity is, in general, to be tested by the statutory provisions in force at the date of their registration(o).

register.

1247. The marks for cotton goods(p) are entered in a register called the Manchester register, kept in duplicate in London and Manchester(q). The right of inspection in the case of this register extends to all applications for marks, whether registered, pending, refused, lapsed, expired, withdrawn, abandoned, or cancelled(r), and certificates are issued as to certain contents of such applications(s).

(h) See note (h), p. 710, post. The first statute relating to trade marks was passed in 1875. The following list of Acts should be remembered in considering decisions of various dates:—Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 91); Trade Marks Registration Amendment Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 33); Trade Marks Registration Extension Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 37); Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57); Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 50). The first three of these Acts were repealed by the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57). The Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Acts, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), and 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 50), so far as they related to trade marks, except the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), ss. 82—84, were repealed by the Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15), s. 73.

1248. A register is kept by the Cutlers' Company at Sheffield in which are entered marks for metal goods (t), if the applicant for such mark carries on business in Hallamshire or within six miles thereof, and also any marks assigned by the Cutlers' Company and actually used before the 1st January, 1884 (u). The Sheffield register forms part of the register, and marks entered on it are also entered in London (w).

Contents of 1249. The register contains all registered trade marks, with the names and addresses of the proprietors, and notices of assignments and transmissions, disclaimers, conditions, and limitations (a). No notice of trust is to be entered on the register (b).

Inspection
and extracts.

The register is open to inspection at all convenient times, and certified copies of any entry must be supplied to any person (c). Such certified extracts are evidence in all courts in the King's dominions without further proof (d). In the case of marks entered in the Sheffield or Manchester registers the extracts may be similarly certified by the Master of the Cutlers' Company (e), or the Keeper of Cotton Marks (f), and in the latter case this power extends also to pending applications and marks which have lapsed or expired or have been refused or withdrawn, abandoned, or cancelled (g). The registrar, if requested, will cause a search to be made to ascertain if there are any marks conflicting with a proposed mark (h).

The registrar.

1250. The register is under the charge of the registrar (i). The Manchester register is part of the register, the statutory provisions relating to the latter apply; see Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15), s. 64 (2).

Other matters to be entered may be prescribed from time to time, and by the Trade Marks Rules, 1906, r. 64, these include the date of registration, the goods for which the mark is registered, the occupation of the proprietor and such other particulars as the registrar deems necessary. As to marks for cotton goods, see Trade Marks Rules, 1912 (Stat. R. & O. 1912, p. 1229); and p. 685, ante, p. 707, post. registrar is empowered to deal with questions of registration, alteration of marks etc. (k), but in no case may he exercise any power, whether discretionary or otherwise, adversely to an applicant or registered owner without giving him an opportunity of being heard (l). The registrar may in any case of doubt or difficulty apply to the law officers for directions (m). There is an appeal to the Board of Trade against any decision of the registrar (n). There is also in certain cases an appeal to the court direct (o). The court can also, in connexion with any question as to rectification, review a decision of the registrar (p).

1251. The Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Office is a branch of the Board of Trade, which has very general powers for making rules, prescribing forms, and generally regulating the business of the office (q), and may appoint persons to exercise any of its functions (r). Further, the Board is in general the tribunal of appeal from any decision of the office (s), but it has the power to refer any such appeal to the High Court (t); otherwise the decision of the Board is final (a).

into (1) names and signatures; (2) words; (3) other distinctive marks (c).

1254. The name of a company, individual, or firm represented in a special or particular manner (d), or the signature of the applicant, or of some predecessor in his business (e), may form an essential feature, as may other names and signatures which are specially declared to be distinctive marks by an order of the Board of Trade or of the High Court (f). Names of imaginary individuals may be registrable as word marks (g).

Words.

1255. Registrable words other than names fall into three sections:—

(1) Invented words (h).

(2) Words having no direct reference to the character or quality of the goods, and not being in their primary signification geographical terms (i).

(3) Words not coming within these classes, but of such a nature that they are in themselves, or have become from user, adapted to distinguish the goods of the applicant. This class includes "old marks," and marks consisting of a word or words declared to be a distinctive mark by order of the Board of Trade or of the High Court (k). Words which from their nature are incapable of being, or becoming, adapted to distinguish the goods of any particular person are not registrable (l).

Invented words.

Teofani* (1913), 30 R. P. C. 460, C. A.; 109 L. T. 114), but may be registered under the Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15), s. 9 (5). Initials may be registered, but only if they are sufficiently distinctive (Registrar of Trade Marks v. Du Cros (W. & G.), Ltd., [1913] A. C. 624). A name written in oriental characters may be registered (Re Rotherham's Trade-mark (1880), 14 Ch. D. 585, C. A.; Orr Ewing v. Registrar of Trade-marks (1879), 4 App. Cas. 478, per Lord CAIRNS, L.C., at p. 485; see also Gout v. Aleploglu (1833), 6 Beav. 69, n.).

substantially new when first used by the applicant, and have been only used to denote his goods down to the date of registration (m). It is not necessary that its production should have involved any great ingenuity or anything like "invention" in the sense in which the term is used in patent law (n).

A word may be an invented word, although it conveys a meaning to the reader, and the restriction against registering words having reference to the character or quality of the goods does not apply to invented words (o). The use of an old word in a new sense, as, for instance, of an adjective as a substantive, does not, however, constitute invention (p), and the mere addition of a common prefix or suffix to a known word may not be sufficient to form an invented word (q), especially if the word so formed resembles a word which would be descriptive of the goods (r). So the combination of two or more ordinary English words will not usually be considered an invented word (s), nor will a common foreign word of a descriptive nature (t), though the court will not be acute to detect resemblances to words in foreign languages (a). Misspelling is not sufficient to make a word an invented word (b). The question is really one of fact depending on the circumstances of each particular case (c), the guiding principle being, in the case of invented words and the words considered in the next paragraph, that no registration must be allowed that would monopolise part of the general vocabulary of the trade, or restrict the use of words that a trader would be likely to need to describe his goods (d).

1257. The introduction of the word "direct" in the description of registrable words shows that the mere fact of words having some reference to the goods does not render them incapable of registration, and was intended to correct the tendency to find some 1259. The Board of Trade and the court have also power to make orders permitting the registrar to register a name, signature, word, or words, not coming within the above classes, but in fact adapted to distinguish the goods of the applicant (q), and power is specifically given to them, in the case of marks already in use, to consider how far such user has rendered the mark distinctive (r). These powers allow of the registration of two classes of words, those which the tribunal can see for itself are suitable to form the name of particular goods, though not within the foregoing classes, and those where it holds that the word might be adapted to distinguish and the applicant shows, as proof that it is so adapted, that it has in fact distinguished his goods (s). There are, however, words of a purely laudatory or descriptive nature, which the court holds cannot be adapted to distinguish, and no proof of user avails in such cases. Spalding* (1879), 49 L. J. (CH.) 57 ("Family Salve"), being no longer law. But the fact that it has been used with other marks which merely denoted quality and not origin (Re Barrow's Trade-marks (1877), 5 Ch. D. 353, 364, C. A.), or the use in addition of "puffing" matter (Re Chorlton and Dugdale's Trade Mark (1885), 1 T. L. Whether or not it is so adapted is a matter of fact, and previous decisions are only useful as showing what evidence has affected the courts in certain cases (c). The novelty may lie either in essential features (d) or in the general arrangement (e), and the registrar or other tribunal may take into account how far user has rendered the mark adapted to distinguish (f).

Provision is made for a mark to be registered for, or limited to, particular colours, and in such cases colour will be considered on the question whether the mark is distinctive (g).

Other requirements.

1261. The above classifications of essential particulars only deal with what a mark must possess if it is to be registered. It is in all cases necessary that the mark should be also in fact distinctive. Thus, words or marks, or parts of marks which are in fact common to the trade (h), or resemble other registered or unregistered marks, will either be refused registration or only registered with a disclaimer. Registration may be refused if the mark is merely the

A surname, even if written in a peculiar manner, cannot be registered without a special order (Re Benz et Cie.'s Application to Register a Trade Mark (1913), 30 R. P. C. 177; 108 L. T. 589, C. It is, of course, no objection that the mark would be capable of registration as a design (Re United States Playing Card Co.'s Application 1907), 24 T. L. R. 140).

(d) A photograph may be a distinctive mark (Rowland v. Mitchell (1896), 14 R. P. C. 37, C. A pictorial representation of an unregistrable word may also be a distinctive mark (Re Magnolia Metal Co.'s Trade Marks (1897), 14 R. P. C. 321, C. A.; [1897] 2 Ch. 371).

(e) See Leahy, Kelly and Leahy v. Glover (1893), 10 R. P. C. 141, H. L. ("Great Two D. Brand"). It is not necessary that all parts of a combination mark should be visible at the same time (Re Crompton & Co., Ltd.'s Trade Mark (1902), 19 R. P. name of a special article (i), or if there is no present intention on the part of the applicants to deal in this country in the goods in respect of which the registration is desired, as, for instance, if by virtue of an agreement they have no power to sell any of their goods in this country (j). Registration may also be refused if the mark has been previously used in a fraudulent manner (k), or if the word "registered" has been used on it, though this is not always done (l). Further, there is no absolute right to the registration of a mark. The registrar has a discretion to refuse any mark (m), and, though this discretion is subject to the control of the court, it will not be interfered with in cases of real doubt (n).

- (i) Where a new article has been invented and protected by a British patent, the name by which it is known can be used by anyone to denote it, and protection or registration has accordingly been refused to such names, whether the name actually appears in the specification or not; see Singer Manufacturing Co. v. Loog (1882), 8 App. Cas. 15, and the other cases cited in note (o), p. 760, post; Linoleum Manufacturing Co. v. Nairn (1878), 7 Ch. D. 834; Re Palmer's (J. B.) Trade-mark (1883), 24 Ch. A.; [1897] 2 Ch. 371); but this case seems quite inconsistent with Rey v. Lecouturier (1910), 27 R. P. C. 268, H. L.; [1910] A. C. 262, where the right to the monopoly in the name of an article manufactured by a secret process was fully recognised; compare also Cotton v. Gillard (1874), 44 L. J. (Ch.) 90. Where the manufacture of the article has been open to the trade from the first, the decisions vary. In some cases the mark has been upheld either as a common law or registered mark, or registration has been permitted; see Barlow and Jones v. Johnson (Jabez) & Co. (1890), 7 R. P. C. 395, C. A. Marks prohibited.

This discretion entitles the registrar to refuse to register marks on the ground of similarity to other marks, even where the owners of the latter have consented (o).

SUB-SECT. 2.—What may not be Registered.

1262. Certain classes of marks are forbidden by statute to be registered, and in certain other cases the registrar may refuse to register either absolutely or until fulfilment of a condition (p).

Thus, in the case of cotton piece goods and cotton yarn no mark consisting only of a word or words (q), and in the case of cotton piece goods no mark consisting of a line heading alone (r), can be registered.

Marks containing representations of the Royal Arms or crests or colourable imitations thereof, or of the British Royal crowns, or national flags, or the word "Royal" or anything calculated to give the impression that the applicant has Royal patronage or authorisation, may not be registered (s).

In addition, the registrar is given power to refuse marks containing any such words as "patent," "registered," or "copyright," or representations of the Sovereign or of any member of the Royal Family (t).

In the case of marks containing representations of the arms of a city, body corporate etc., or foreign State, or the representation of any person, living or dead, he may require proof that the applicant is authorised to use those devices (u).

D. 278 ("Golden Fleece"); contra, Re Bagots, Hutton & Co., Ltd.'s, Application for the Registration of a Trade Mark (1912), 29 R. P. C. 702. It has been said that where the registrar is doubtful he is entitled to say he will not register without the direction of the court (Re Price's Patent Candle Co. (1884), 27 Ch. D. 681, per PEARSON, J., at p. 686).

(s) Trade Marks Rules, 1906, r. 12. There is an exception with regard to certain old marks (ibid.). As to what is a representation of the British Royal crown, see Re Koenig and Ebhardt's Trade Mark (1896), 13 R. P. C. 449; [1896] 2 Ch. 236. As to marks referring to the Royal Family, see Re Carroll's Application to Register a Trade Mark (1899), 16 R. P. C. 82 ("Princess Christian"); Re Harris's Trade Marks (1892), 9 R. P. It is a criminal offence, punishable on summary conviction, for a person to represent falsely that any goods are made by a person holding a Royal Warrant or for the service of the Royal Family or any Government department (Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 28), s. 20; see p. 722, post).

(t) Trade Marks Rules, 1906, r. 11.

(u) Ibid., rr. 13—15. A person may not, after the 18th August, 1911, without the authority of the Army Council, use for the purposes of his trade or business the heraldic emblem of the red cross on a white ground or the words "Red Cross" or "Geneva Cross" (Geneva Convention Act, 1263. No mark may be registered which contains any matter which is contrary to law or morality, or any scandalous design or matter which by reason of its being calculated to deceive or otherwise would be disentitled to protection in a court (v.). A mark may be deceptive under this rule either because of some misrepresentation therein, relating, for instance, to the goods (a), or because it would be liable to be confused with another mark, whether registered or unregistered (b), or with a trade name (c). User to defeat registration must be clearly proved, and if such user was fraudulent in view of the applicant's common law rights it will be of no effect (d).

1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 20), s. 1). There is a limitation in favour of the proprietor of a trade mark registered before the passing of the Act (ibid., ss. 1—3).

(w) Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15), s. 11. This provision has been held to extend to matter which was disentitled to protection as being publici juris (Re Anderson's Trade-mark (1884), 26 Ch. D. 409, per FRY, J., at p. 415 ("Baron Liebig Brand")), but this decision has not been followed, the point being dealt with by means of disclaimer. As to disclaimer, see p. 706, post.

(a) It will not be assumed that the mark will be used dishonestly (Re Kutnow's Trade Mark (1893), 10 R. P. C. 401, 411; Re Watson (Angus) & Co.'s Application for Registration of a Trade Mark (1911), 28 R. P. C. 313, 321). For cases where marks have been refused on this ground, see McGlennon's Application (1908), 25 R. P. C. 797 ("Shamrock"); Re Heaton's Trade-Mark (1884), 27 Ch. For a case where it was held that the objection failed, see Re Van de Leeuw's Application to Register a Trade Mark (1911), 28 R. P. C. 708; 105 L. T. 626. In Re Bryant and May, Ltd. (1888), 4 T. L. R. 675, it was held not to be an objection that the mark had been used without the word "limited"; compare Re Baker (Albert) & Co. (1908), Ltd.'s Application for a Trade Mark (1908), 25 R. P. C. 524; [1908] 2 Ch. 86 ("A. B. C.").

R. 592 ("Ancross"). In Re Sphincter Grip Armoured Hose Co.'s Trade Mark (1893), 10 R. P. C. 84, a resemblance to an advertisement of another firm was held sufficient to justify refusal. But this is not sufficient to remove a mark when registered (Re Verity's Trade Mark (1901), 19 R. P. C. 58; 18 T. L. R. 214 ("Badger")). In Booth's Distillery Co., Ltd.'s Application for the Registration of Trade Marks (1903), 21 R. P. C. 18 ("Jock Scott"), a mark was refused on the ground of similarity to a previously refused mark.

(c) See Re Dunn's Trade Mark, supra.

(e) Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15), s. 19. With regard to marks used before the 13th August, 1875, the former rule was that three similar marks, but no more, might be registered; if more persons had used a mark, it was considered as common to the trade (Patents, Designs and Trade Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 74 (3)). Probably this will govern future practice. It was of course not necessary to show that the user by more than three persons had been user as a trade mark (Re Wragg's Trade-mark (1885), 29 Ch. D. 551, 559); see also Re Thevotis and Blakey's Trade Mark, Re Hughes and Young's Trade Mark (1893), 10 R. P. C. 369; 9 T. L. R. 592. Where the mark is of a class common in the trade smaller power in the case of honest concurrent user or other special circumstances to permit the registration of identical, or nearly identical, trade marks for the same description of goods, and may impose terms as to user (f).

The question whether or not two or more marks resemble each other so closely as to be deceptive is one of fact in each case. The general principle to be adopted by the court in deciding such cases is to consider the impression produced by the marks as a whole (g), and to bear in mind that the danger to be guarded against is that the person seeing one mark will think it to be the same as another which he has seen before, and that the purchaser will not see the two marks side by side so as to notice small differences (h). Further, the circumstances in which a mark will generally be used are to be taken into consideration, as, for instance, whether it is liable to become effaced, or will have to be represented on a small scale or in a differences may suffice (Orr Ewing v. Registrar of Trade-marks (1879), 4 App. Cas. 479; Re Bagots, Hutton & Co., Ltd.'s Application for the Registration of a Trade Mark (1912), 29 R. P. C. 702). In deciding whether goods are of similar descriptions the court is not bound by the classes adopted for registration purposes. It considers rather whether confusion is in fact likely to occur, as, for instance, whether the goods would be sold in the same shops; see Re Gutta Percha and Rubber Manufacturing Co. of Toronto, Ltd.'s Application for Registration of Two Trade Marks (1909), 26 R. P. C. 428, C. A.; [1909] 2 Ch. 10. For cases where goods have been held so similar as to cause confusion, see Re Hargreaves' Trade-mark (1879), 11 Ch. D. 669; Re Australian Wine Importers' Trade Mark (1889), 6 R. P. C. 311, C. A.; 41 Ch. D. 278; Re Turney & Sons' Trade Mark (1893), 11 R. P. C. 37; 10 T. L. R. 175; *Boord & Son v. If there is an agreement as to user, its purport, not merely a note that there is an agreement, should be entered on the register (Re Mitchell & Co.'s Trade-Mark, Re Houghton and Hallmark's Trade-Mark (1885), 28 Ch. D. 666; Re Keep's Trade-mark (1884), 26 Ch. D. 187). As to honest concurrent user, see Mouson & Co. v. Boehm (1884), 26 Ch. D. 398.

(g) Re Christiansen's Trade Mark (1886), 3 R. P. C. 54, C. A.; see pp. 755, 756, 766, post. If the sole ground of objection is likeness to a registered mark, then the court only considers the opponent's mark as registered, not a different mark which he may use (Re Lyndon's Trade Mark (1886), 3 R. P. C. 102, C. A.; 32 Ch. D. 109). Resemblance to a mark used may, however, cause the mark to be deceptive. Where in a case of rectification the respondent's mark is actually in use, the appearance as used will be considered (Re Christiansen's Trade Mark, supra).

position which renders it difficult to see details (i). The court will not, however, assume that the applicant intends deliberately to use his mark in an imperfect form for fraudulent purposes (k). A mark is considered as calculated to deceive if there would be confusion either to the eye or the ear; a word mark or device may, therefore, be deceptive as resembling a previous device or word mark if the new mark is calculated to suggest the same idea as the old mark or to cause the goods to be called by a name which would suggest such an idea (l). Again, even if the marks as a whole are different, registration of the second mark may be refused, if its essential particulars resemble those in the first (m). Where, however, the only resemblance is in matters which have been disclaimed the second mark will not be refused (n). The applicant is considered as in petitorio, and must the same goods or description of goods that it would be calculated to cause confusion if used by a person other than the applicant, he may be required to register such mark as an associated trade mark (p). Similarly, an applicant may register a series of marks for the same description of goods differing in regard to statements as to the nature of the goods, number, price, quality or names of places, or in colour or matter of a non-distinctive character not substantially affecting the identity of the mark. Such marks are to be deemed associated marks (q). A further case of associated marks is where a trader registers a whole trade mark and also separate parts of the same (r). In this last case user of the whole mark is to be deemed user of a mark separately registered, and in other cases the tribunal may accept user of an associated trade mark, or of a trade mark with unimportant additions or alterations, as an equivalent for user of other marks of the series (s). Associated trade marks can only be assigned as a whole (t).

SECT. 5.—Registration.

1266. Any person claiming to be the proprietor of a trade mark may apply to register it in the prescribed manner (a). No previous user is necessary and no statement as to use is required, except in the case of marks alleged to have been used before the 31st August, 1875 (b).

Who may apply.

The applicant is required to state whether or not he is applying under the special provision by which the Board of Trade or the court may declare marks consisting of names, signatures, or (a) Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15), s. 12 (1). "Claiming to be the proprietor" is really equivalent to claiming to have the right to use the mark in question as his trade mark. As to the mode of application and forms to be used, see Trade Marks Rules, 1906, rr. 17—28. The applicant must give his address and occupation, and if not resident or carrying on business in this country, an address for service here. A translation of foreign words in the mark may be required (ibid., r. 28). Even where registration of the mark has been previously refused, a fresh application may be made (Re Hunt (William) & Sons, The Brades, Ltd.'s Application for the Registration of Trade Marks (1911), 28 R. P. C. 302).

(b) Trade Marks Rules, 1906, r. 20. As to cotton marks, see p. 707, post. It is no longer necessary to state what are the essential features of the mark claimed, or to insert disclaimers in the form of application. As to disclaimers, see p. 706, post.

tion.

words to be distinctive (c). A separate form of application is required for each class of goods, and the application must state for what goods of the class the mark is to be registered (d).

Searches.

1267. On receipt of an application a search is made among registered marks and pending applications relating to the same or similar goods to see if there are any so closely resembling the mark as to make it calculated to deceive (e). The registrar may, as the result of such search, accept the mark absolutely or subject to conditions, amendments or modifications, or refuse it (f), but in case of any such refusal or conditional acceptance, the applicant has the right to a written statement of the grounds of the registrar's decision and to a hearing (g), and may appeal against an adverse decision to the Board of Trade or the court (h).

Special order.

In the case of an application rendering necessary a special order of the Board of Trade or the court (i), the search is made as in the case of an ordinary application, and the result notified to the applicant, who must, within a month lodge a written case for the Board or the court at his option. In the event of the decision being in his favour, the advertisement and registration of the mark proceed in the usual manner (k).

Special trade mark.

1268. In the case of an application for a special trade mark the registrar makes a report to the Board of Trade, and the Board subsequently hears him and the applicant. If the decision is in favour of the applicant, the advertisement and registration of the mark proceed in the usual manner (l).

Advertisement.

1269. When the application has been accepted it is to be advertised in the Trade Marks Journal as the registrar may direct (m).

(k) Trade Marks Rules, 1906, rr. 35—41. The effect of the order of the Board of Trade or the court is to give the registrar power to proceed with the application, although the mark does not come within the Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15), s. 9 (1)—(4), as to which see pp. 687 et seq., ante. It is open to him to refuse the mark on opposition on the ground that further evidence shows that it is not distinctive. As to the effect of the order of the Board of Trade or the court, see Re Crosfield (Joseph) & Sons, Ltd.'s Application to Register a Trade Mark ("Perfection") (1909), 26 R. P. C. 837, 856, 859, C. Any condition attached to the acceptance must be set forth in the advertisement (n).

SECT. 5.
Registration.
Opposition.

1270. Any person may within one month of the last advertisement lodge a notice of opposition to the registration of any trade mark (o). The notice must state the grounds of opposition; these are not limited in any way, but in practice the commonest are that the proposed mark has not any of the necessary essential features (p), or that it takes something which is common to the trade, or is used by the opponent, or that it is liable to be confused with some mark registered or unregistered, or will in some way restrict the opponent's legitimate trade, or is a mark in which the opponent has rights (q).

Within a month of the lodging of this notice the applicant must file a counter-notice, and then both sides are given an opportunity of filing evidence. The registrar hears both parties and gives his decision (r). The tribunal has full powers as to giving extension of time, or leave to amend or to file further evidence, and may award costs and require security from an opponent not resident in this country (s).

1271. Any party may appeal to the court against any decision Appeals. of the registrar in an opposition (t), or any decision refusing a mark or imposing conditions (u). An appeal is by motion, and the decision of the court may be appealed against in the ordinary way (b). It is also open to parties to appeal to the Board of Trade, but in the case of an opposition only by the consent of all (n) Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15), s. 13.

(p) As to the essential features, see pp. 687 et seq., ante.

(q) If the opponent's mark is registered, the registrar has no power to consider whether it is rightly registered, and any grounds of objection thereto must be raised by a motion to rectify. If such motion is made, an appeal from the decision refusing the mark will be heard at the same time (Re Brock (H. N.) & Co., Ltd.'s Application for a Trade Mark ("Osowoolo"), Re Trade Marks "Orlwoola" (1909), 26 R. P. C. 681; 25 T. L. R. 695; reversed without affecting this point, [1910] 1 Ch. 130, C. A.). As to the effect of these various matters on registrability, see pp. 687 et seq., ante. It seems that where the user by the opponent is more recent than that of the applicant, it gives no ground for opposition (Re Kenrick and Jefferson's Application for a Trade Mark (1909), 26 R. P. C. 641; Re Southall Brothers and Barclay, Ltd.'s Trade Mark (1911), 28 R. P. C. 481).

(r) Apparently, if an opponent is successful, and a fresh application is made and he opposes again, the matter is res judicata (Re Hunt (William) & Sons. The Bradcs, Ltd.'s Application for the Registration of Trade Marks (1911), 28 R. P. C. 302).

parties (c). Such appeal is by means of a written case, followed by a hearing.

No objection other than one taken below can be taken against a mark on appeal except by leave of the tribunal, and in case such leave is given the applicant has the right to withdraw the application without payment of costs (d). In the case of an opposition the tribunal hearing the appeal may give leave to have the mark modified in any manner not substantially affecting its identity, but a mark so modified must be advertised again in the prescribed manner (e). The tribunal hearing the appeal may give costs, probably, in the case of the Board of Trade, including costs before the registrar (f). The declarations used before the registrar are admissible on appeal, and further evidence may be adduced by leave (g).

Disclaimers.

1272. Disclaimers may be required by the registrar, the Board of Trade, or the court, if the mark contains parts not separately registered as trade marks or which are non-distinctive or common to the trade. These requirements may be made either before registration, or in a case where there is a question of whether such mark shall remain upon the register, but disclaimers will only be required where the tribunal thinks that they are really necessary in the interests of the public (h).

(c) Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15), ss. 12 (3), 14 (5). The Board of Trade has power to refer any such application to the court. A course sometimes taken by the Board of Trade in appeals against the decision of the registrar refusing to accept a mark on the ground of similarity to other registered marks, is to refer the appeal to the court and direct that the owners of such marks shall be served with notice. In such a case the court will not hear the appeal till such condition has been complied with (Re Extract of Meat (Baron Laebig) Photograph Brand, Ltd.'s Application for the Registration of a Trade Mark (1900), 17 R. P. C. 161). Persons so served have a right to be heard (Re Royal Worcester Corset Co.'s Application for the Registration of a Trade Mark (1909), 26 R. P. C. 185, 189), and an order for costs can be made in their favour (ibid., at p. 190), or against them (Re Itala Fabbrica de Automobili's Application for the Registration of a Trade Mark (1910), 27 R. P. C. 493, 497; 54 Sol. Jo. 652); see also Re Georg Schicht Actien Gesellschaft's Applications to Register Trade Marks (1912), 29 R. P. C. 486, 488. 1273. The applicant may at any time correct any error in his application or amend the same with the leave of the registrar, the court, or the Board of Trade as the case may be (i).

SECT. 5.
Registration.

1274. If the time for opposition has elapsed without any person opposing, or after an opposition has been decided in favour of the applicant, the registrar must, unless the Board of Trade otherwise directs, register the mark and issue a certificate of registration to the applicant. The mark bears the date of application (k). In the case of registration not being completed within twelve months owing to some default of the applicant, the registrar may give him notice to complete within a certain time, and if he fails to do so the application is deemed to be abandoned (l).

Applications for marks for goods in the cotton classes are made to the Manchester branch, and must state the length of user, if any (m), but the decision as to whether or not the applications shall proceed lies with the registrar, who may, however, consult the Trade Merchandise Marks Committee of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce (n).

Registration of foreign marks.

1277. Provision is made for arrangements with foreign States and British colonies by which certain advantages are given to persons who have applied for a trade mark in such State or colony and who wish to register the same mark in this country or vice versa. The effect of these provisions is to give the applicant priority as of his date of application in such State or colony, provided that the application here is made within four months of the foreign or colonial applications (q). The mark must, however, be one which is entitled to registration here (r), and there can be no infringement before the actual registration in this country (s). These provisions only apply to the States and colonies named in Orders in Council (t).

Metal goods are defined as "all metals whether wrought, unwrought, or partly wrought, and all goods composed wholly or partly of any metal" (ibid., s. 63 (10)). The register also contains the old marks assigned by the Cutlers' Company, and the owner of any mark so assigned and actually used before the 1st January, 1884, is entitled to have it entered; see Re Lambert's Trade Mark (1889), 6 R. P. C. 344, C. A.; 61 L. T. 138. The procedure as to application, opposition etc. is the same as with an ordinary application, the Cutlers' Company taking the place of the registrar, but if the latter objects to the registration of any mark the company cannot proceed without the direction of the court. The only appeal from the company is to the court. The other provisions of the Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15), and Rules as to registration apply to this register. All marks entered on the Sheffield Register are also entered on the London one, and any alteration in the former is notified to the registrar; see Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15), s. 63; Trade Marks Rules, 1906, rr. 107—112.

The enactment seems to mean that if an application is made within four months of the application in any such country (often called a Convention country), the priority of such application can be claimed; compare note (r), p. 736, post. There is no rule, as in the case of patents, that the period is to be reckoned from the date of the first foreign application; as to the rule in the case of patents, see title PATENTS AND INVENTIONS, Vol. XXII., p. 229.

that the registration is about to expire must be sent to the proprietor, and there are provisions for the renewal of the registration if application is made within a month of the expiration (b). An expired trade mark is treated as still on the register for the purpose of any application for registration for one year after the date of removal, unless it is shown that there has been no bona fide user for the two years preceding the removal (c).

SECT. 5.
Registration.

SECT. 6.—Effects of Registration.

1279. The person for the time being registered as proprietor of a trade mark has, subject to anything appearing on the Register, power to assign the same, and to give effectual receipts for the consideration for such assignment, but equities may be enforced as in the case of other personal property (d).

Power to assign.

1280. Subject to certain exceptions (c), the valid registration of a trade mark gives the proprietor the exclusive right to the use of such trade mark upon or in connexion with the goods in respect of which it is registered (f), and any invasion of this right is an infringement of the trade mark. It is probable that to constitute infringement there must be an actual use of the mark upon something, and that mere use of a registered word mark in a verbal description would not be sufficient, though the use of such a mark on an invoice, or on an advertisement, would be (g).

Exclusive user.

(b) Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15), s. 30; Trade Marks Rules, 1906, r. 72.

(c) Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15), s. 31.

(d) Ibid., s. 38. As to assignment, see pp. 718, 719, post; and as to notices which may be entered on the register, see p. 686, ante.

(e) Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15), s. 39. The exceptions there given deal with the rights of each of several co-proprietors to use the mark, the rights given by conditions entered on the register and the rights given by ibid., s. 41, to persons who can prove user prior to that of the registered proprietor; see pp. 719, 720, post; see also Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15), s. 43; p. 712, post.

(f) User on other goods cannot be infringement, though it may be passing off (Holt v. Colley (1890), 7 R. P. C. 93; 44 Ch. D. 193; Jay v. Laddler (1888), 6 R. P. C. 136; 5 T. L. R. 57). But user on goods for which the mark is registered is apparently infringement, even if the mark is not used by the plaintiff on these goods, unless the registration is attacked. There may be an exception if the mark is such that it could only be used on goods of a particular kind: compare Hargreaves v. Freeman (1891), 8 R. P. C. 237, 240; [1891] 3 Ch. 39; but see Finlay v. Shamrock Co. (1905), 22 R. P. C. 301, per PORTER, M.R., at p. 306. Under the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 91), s. 3, where the provision was differently worded, it was held in Re Edwards' Trade-mark, Edwards v. Dennis (1885), 30 Ch. D. 454, 470, C. A.; followed in Hargreaves v. Freeman, supra, that there could be no infringement unless the mark was used on goods of the same kind as those on which the plaintiff used it.

(g) The following acts have been held to constitute infringement:—user on an invoice (Re Kodak, Ltd.'s Trade Marks, Kodak, Ltd. v. London Stereoscopic and Photographic Co., Ltd., Kodak, Ltd. v. Houghton & Sons (1903), 20 R. P. C. 337, 344; 20 T. L. R. 297; in this case it is not clear whether merely supplying goods in response to orders was held to be infringement or passing off, but this was held to be infringement in Peters (C. A.),

SECT. 6.
Effects of Registration.

Infringement
not necessarily fraudulent.

Test of infringement.

1281. If infringement is proved, it is not a defence to show that by reason of the class of goods sold by the plaintiff and defendant respectively, or the markets in which they trade, there is no risk of confusion (h). The existence of fraudulent intent is only material as evidence of infringement, and is not a necessary part of the cause of action (i).

C. 781 (advertisements plus sales in answer to demands held infringement)); user of a mark on matchboxes as advertisement of other goods, which in fact was an infringement of plaintiff's mark for matches (Nitedals Tændstikfabrik v. Lehmann & Co., Ltd. (1908), 25 R. P. C. 793); using receptacles properly bearing the trade mark of A. to hold B.'s goods (Monro v. Hunter (1904), 21 R. P. C. 296; Major Brothers v. Franklin & Son (1908), 25 R. P. C. 406; [1908] 1 K. B. 712; Barr & Co. v. Mair and Dougall (1904), 21 R. P. C. 665). This is now a criminal offence (Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 28), s. 5; Wood v. Burgess (1889), 24 Q. B. D. 162; Stone v. Burn (1910), 103 L. T. 540; Haddow v. Neilson Brothers (1899), 2 Fraser (Justiciary), 19; Thwaites v. McEvelly (1904), 21 R. P. C. 397, C. A.; [1904] 1 L. R. 310; see title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., pp. 566 et seq., 711, note (c)). As to the insertion of a part bearing a trade mark into a machine, see Re Harrison's Trade Mark, Harrison v. Woodroffe (1889), 7 R. P. C. 25; contra, Richards v. Williamson (1874), 30 L. T. 746. An offer to sell in this country goods which in fact bear the trade mark, but which never come into this country is apparently an infringement (Re Schmidt's Trade Mark, Jackson & Co. v. Napper (1886), 4 R. P. C. 45, 59; 3 T. L. R. 238). Printing (at least knowingly) intruding labels is an infringement (de Kuyper (John) & Son v. Baird (W. & G.), Ltd. (1903), 20 R. P. C. 581; Jameson (John) & Son, Ltd. v. Johnston (R. S.) & Co., Ltd. (1901), 18 R. P. C. 259); see also Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 28), s. 2. An innocent importer of goods bearing spurious marks is an infringer, though there is no proof that he intends to sell (Upmann v. Forester (1883), 24 Ch. D. 361). As to the position of wharfingers, see Moet v. Pickering (1878), 8 Ch. D. 372, C. A.. In Re Tolbot's Trade Marks, Tolbot v. Webby (1886), 3 R. P. C. 276, use in a price list was held to be infringement.

(h) Paine & Co. v. Daniell & Sons' Breweries, Ltd. (1893), 10 R. P. C. 217, C. A.; [1893] 2 Ch. 567 ("John Bull"). Of course, these facts may be material on the question of damages or as evidence that the marks are so alike as to make the defendant's acts amount to infringement.

(i) Paine & Co. v. Daniell & Sons' Breweries, Ltd., supra; Montgomerie & Co., Ltd. v. Young Brothers (1903), 20 R. P. C. 781; *Re Addley Bourne's Registered Trade Marks, Addley Bourne v. taking of the whole trade mark (k). In substance the test is whether or not the mark used by the infringer is likely to be confused with that registered.

The rules of comparison resemble those by which the question whether a mark proposed to be registered resembles too closely an existing mark is tested (l), but it is necessary to establish a closer likeness in order to make out infringement than would justify refusal of registration. In the first case the burden of showing probability of deception is on the plaintiff, while in the second all reasonable possibility of deception has to be disproved by the applicant (m).

T. 100; Hodgson and Simpson v. Kynoch, Ltd. (1898), 15 R. P. C. 465, 476. Where a defendant takes a substantial part of a mark, the burden may be on him to show that the differences are sufficient to prevent confusion (Orr Ewing & Co. v. Johnston & Co. (1880), 13 Ch. D. 434, C. A.). Addition does not prevent infringement (Sanitas Co., Ltd. v. Condy (1887), 4 R. P. C. 530; 56 L. T. 62), but where the mark is not actually copied and the alleged infringement is but a small part of the defendant's mark, it may be held no infringement (Lambert and Butler, Ltd. v. Goodbody (T. P. & R.) (1902), 19 R. P. C. 377; compare also Re Adley Bourne's Registered Trade Marks, Adley Bourne v. Swan and Edgar, Ltd. (1902), 20 R. P. C. 105, [1903] 1 Ch. 211).

The evidence of experts is admissible and proper, but the judge must decide for himself (Hennessy & Co. v. Keating, supra; see also Mitchell v. Henry (1880), 15 Ch. D. 181, 189, C. A.). The fact that the defendant's mark would cause the goods to be called by the same name as the plaintiff's is important (Boord & Son v. Uddart (1903), 21 R. P. C. 149; 89 L. T. 718 ("Cat and Barrel"); Fimlay v. Shamrock Co. (1905), 22 R. P. C. 301; Boord & Son v. Thom and Cameron, Ltd. (1907), 24 R. P. C. 697, 721; [1907] S. Jeyes' Sanitary Compounds Co., Ltd.* (1901), 19 R. P. C. 17, 21, C. A.; Upper Assam Tea Co. v. Herbert & Co., supra; but this fact is not always sufficient in itself (Hodgson and Simpson v. Kynoch, Ltd. (1898), 15 R. P. C. 465, 473; Cowie Brothers & Co. v. Herbert (1897), 14 R. P. C. 436; 24 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 353). The possibility of deception in markets other than English is considered (Price's Patent Candle Co., Ltd. v. Ogston and Tennant, Ltd., supra; Orr Ewing & Co. v. Johnston & Co., supra, at p. 451), though this will not be pressed to extremes (Cowie Brothers & Co. v. Herbert, supra, at p. 447; Boord & Son v. Thom and Cameron, Ltd. (1906), 23 R. P. C. 509, 524; reversed on another ground (1907), 24 R. P. C. 697, C. A.). SECT. 6.

Effects of Registration.

Imitation.

Similarity of get-up.

Whether the mark used by the defendant is an imitation of the plaintiff's mark is of course a pure question of fact, and therefore reference to former decisions is usually of little value (n). The one question to be decided is whether or not the registered mark has been imitated. If it has been, the fact that the get-up of the goods is otherwise entirely different is no defence (o), and if it has not been, similarity in other respects will not help the plaintiff. Nevertheless, in doubtful cases the court does consider whether, in addition to there being similarity in the mark, a similar get-up has also been adopted with a view to increasing the probability of confusion (p).

The court also has power, when deciding whether a trade mark has been infringed, to take into account the common practice of the trade as to the get-up of goods and as to the existence of other similar trade marks, so that in a case where part only of a mark is taken the court will consider how far that part is distinctive, and so follow the practice adopted in patents and designs cases (q).

(n) The following cases as to word marks may be of assistance. Word marks held to be infringements:—"Condi-Sanitas" and "Condi-Sapitant" of "Sanitas" (Santas Co., Ltd. v. Condy (1867), 4 R. P. C. 530, 532; 56 L. T. 651); "Stafford" of "Trafford," "Fort" of "Fortress" (Smith and Wellstood v. Carron Co. (1896), 13 R. P. C. 108); "Margarita" of "La Flor de Margarella" (*Benedictus v. Apart from this provision, it has been laid down that a person may honestly use the descriptive term by which particular goods are known in the trade to describe such goods, it is only user as a trade mark which is restrained (Re Leonard and Ellis's Trade-mark, Leonard and Ellis v. Wells (1884), 26 Ch. D. 288, C. A., per Lord SELBORNE, L.C., at p. 296 ("Valvoline")); compare Chearn v. Walker (1877), 5 Ch. D. 850, 862, C. A.; and see pp. 700, 761, post.

(t) Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15), s. 34. Formerly the only power to permit alterations was in the court, and only extended to non-essential particulars (Patents, Designs and Trade Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57); s. 92). The most frequent cases under the old practice were alterations in the name of a firm or an address, which were allowed even in the case of old marks (Re Cockle (James) & Co.'s Trade Mark (1903), 20 R. P. C. 353). As to a change of name or status in the case of a company or firm registered as proprietors, see title COMPANIES, Vol. V., pp. 86, 87. If a signature is an essential particular, the name of the limited company may be added (Re Hammond and Stow, Ltd.'s Registered Trade Mark (1905), 22 R. P. C. 299). In the case of old marks the court would only allow an alteration when absolutely necessary (Re Clay (Henry) and Beck & Co.'s Trade Mark (1892), 9 R. P. C. 449), and in such cases permission to omit words such as "patent" (Re Adams' Trade Marks (1892), 9 R. P. C. 174; 66 L. T. 610) or "trade mark" (Re Phillips' Trade Marks (1891), 8 R. P. C. 469; [1891] 3 Ch. 139) was refused. In the case of other marks the omission of such words was sometimes permitted (Re Colman's Trade Marks (1891), 8 R. P. C. 209; [1891] 2 Ch. 402). An alteration which proposed to add the words "incorporated by Royal Charter" was refused (Re Carron Co.'s Application to alter a Trade Mark (1910), 27 R. P. C. 412; 26 T. L. R. 458). registrars.

1285. Any person who is aggrieved by the wrongful omission or insertion of any matter in the register, or by an error in the same, or by any entry wrongfully remaining on the register, may move the court for the rectification of the register, and the court may make an order for the alteration or expunging of any entry, including an order for the entering of a disclaimer, and may decide any question that is necessary or expedient for this purpose (a).

1286. In the case of fraud in registration or transmission the registrar himself may move (b). In other cases he is not a necessary party, though he must be served with notice of the application. He may either appear or submit a written statement giving particulars of any proceedings before him, or the grounds of any decision, or such other matters relevant to the issue within his knowledge as he may think fit; and such statement forms part of the evidence. If, however, the court so directs, he must appear (c).

Any order for the rectification of the register must be served on the registrar (d).

Who is a "person aggrieved."

1287. The expression "person aggrieved" has been widely interpreted by the courts. Any person who is in any way hampered in his trade by the presence of the marks, or who can show any real interest in having them removed, may apply (e), but Roby's Trade Mark (1886), 4 R. P. C. 70). The order usually provides that the alteration may be made according to a certain exhibit; see Re Cockle (James) & Co.'s Trade Mark (1903), 20 R. P. C. 353; Re Hammond and Stow, Ltd.'s Registered Trade Mark (1905), 22 R. P. C. 299.

(a) Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15), ss. 15, 35. The power to rectify includes cases where there is a wrongful entry as to ownership; see Rey v. Lecouturier (1910), 27 R. P. C. 268, H. L.; [1910] A. C. 262; Re Johnson's (M. A.) Trade Marks (1908), 26 R. P. C. 195. This is the only remedy for wrongful registration (Reid v. Thomson & Co. (1905), 22 R. P. C. 376; 13 Scots Law Times, 32). As to who is a person aggrieved, see the text, infra.

(b) Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15), s. 35 (3).

(c) Ibid., s. 47. If the proprietor of the mark cannot be found and is not at his registered address, the application may proceed with the Comptroller as the only respondent (Re Smollens' Trade Mark (1912), 29 R. P. C. 158; 28 T. L. R. 116; Re Ashton's Trade Mark (1900), 46 W. R. 389).

(d) Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15), s. 35 (4).

It is not necessary to show present injury; it is sufficient that the mark might prevent a probable extension of trade (Re Apollinaris Co.'s Registered Trade Marks (1890), 8 R. P. C. 137, 160, C. A.; [1891] 2 Ch. 186; Re Powell's Trade Mark, supra; Re Talbot's Trade Mark (1894), 11 R. P. C. 77, 83; 8 R. 149). The area of the applicant's trade need not overlap that of the respondent's (Re La Société Anonyme des Verres de l'Etoile's Trade Mark (1893), 10 R. P. C. 436; 10 T. L. R. 35), nor is it in all cases necessary that he should trade or intend to trade in this country (Re Rivière's Trade-mark (1884), 26 Ch. D. 48, 53, C. A.). An applicant who had gone out of business, which was being carried on by his agents, was held to be aggrieved (Re Harness' Trade Mark (1899), 17 R. P. C. 49), as were the agents for sale in this country of a manufacturer having an opposing mark (Re Vignier's Trade Mark (1889), 6 R. P. C. 490; 61 L. T. 495). A defendant in a trade mark or passing-off action in which the statement of claim makes any reference to a registered mark may always apply (Re Giannolis' Trade Mark (1889), 6 R. P. C. 467; 58 L. J. (ch.) 782; Baker v. Rawson (1890), some possible injury must be shown (f), and the common informer, or a person having only a sentimental grievance, is excluded (g). A person may also apply on the ground that he should be entered as the proprietor of the mark, or that some other person is wrongly entered as such proprietor (h). A decision of the registrar refusing registration cannot be questioned by an application to rectify the register by inserting the mark (i).

1288. Any of the grounds on which registration might have been resisted may be used to support an application to rectify. The principles on which the court acts in the case of an application to rectify the register on the ground that a mark is not a properly registrable mark are the same as in the case of an application to register, since a mark may not be removed if it could now properly be registered (k). The burden of proof, however, is changed, and it is for the applicant for rectification to show that the mark should not be on the register (l). In the case of old marks the court

8 R. P. C. 89, 98; 45 Ch. D. 519), even though he would be restrained at common law from using the mark (Re Joule's Trade Marks, Thompson v. Montgomery (1889), 6 R. P. C. 404, C. A.; 41 Ch. D. 35); so, too, may an applicant or intending applicant for a mark whose application might be hampered by the presence of another mark on the register (Re Registered Trade Mark "Zonophone" (1903), 20 R. P. C. 450). If the applicant is a person aggrieved, the fact that he personally has been fraudulent is no answer (Re Hill's Trade Mark (1893), 10 R. P. C. 113, 116). It may, however, affect his right to costs (Re Hill's Trade Mark, supra; see also Re Trade Mark "Carvino," Coleman & Co., Ltd. v. Smith (Stephen) & Co., Ltd. (1911), 28 R. P. C. 645, 663; 27 T. L. R. 533). The question whether the decision of a point in an action would estop the parties on a motion for rectification has never been decided, though raised in Re Kenrick and Jefferson, Ltd.'s Three Trade Marks (1910), 28 R. P. C. 45; but compare Re Deeley's Patent (1894), 12 R. P. C. 65; [1895] 1 Ch. 687. The injury shown must be a legal one (Re Rivière's Trade-mark (1884), 26 Ch. D. 48, 54, C. A.), and not merely a sentimental objection (Re Ellis & Co.'s Trade Marks (1904), 21 R. P. C. 617, 620). Usually the applicant must trade or intend to trade in the goods for which the mark is registered (Re Crompton (A. & A.) & Co., Ltd.'s Trade Mark (1902), 19 R. P. C. 265, 272; [1902] 1 Ch. 758), and the possible injury relied upon must not be too remote (Re Wright, Crossley & Co.'s Trade Mark (1898), 15 R. P. C. 377, 379, C. A.).

This does not mean that the validity of the registration is to be tested by assuming that the present Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15), was in force at such date of registration, but that the court has to consider whether, if the mark were removed, it could be ordered to be re-registered (Re Gestetner's Trade Mark (1907), 25 R. P. C. 156, C. A.; [1908] 1 Ch. 513). The fact that a mark has been registered in pursuance of a special order of the Board of Trade does not prevent its removal (Thorne (Henry) & Co., Ltd. v. Sandow (1912), 29 R. P. C. 440, 451; 106 L. T. 926; Re Teofuni & Co.'s Trade Mark (1913), 30 R. P. C. 446, C. A.; 100 L. Deceptive requires strong proof that a statement made in the application for registration as to the mark having been used on a certain date is untrue (m).

1289. Another ground for rectification is that the mark is deceptive in that it contains deceptive matter. This may be a statement as to the goods (n) or some statement as to the mark itself which would mislead the public (o). In order, however, that

(m) Re Chesebrough Manufacturing Co.'s Trade Mark, supra; Boord & Son v. Thom and Cameron, Ltd. (1907), 24 R. P. C. 697; [1907] S. C. 1326. But where the applicant shows that the person claiming an exclusive right to an old mark sold, before 1875, goods on which the mark was not used as alleged, the burden is shifted (Day v. Riley and Whittaker (1900), 17 R. P. C. 517, 522; 48 W. R. 556).

(n) Where the mark contained the word "Glenthorne," and was registered at a time when the only whisky sold by the applicant was "Thorne's," it was ordered to be expunged when he had ceased to sell this whisky (Re Pimms' Trade Mark, Thorne & Sons, Ltd. v. Pimms, Ltd. (1909), 26 R. P. C. 221; but compare Brock & Co.'s Crystal Palace Fireworks, Ltd. v. Pain (James) & Sons (1911), 28 R. P. C. 697, C. A.; 105 L. T. 976). Where "Orlwoola" was registered for goods other than woollen, it was ordered to be expunged (Re Trade Marks ("Orlwoola") (1909), 26 R. P. C. 850, 860, C. A.; [1910] 1 Ch. 130; compare Re Edge's Trade Marks (1891), 8 R. P. C. 207); and see Re Hill's Trade Mark (1893), 10 R. P. C. 113; and the cases cited in note (w), p. 689, ante. Probably, to constitute a ground for rectification, the misrepresentation must be by the mark itself, false statements about the goods made in other ways being insufficient; compare Paterson & Sons v. Kil Coffee Co. (1910), 27 R. P. C. 591, per Lord SALVESBY, at p. 601; Re Lyle and Kinahan, Ltd.'s Application to Register a Trade Mark (1907), 24 R. P. C. 249, C. A. The fact that it is used on goods that have a deceptive get-up in other respects is also insufficient (Re Trade Mark "Carrino," Coleman & Co., Ltd. v. Smith (Stephen) & Co., Ltd. (1911), 28 R. P. C. 645, 662; 27 T. L. R. 533; S. C., 29 R. P. C. 81, C. A.; [1911] 2 Ch. 572).

(o) Thus, placing the word "trade mark" on a label so as to induce the public to believe that one part only was the trade mark, and that the rest of the label was no part of it and could be taken, was held a sufficient ground for rectification in Re Apollinaris Co., Ltd.'s Registered Trade Marks (1890), 8 R. P. C. 137, 164, C. A.; [1891] 2 Ch. 186, 233; followed in Re Wills' Trade Marks (1893), 10 R. P. C. 269, 274; [1893] 2 Ch. 262). The application of these cases has, however, been greatly restricted by the decision in Re Bass, Ratcliff and Gretton, Ltd.'s Registered Trade Marks (1902), 19 R. P. C. 544, C. A.; [1902] 2 Ch. 579; see also Benedictus v. Sullivan, Powell & Co. (1894), 12 R. P. C. 25, 31. Apparently, the fact that the trade mark offends against provisions of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 69), is not a ground of objection (Re Baker (Albert) & Co. (1908), Ltd.'s Application for a Trade Mark (1908), 25 R. P. C. 513, 524; [1908] 2 Ch. 86). A mark having the words "Imitations of this water will be prosecuted" was held deceptive, because it referred to imitations whether fraudulent or not (Re Apollinaris Co., Ltd.'s Registered Trade Marks, supra, at p. 161). The omission of non-essential words from the mark as used does not render the statement that it is a trade mark deceptive (Rouland v. Michel (1896), 14 R. P. C. 37, C. A.; [1897] 1 Ch. 71).

an application on these grounds may succeed the probability of deception must be substantial (p).

1290. It is also a ground for rectification that the mark was registered for goods without any bonâ fide intention to use it in connexion with such goods, or that in fact there has been no such bonâ fide user for the five years preceding the application (q).

The proprietor may meet the motion for rectification by showing that the non-user arose from special circumstances in the trade and not from intention not to use or to abandon the trade mark (r). On such a motion the mark may be expunged or the registration limited to certain goods (s). The fact that the mark is used with a slight alteration does not give ground for rectification (t).

In some cases the order limits the registration to certain goods (Re Edwards's Trade-mark, Edwards v. Dennis, supra; Re Suter, Hartmann and Rahjen's Composition Co., Ltd.'s Trade Marks, supra). In others specific goods are excluded (Re Hart's Registered Trade Mark, supra; Re Hare's Trade Mark, supra; Bowden Wire, Ltd. v. Bowden Brake Co., Ltd. (1912), 30 R. P. (s) Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15), s. 37. There are not many decisions showing the principles on which the court will limit the registration on the ground that the mark has only been used for certain goods in a class. It is clear that even the most extensive user can never cover all the goods in a class, and probably the court would be largely guided by considering whether the goods proposed to be excluded from the registration are so similar to those for which there has been user that no other person would be allowed to register the same mark for them; compare Re Edwards's Trade-mark, Edwards v. Dennis, supra; see also *Freeman Brothers v. Lapse of jurisdiction.

1291. After the expiration of seven years from the 11th August, 1905 (a), or from the registration of a trade mark, whichever date is the later, the only grounds on which the original registration of a trade mark can be attacked are that the registration was obtained by fraud or that the mark contains matter which is calculated to deceive or is otherwise disentitled to protection, or is contrary to law or morality, or is a scandalous design (b). There is no limit on the time for application where the original registration is not attacked, as in cases of non-user or wrongful transmission.

1292. The English courts have jurisdiction in all cases, and, as the registrar is a sufficient respondent, all that need be done in a case where a party is out of the jurisdiction is to inform such person that the motion will come on, and let him appear if he wishes (c).

SECT. 8.—Assignment of Trade Marks.

(b) Ibid., s. 41; Andrew (John H.) & Co., Ltd. v. Kuehnrich (1912), 30 R. P. C. 93; 29 T. L. R. 181. There was no limitation on the time at which an application could be made under the previous statutes (Re Edwards' Trade-mark, Edwards v. Dennis (1885), 30 Ch. D. 454, 476, C. A.), though the court was always unwilling to disturb an old mark; compare the cases cited in note (b), p. 715, ante. In Mousson & Co. v. Boehm (1884), 26 Ch. D. 398, the proprietor of an old (unregistered) mark had ceased to use it for some years and another person had registered it in good faith and used it largely for two years. The old mark was allowed to be registered, but rectification was refused. As to when a mark is disentitled to protection, see p. 689, ante.

(c) La Compagnie Générale d'Eaux Minérales et de Bains de Mer Trade Marks (1891), 8 R. P. C. 446, 450; [1891] 2 Ch. 451; Re King (Frederick) & Co.'s Trade Mark (1892), 9 R. P. C. 350, 366, C. A.; [1892] 2 Ch. 462; see also Trade Marks Rules, 1906, r. 9. The Irish courts have decided that they have not jurisdiction to order rectification (Bayer v. Connell Brothers & Co. (1897), 14 R. P. C. 275, 277; but see Re King (Frederick) & Co.'s Trade Mark, supra), but the Scotch courts claim this jurisdiction (Cowie Brothers & Co. v. Herbert (1897), 14 R. P. C. 436, 444; 24 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 361).

(d) Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15), s. 22; see also p. 756, post. Hence, if the goodwill ceases to exist owing to the trade in the goods being abandoned, the trade mark goes with it, and may be removed from the register (Pink v. Sharwood (J.A.) & Co., Ltd. (No. 2), Re Ord (Sidney) & Co.'s Trade Mark (1913), 135 L. T. Jo. 574). The right of the proprietor to assign the right to use the mark in any British possession or protectorate or foreign country, together with the goodwill of the business therein, is not affected (Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15), s. 22). Where the sole agents for sale in this country of certain goods registered a mark in their own name at the request of and for the benefit of the foreign manufacturers, it was held that an assignment to such manufacturers was valid (Re Wellcome's Trade Mark, Re Burroughs, Wellcome & Co.'s Trade Mark (1886), 3 R. P. C. 76; 32 Ch. D. 213; see also Re Greenlees' Trade Marks (1892), 9 R. P. C. 93). So, too, where manufacturers registered a mark in their own name which had been designed by certain customers, and was only used for goods made for them, an assignment to the customers was held good (Leahy, Kelly and Leahy v. Glover (1893), 10 R. P. C. 141, 143, 144, H. L.). Although the mark may be registered for all the goods in a assignment of such goodwill^(e) or with any devolution of the goodwill^(f). In the case of a dissolution of partnership the partners may submit a scheme for the apportionment of the trade marks, which the registrar may permit subject to any modifications necessary in the public interest^(g). Associated trade marks can only be assigned as a whole^(h). Assignments and transmissions are to be entered on the register⁽ⁱ⁾.

SECT. 8.

SECT. 9.—Legal Proceedings.

1294. An action for the infringement of a trade mark must be brought in the High Court^(k). It is unnecessary to give any notice to the defendant before action, since the cause of action does not depend on any fraudulent motive on his part, but is for the enforcement of a legal right^(l). An entry in the register, which may be proved by a certified copy, is prima facie evidence of the validity of the original registration and of all subsequent assignments and transmissions^(m). Most of the grounds upon which rectification may be sought are open by way of defence, since the proprietor's rights are dependent on the validity of the registration⁽ⁿ⁾, so that it will generally be unnecessary for the defendant to move to rectify^(o). The defendant may class, an assignee apparently only gets an assignment for those goods in which there was actually goodwill (Re Edwards' Trade-mark, Edwards v. Dennis (1885), 30 Ch. D. 454, 470, C. A.). The assignment of a reversion of the goodwill may be sufficient (Re Magnolia Metal Co.'s Trade Marks (1897), 14 R. P. C. 621, 630, C. A.; [1897] 2 Ch. 371). As to an assignment being held bad as being in gross, see Pinto v. Badman (1891), 8 R. P. C. 181, 191, C. A.; 7 T. L. R. 317; see also Johnson's (M. A.) Trade Marks (1909), 26 R. P. C. 195. As to an assignment being held good, see Hammond & Co. v. Malcolm Brunner & Co. (1892), 9 R. P. C. 301; 8 T. L. R. 324. (k) Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15), s. 69; where the registration may be applied for in the Manchester Branch of Trade Marks Registry, the Palatine Court of Lancaster also has jurisdiction (ibid., s. 71); see pp. 685, 707, ante. An action for infringement cannot be brought in the county court (Bow v. Hart (1905), 22 R. P. C. 222, C. A.; [1905] 1 K. B. 592); but possibly the new legal rights conferred by the Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15), s. 39, may render this decision no longer applicable; compare note (u), p. 720, post; see also title COUNTRY COURTS, Vol. VIII., pp. 431, 432; and note (l), p. 743, post.

also rely on a concurrent right of user (p), or a user prior to that of the plaintiff (q), or on the fact that the mark is used deceptively by the plaintiff (r). The cause of action is not extinguished by the death of the proprietor of the trade mark (s).

1295. An infringement of a valid mark, whether committed innocently or not, generally gives the plaintiff the right to an injunction (t); but an infringer is apparently only liable to damages or an account of profits from the time when he was aware of the plaintiff's registration (u), and the fact that the mark is on

(p) Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15), ss. 20, 21; Boord & Son v. Thom and Cameron, Ltd. (1907), 24 R. P. C. 697, 717; [1907] S. C. 1326; but, apparently, he should then apply for registration (ibid.).

(q) Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15), s. 41. It appears that such user must be earlier than the date of the plaintiff's registration (William's, Ltd. v. Massey, Ltd. (1911), 28 R. P. C. 512); compare Mouson & Co. v. Boehm (1884), 26 Ch. D. 398.

(r) Thus, where the plaintiff's mark referred to Havana cigars and it had been used on cigars not made in Havana, though of Havana tobacco, the action was dismissed (Newman v. Pinto (1887), 4 R. P. C. 508, 515, C. A.; 57 L. T. 31). Apparently, if the wrongful user has been discontinued, relief may be granted (Benedictus v. Sullivan, Powell & Co. (1894), 12 R. P. C. 25, 32). So, too, where the mark had on it "By Royal Letters Patent," and the patent had expired, the plaintiff failed (Cheavin v. Walker (1877), 5 Ch. D. 850, 862, C. A.); see also Re Boake (A.), Roberts & Co., Ltd.'s Trade Marks, Boake (A.), Roberts & Co., Ltd. v. Wayland & Co. (1909), 26 R. P. It is otherwise where "patent" has become part of the name of the article or the word is not used so as to give the idea that the patent still exists (ibid.; see also Ransome v. Graham (1882), 51 L. J. (CH.) 897; Girdley v. Swinborne (1888), 5 T. L. R. 71; see also pp. 774, 775, post).

Where, however, an isolated act of a servant, without his principal's knowledge or authority, is alone proved, an injunction will not be granted (Leahy, Kelly and Leahy v. Glover (1893), 10 R. P. C. 141, H. L.; Kodak, Ltd. v. Grenville (1908), 24 L. T. Jo. 458). So, too, an act committed by inadvertence or in ignorance will not give ground for an injunction, if the defendant promptly admits the plaintiff's rights (Upman v. Elkan (1871), 7 Ch. App. 130); see also note (h), p. 772, post.

(u) This rule applied before the passing of the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 91) (Edelstein v. Edelstein (1863), 1 De G. J. & Sm. 185, 199), and was followed in Ellen v. Slack (1880), 24 Sol. Jo. 290 (Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 91)), and in Slazenger v. Spalding (A. G.) and Brothers, supra (Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15), where, however, it does not appear that attention was drawn to the fact that the Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15), is the first to give a statutory right to a monopoly of the mark; see Horsfield v. Walkden (John) & Co., Ltd. (1910), 28 R. P. C. 175, 178. In taking an account of profits the plaintiff is entitled to see the names of the defendant's customers (Powell v. Birmingham Vinegar Brewery Co., Ltd. (1896), 14 R. P. C. 1, C. A.; [1896] 2 Ch. 54). Where the mark is liable to deceive the ultimate purchaser, the account will not be restricted to cases where the retailer was deceived (Lever v. Goodwin (1887), 4 R. P. C. 492, 507, C. A.; 36 Ch. D. 41). As to the measure of damages, see Alexander & Co. v. Henry & Co. (1895), 12 R. P. C. 360; and see, generally, titles DAMAGES, Vol. X., pp. 331 et seq.; INJUNCTION, Vol. XVII., p. 259.

the register is not in itself notice (a). An order for the delivery up or destruction of the infringing articles or labels or erasure of the mark may also be made (b).

SECT. 9.
Legal Proceedings.

1296. In any legal proceeding in which the validity of a trade mark comes into question the court may certify to this effect, and if it so certifies, then, in any subsequent legal proceedings in which such validity comes into question, the proprietor, if successful, will have his costs as between solicitor and client, unless the court otherwise certifies (c). In all cases where the registrar appears his costs are in the discretion of the court, but he cannot be ordered to pay costs (d).

Certificate
as to validity.

SECT. 10.—Offences.

1297. It is a misdemeanour to make or cause to be made a false entry on the register or a document falsely purporting to be a copy of an entry in such register, or to produce or tender, or cause to be produced or tendered, in evidence any such writing, if the person knows the entry or writing to be false (e).

False entries.

It is an offence punishable by a fine not exceeding £5 to represent falsely a trade mark as registered. The wrongful use in connexion with a trade mark of the word "registered," or any words to the same effect, constitutes this offence (f).

(c) Trade Marks Act, 1906 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15), s. 46. It should be noted that this provision differs from the earlier Act and from the Patents and Designs Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 29), s. 35, in that it extends to other proceedings than actions, but is limited to cases where validity comes into question in both proceedings. A subsequent proceeding means one started after the certificate has been given (Automatic Weighing Machine Co. v. International Hygienic Society (1889), 3 R. P. C. 475, 480). There is no appeal against the grant of such certificate (Maslam v. Hall (1888), 5 R. P. C. 144, C. A.).

(d) Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15), s. 48. The general rule is that the unsuccessful party pays the registrar's costs. In the case of an application to register which is unsuccessfully opposed by the registrar, the latter usually gets his costs in the first court, but not necessarily in the Court of Appeal (Re California Fig Syrup Co.'s Application for the Registration of a Trade Mark (1909), 26 R. P. C. 846, 864, C. A.; [1910] 1 Ch. 130); Re Eastman Photographic Materials Co.'s Application for a Trade Mark (1898), 15 R. P. C. 487, H. L.; [1898] A. C. 571; Re Du Cros' (W. & G.), Ltd., Application for the Registration of a Trade Mark (1911), 29 R. P. C. 65, 78, C. A.). In Re Colman's (J. and J.) Application for a Trade Mark (1894), 11 R. P. C. 129, 137; [1894] 2 Ch. 115, the successful appellants were not ordered to pay the registrar's costs; see also Re Bagots, Hutton & Co., Ltd.'s Application for the Registration of a Trade Mark (1912), 29 R. (f) Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15), s. 67. The fact that the mark is registered abroad, and that there are words on the goods showing that they are of foreign manufacture, is no defence (Wright, Crossley & Co.

Royal Arms.

The wrongful use of the Royal Arms, or of any title or devices calculated to lead to the belief that the person is employed by or supplies goods to a member of the Royal Family, is punishable by a fine of £20 (g). An action for an injunction to restrain such use may also be brought by a person authorised to use such device or title or authorised by the Lord Chamberlain to bring the action (h).

Part II.—Compulsory Marks.

SECT. 1.—In General.

Statutory marks.

1298. There are certain statutes requiring the marking of particular articles. Among these are the following:—anchors (i), chain cables (k), foodstuffs, such as bread, margarine, coffee and chicory (l), gunbarrels (m), gunpowder (n), hops (o), Irish linen (p), plate (q), poisons (r), weights and measures (s).

There are also certain requirements imposed for revenue

T. 623; compare title INJUNCTION, Vol. XVII., pp. 258, 259. The right, if any, to use a trade mark containing such title or device is not affected by the Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15), s. 68; see also p. 698, ante.

Irish hand-woven linen, damask, cambric or diaper is to be marked with specified words; the omission or causing the omission of marking or the sale of goods falsely marked is an offence, the penalty for the first offence being a fine not exceeding £10, and for subsequent offences, a fine not exceeding £10 or imprisonment up to six months (ibid.). As to the stamping of Irish linen for exportation, see Linen (Trade Marks) Act, 1743 (17 Geo. 2, c. 30); Linen (Trade Marks) Act, 1744 (18 Geo. 2, c. 24). SECT. 2.—Gold and Silver Plate.

1299. From a very early date the standard and marking of gold and silver plate have been enforced by statute (d). The present state of the law is that gold plate may be either 9, 12, 15, 18 or 22 carat (e), and silver either 11 oz. 2 dwt. or 11 oz. 10 dwt. fine silver to the pound troy (f), and that all plate manufactured in this country must be marked with the appropriate marks. The method of and authorities for such marking are likewise settled by statute (g).

As to the marking of articles of foreign manufacture, see Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 36), ss. 42, 153; Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 28), s. 16; Merchandise Marks Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 31); and title FOOD AND DRUGS, Vol. XV., pp. 55, 56.

(b) Patents and Designs Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 29), s. 33. There is no compulsory marking in this case, but the omission to mark might afford a defence to a claim for damages.

(c) See p. 740, post.

(d) As to the history and present state of the law as to plate, see, further, Safford, Law of Merchandise Marks, pp. 204 et seq.

(e) Prior to 1575, gold ware had to be equal to "the touch of Paris" (19½ carat). By stat. (1575-6) 18 Eliz. c. 15, it had to be at least 22 carats (containing 22 parts of gold out of a mass of 24; see Murray, Oxford English Dictionary, sub voce Carat); by the Gold Plate (Standard) Act, 1798 (38 Geo. 3, c. 69), the 18 carat standard was also permitted, the marks for the two standards to be distinct. Lower standards not less than 8 carats might, by the Gold and Silver Wares Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 96), be fixed by Order in Council, and by an Order in Council dated 11th December, 1854, the 9, 12 and 15 carat standards were authorised (Stat. R. & O. Rev., Vol. X., Plate). The Gold and Silver Wares Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 96), applies former provisions as to marking, penalty for not marking etc., to plate of all these standards, and in addition provides penalties for marking plate of a lower standard as of a higher standard.

(f) Prior to 1575, silver plate was to be as fine as sterling. By stat. (1575-6) 18 Eliz. c. 15, the 11 oz. 2 dwt. standard was set up, and by stat. (1696-7) 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 8, the standard was raised to 11 oz. 10 dwt. By the Plate Duty Act, 1719 (6 Geo. 1, c. 11), both these standards were authorised, different marks being prescribed.

(g) Stat. (1423) 2 Hen. 6, c. 17 (silver); stat. (1696-7) 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 8 (silver); stat. (1700-1) 12 & 13 Will. 3, c. 4 (silver); stat. (1702) 1 Anne, c. 3 (silver); Plate Duty Act, 1719 (6 Geo. 1, c. 11) (silver); Plate (Offences) Act, 1738 (12 Geo. 2, c. 26), ss. 1, 5 (penalty of £10 for selling, exporting etc. gold and silver articles not up to standard or not marked), applied by Gold Plate (Standard) Act, 1798 (38 Geo. 3, c. 69) to 18 carat standard; Plate (Offences) Act, 1738 (12 Geo. 2, c. 26) (Newcastle marks); Plate Assay (Sheffield and Birmingham) Act, 1772 (13 Geo. 3, c. 52) (Sheffield and Birmingham marks); Gold and Silver Wares Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 96) (9, 12 and 15 carat standards). The marks are the maker's mark, the assay marks denoting the standard and the place where assay took place, and the year mark; see stat. (1696-7) 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 8; stat. (1700-1) 12 & 13 Will. 3, c. 4. The King's head is no longer necessary, since the duty on plate has been

SECT. 2. The counterfeiting of these marks is a felony (h). These regulations apply generally to all gold and silver ware, but certain articles are excepted (i).

Gold and Imported

plate.

Imported plate, not being battered (a), or plate that would not be exempt from marking if made in this country, must be marked on entry, and if it is not up to the proper standard will not be allowed to be brought into this country (a). An exception is made in the case of plate declared to be for private use and not for sale, but such plate must be assayed and marked before it is sold; if it is then found to be below standard it may be treated as foreign plate brought for assay on importation and sent out of the country (b).

Watch cases.

1300. Any person bringing watch cases for assay must make a declaration where they were made, and if the cases are foreign-made a distinguishing mark is put on them (c). A watch contained in a case abolished; see stat. (1784) 24 Geo. 3, sess. 2, c. 53, s. 5 (now repealed); Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 8), s. 10. A declaration must now be made as to where plate was manufactured (Hall-marking of Foreign Plate Act, 1904 (4 Edw. 7, c. 6)). As to the marking of foreign plate before that Act, see Customs (Amendment) Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 56), s. 6; Customs Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 47), s. 59; Customs Tariff Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 35), s. 2. The marks of the various makers can be entered at any assay office, and their manufactures can be assayed at any office where such names are entered (Gold and Silver Wares Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 96), s. 2).

(h) Gold and Silver Wares Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict. c. 22), s. 2; see title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., pp. 758, 759; Forgery Act, 1913, (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 27), ss. 5 (4), 6, 8 (2) (a), 15, 16.

(i) The excepted goods are jewellers' works, namely, articles in which stones are set (other than mourning rings), jointed night earrings of gold or gold springs of lockets (Plate (Offences) Act, 1738 (12 Geo. 2, c. 26), s. 2), gold vessels etc. so richly chased that they cannot be assayed without injury, or gold articles (not weighing 10 dwt.) so small or thin that they cannot be marked, and certain other named articles (ibid., s. 6). The provisions of ibid., s. 6, with regard to silver ware were repealed by the Silver Plate Act, 1790 (30 Geo. 3, c. 31), s. 1, and fresh lists of exempted silver articles are set out by ibid., ss. 3—5, including articles under 5 dwt. (with certain exceptions), tipplings, swages or mounts under 10 dwt. (with certain exceptions), and certain other articles, including chains and lockets. Wedding rings must now be marked (Wedding Rings Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 60)). An article liable to be stamped does not cease to be so liable because something is added; thus, a gold match-box must be stamped, although it has an enamel top (Fabergé v. Goldsmiths' Co., [1911] 1 Ch. 286, 295), though, apparently, a mere gold foundation for enamel need not be (ibid.). Watches in watch bracelets must be marked (ibid., at p. 297).

(a) Customs Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 47), s. 59; Revenue Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 55), s. 10. Watch cases imported from abroad before the 1st June, 1907, are exempted from these provisions (Assay of Imported Watch Cases (Existing Stocks Exemption) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 8), s. 1). By the Revenue Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 62), s. 4, hand-chased inlaid bronze or filigree work of Oriental pattern is excepted. Foreign plate has a distinctive mark "F" put thereon (Customs Tariff Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 35), s. 2). As to the effect of these Acts, see Goldsmiths' Co. v. Wyatt, [1907] 1 K. B. 95, C. A.; Fabergé v. Goldsmiths' Co., supra, at p. 294. Watch cases containing watches must be presented for assay (Goldsmiths' Co. v. Wyatt, supra).

marked as made in a particular country is deemed to be made there also (d), unless the contrary is stated as provided by the statute (c).

1301. It is an offence to put letters or other marks likely to be confused with plate marks on articles resembling silver (f). A special exception is made in the case of persons carrying on business within 100 miles of Sheffield, who may mark such goods in certain specified ways (g).

Part III.—False Marks and False Trade Descriptions.

1302. The seller of any goods to which a trade mark, or mark, or trade description has been applied is deemed to warrant that such mark is genuine and not forged or falsely applied, or that such trade description is not a false trade description, unless the contrary is expressed in some writing signed by him or on his behalf and delivered at the time of the sale or contract to and accepted by the buyer (h).

It is an offence to put or cause to be put any word or mark indicating quality on metal buttons, or any word or mark whatever on the under side of such buttons, unless the buttons are gilt, as provided, the penalty being £5 for a quantity less than one gross, and £1 for every gross after the first and forfeiture (ibid., s. 2).

Only articles of cutlery forged or made by means of the hammer may be marked with a hammer, the penalty being £5 per dozen articles and forfeiture, a similar penalty being imposed for false marks of quality (ibid., s. 4). For falsely marking articles "London" or "London Made" the penalty is £10 per dozen articles and forfeiture (ibid., s. 5).

Part IV.—Designs.

SECT. 1.—Protection of Designs.

protection.

1303. The law as to the protection of designs is of purely statutory origin. Before 1883 there were two statutes of importance in force, the one dealing with purely artistic designs, the other with designs for the shape or configuration of articles of utility (a). Both of these statutes, with the amending enactments, were replaced in 1883 by the Patents, Designs and Trade Marks Act, 1883 (b), which, in its turn, was replaced in 1907 by the Patents and Designs Act, 1907 (c).

"Design."

"Design" means any design, not being a design for a sculpture or other thing within the protection of the Sculpture Copyright Act, 1811 (d), applicable to any article, whether the design is applicable for the pattern, or for the shape and configuration, or for the

with a red rose and a blue rose; articles "wooded" black throughout are to be marked with a blue rose only, the penalty for improper use of marks being £4 per piece (Dyeing Trades (Frauds) Act, 1783 (23 Geo. 3, c. 15), s. 3).

(m) Linen (Trade Marks) Act, 1743 (17 Geo. 2, c. 30), ss. 1, 2; Linen (Trade Marks) Act, 1744 (18 Geo. 2, c. 24), s. 3. The penalty for erasure of marks or false marking of linen made in Ireland is £5 per piece (ibid.).

(n) Fabrics (Misdescription) Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 17). It is an offence to sell or to have in possession for the purposes of sale any textile fabric or article made thereof described verbally or otherwise as non-inflammable unless it conforms with the standard to be prescribed by regulations, the penalty for a first offence being £10, and for each subsequent offence £50 (ibid., s. 1). The burden is on the person found with the fabric to show that it is not for sale (ibid., s. 4). If the defendant has bought from a person resident within the United Kingdom who has sold under a warranty, and has taken reasonable steps to ascertain the truth of and in fact believed the statements contained therein, he may lay an information against such person and is exempt from any fine (ibid., s. 3).

(o) See title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 513; Forgery Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 27), ss. 3 (2) (e), (3) (e), 4, 5 (4), 6, 8 (1) (e), 15, 16.

(b) 46 & 47 Vict. c. 57.

(d) 54 Geo. 3, c. 56; repealed by the Copyright Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 46); as to the designs referred to, see title COPYRIGHT AND LITERARY PROPERTY, Vol. VIII., p. 206.

ornament thereof, or for any two or more of such purposes, and by whatever means it is applicable, whether by printing, painting, embroidering, weaving, sewing, modelling, casting, embossing, engraving, staining or any other means whatever, manual, mechanical or chemical, separate or combined (e).

SECT. 1.
Protection of Designs.

"Article" means, as respects designs, any article of manufacture (f), and any substance, artificial or natural, or partly artificial and partly natural (g):

"Article."

"Copyright" means the exclusive right to apply a design to any article in any class in which the design is registered (h):

"Copyright."

"Proprietor of a new and original design" (1) where the author (i) of the design, for good consideration (k), executes the work for some other person, means the person for whom the design is so executed (l); and (2) where any person acquires the design or the right to apply (m) the design to any article, either exclusively of any other person or otherwise (n), means in respect of and to the extent in and to which the design or right has been so acquired, the person by whom the design or right is so acquired (o); and (3) in any other case means the author of the design (p); and where the property

(e) Patents and Designs Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 29), s. 93. This definition differs from that in the Copyright Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 100), by the omission of the words "the ornamenting of" before "any article." As to the meanings to be attached to shape, configuration etc., see note (b), p. 734, post.

(f) Samples bearing the design are articles of manufacture; see note (i), p. 740, post.

(g) Patents and Designs Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 29), s. 93.

(h) Ibid.

(i) The question who is the author is determined on the same principle as the question who is the first and true inventor in the case of patents; see title PATENTS AND INVENTIONS, Vol. XXII., pp. 130 et seq. It is the person who substantially originated the idea of the new design, though he may have discussed it with others and they may have suggested small improvements (Re Pearson's (Frederick) Designs, Pearson v. Morris Wilkinson & Co. (1906), 23 R. P. C. 738, 743); but where the only new feature is suggested to the applicant by another person, the applicant is not the author (Doble v. Spaendonck (1910), 27 R. P. C. 440).

(k) The giving of an order for the article to which the design is applied is not sufficient to transfer the rights in the design (Doble v. Spaendonck, supra, at p. 450).

(m) A contract for the purchase of goods, even if it gives the sole right of purchase, is not enough, since it does not give the purchaser the right to apply the design (Jewitt v. Eckhardt (1878), 8 Ch. D. 404; Re Guiterman's Registered Design (1885), 55 L. J. (CH.) 309; Wagley v. Broad (1892), 9 R. P. C. 208; [1892] 1 Q. B. 806; see also Doble v. Spaendonck, supra; Lazarus v. Charles (1873), L. R. 16 Eq. 117). In Jewitt v. Eckhardt, supra, JESSEL, M.R., was of opinion that there could be no transmission of rights before registration, except, of course, where the work was executed by the author for some other person for good consideration, and that all assignments must be in writing; but this last point was partly based on words in the Copyright Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 100), not occurring in the Patents and Designs Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 29). Compare title PATENTS AND INVENTIONS, Vol. XXII., pp. 183, 184.

(n) This would seem clearly to include a license; see, however, Woolley v. Broad, supra.

in, or the right to apply, the design has devolved from the original proprietor upon any other person, includes that other person (q).

SECT. 2.—The Register of Designs.

1304. A register of designs is kept at the Patent Office (r), in which the names of proprietors, notices as to transmissions of interest, and licences are entered (s). Any person aggrieved by any error in the registration or by any wrongful entry therein or omission therefrom may apply to the court to rectify the register (t).

This power is especially important in the case of designs, and it is a common mode of challenging validity (u). The Comptroller (a) has also power to rectify any clerical error in the representation of a design or in any matter entered in the register (b).

1305. For a period of five years from the registration of the design in the case of designs registered in the textile classes (c), and two years in other classes, a design is open to inspection only by the proprietor or by a person authorised in writing by him or the Comptroller or the court (d). If, however, the application for the registration of a design is refused on the ground of identity with a design already registered, the applicant is entitled to inspect the former registration (e). Means are also provided for a person to ascertain whether a particular design is registered and in respect of what goods (f).

(q) Patents and Designs Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 29), s. 93.

(t) Patents and Designs Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 29), s. 93.

(u) The expression "any person aggrieved" is widely interpreted (see pp. 714, 715, ante), and generally includes any person who is or probably might be injured or affected by the error, entry, or omission in question. A person who has registered the same design even in another class is such a person (Re Read and Gresswell's Design (1889), 6 R. P. C. 471; 42 Ch. D. 260). Where an agent had by mistake registered the design in his own name, rectification by the substitution of the principal's name was ordered (Werner Motors, Ltd. v. Gamage (A. W.), Ltd. (1903), 21 R. P. C. 137; Re Grocott's Design (1899), 17 R. P. C. 139). Rectification was also ordered where a company had changed its name (Re Pneumatic Tyre Co.'s Registered Designs (1894), 11 R. P. C. 636). The applicant must give particulars of the objections to the validity of the design. The respondent is not required to give the grounds on which he proposes to support the registration (Re Bayer's Design (1906), 23 R. P. C. 553, 557, C. A.). As to the procedure where the respondent is resident out of the jurisdiction, see Re Cook and Bernheimer Co.'s Design (1913), 30 R. P. C. 407.

1306. A design may be registered which is new or original (g), irrespective of whether the end sought by such novelty or originality be beauty or utility, or a combination of the two (h). There is no statutory definition of the terms “new” or “original” (i), and it is a question of fact in each case whether a design comes within these terms. There are, however, certain general rules to be deduced from the decisions of the courts which assist in arriving at a conclusion on this question.

“New” or “original.”

It must be remembered that a design is not, properly speaking, for the article itself, but for something capable of being applied to such article (k). In the case of a design for shape this distinction is chiefly a matter of words (l), but in other cases it may be of importance, since questions of novelty and infringement have to be determined not merely by looking at the design as shown in the drawing lodged with the application, but also by considering how its appearance would be affected by alterations in the shape of the article to which it is applied (m).

Purpose of design.

1307. The design must therefore be considered as applied to the articles for which it is registered, and valid registration may be obtained for the application of a design such as a picture to certain articles, although the picture itself is old (n). The use for one class of materials or articles of a design which has previously been

Comptroller as to whether the existing registration covers the design submitted would not affect the result of an action for infringement.

(g) Patents and Designs Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 29), s. 49 (1). It should be noted that in ibid., s. 50 (see notes (r), (s), p. 733, post), the phrase is “new and original.”

(h) See note (i), p. 732, post.

(i) It is probably not possible to distinguish clearly between these terms, but it would seem that the first is the more comprehensive, and that a design may be “new” although it is not “original”; see Sherwood and Cotton v. Decorative Art Tile Co. (1887), 4 R. P. C. 207; Re Hollason's Registered Design (1897), 14 R. P. C. 909, C. A.; Hutchison, Main & Co., Ltd. v. St. Mungo Manufacturing Co. (1907), 24 R. P. C. 265. Of course, if this interpretation is accepted, it makes “original” mere surplusage. In Re Morton's Design (1899), 17 R. P. C. 117, FARWELL, J., at p. 121, doubted whether there is in fact any distinction.

(k) Dover, Ltd. v. Nürnberger Celluloidwaren Fabrik Gebrüder Wolf (1910), 27 R. P. C. 498, 503, C. A.; [1910] 2 Ch. 25; *Re Clarke's Registered Design, Clarke v. (l) Re Clarke's Registered Design, Clarke v. Julius Saxe & Co., Ltd., supra.

(m) Re Bayer's Design, Bayer v. Symington (R. & W. H.), supra. From the judgments in this case it appears that a design must be something capable of application to different articles, and that the method of such application should sufficiently appear from the drawing and description.

used for another will, however, only be considered new or original if these materials or articles are of a different class (o), and not if they are analogous (p).

1308. Although a design may in some cases incidentally protect a mode of manufacture, yet registration cannot be granted for a mode of manufacture in itself (q). If what is registered, however, has the requisites of a novel and original design, it is no objection that it could also have been protected by letters patent (r), or that it is in fact protected by letters patent granted to the proprietor, provided that there has been no prior publication (s).

figure, which may itself be common to the world, in such a manner as to render it applicable to an article of manufacture" (Saunders v. Wiel (1892), 10 R. P. C. 29, C. A., per BOWEN, L.J., at p. 33; [1893] 1 Q. B. 470. It seems, however, from the judgments in this case that if the design is novel as applied to the articles for which it is registered and analogous articles, the court requires little, if any, ingenuity in the adaptation.

(o) Re Clarke's Registered Design, Clarke v. Julius Saxe & Co., Ltd. (1896), 13 R. P. C. 351, C. A.; [1896] 2 Ch. 38. The word "class" here does not refer to the classes into which articles are divided under the Designs Rules, but to the nature of the articles etc. (ibid.; Re Read and Gresswell's Design (1889), 6 R. P. C. 471; 42 Ch. D. 260; Re Bach's Design (1889), 6 R. P. C. 376; 42 Ch. D. 661).

(p) The following are examples, actual or suggested, where materials or articles were not considered analogous and the design would therefore be capable of registration:—A design for a kitchen range fire-door having a moulding on the top, which, in assisting draught, fulfilled a function in no way analogous to anything in its former use, although similar mouldings on doors for cabinet and other purposes were old (Walker, Hunter & Co. v. Falkirk Iron Co. (1887), 4 R. P. C. 330; 14 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 1072; Hecla Foundry Co. v. Waller, Hunter & Co. (1889), 6 R. P. C. 554, H. L.; 14 App. Cas. 550); a coal scuttle and a bonnet (Re Clarke's Registered Design, Clarke v. Julius Saxe & Co., Ltd., supra, per LINDLEY, L.J., at p. 359); a design formerly used for sword blades for a pattern on silk or book edges (Dorer, Ltd. v. Nurnberger Celluloidware Fabrik (Gebrüder Wolff) (1910), 27 R. P. C. 498, C. A., per BUCKLEY, L.J., at p. 504; [1910] 2 Ch. 25). The following are examples, actual or suggested, where materials or articles were considered analogous, and the design, therefore, would not be registrable:—The application to bicycle handles of a pattern common to knife handles (Dorer, Ltd. v. Nurnberger Celluloidware Fabrik (Gebrüder Wolff), supra); the application to wall papers of a design used for tablecloths (ibid., per BUCKLEY, L.J., at p. 504); a design for a lamp-shade in glass similar to a former one in linen (Re Bach's Design, supra; see also Re Read and Gresswell's Design, supra); a design for an electric lamp similar to a design for a gas lamp (Re Clarke's Registered Design, Clarke v. Julius Saxe & Co., Ltd., supra); the use in perambulators of forms used in carriages (Simmons v. Mathieson & Co., Ltd. (1911), 28 R. P. C. 486, C. A.); the use for wrist bracelets of forms used for belts (Pearson & Sons v. Harris (D. B.) & Sons, Ltd. (1912), 29 R. P. C. 632).

(q) Re Bayer's Design, Bayer v. Symington (R. & W. H.) (1907), 25 R. P. C. 56, C. A. (corset with seams cut horizontally); Moody v. Tree (1892), 9 R. P. C. 333; 40 W. Riley Cycle Co., Ltd.* (1912), 29 R. P. C. 196; [1912] 1 Ch. 613; Pearson & Sons v. Harris (D. B.) & Sons, Ltd., supra.

A design cannot be considered as protecting a combination of movements of machinery used in its manufacture (t).

SECT. 3.
Registrable Designs.

1309. A design may be new or original though the parts of which it is composed are old (a); but it must not be understood that any two matters can be combined together and registered as a new design. Although the requirements for a valid combination are not as strict as in the case of patents, there must, as a general rule, be some artistic or other advantage from the combination besides that possessed by the parts separately (b). Again, it seems that omission of certain parts might also constitute novelty, but not where such omission is a mere result of a new use of the article (c).

Combinations.

1310. The court, while bearing in mind that the law of designs exists for the purpose of protecting innovations which do not involve the invention necessary for the subject-matter of letters patent (d), yet rightly considers that there must be some check on the hampering of industries which would result if every unimportant alteration of shape or pattern could become the subject of a monopoly (e). The court, therefore, requires that a design should show some new effect clearly distinguishable by the eye from what has gone before (f), and that the change should be such that some degree of real mental activity has been needed for its production (g).

Improvements.

The criteria on which the court acts differ, however, according as the improvement has or has not artistic merit. A new and agreeable artistic effect often defies analysis of its causes and the Artistic merit.

(b) It seems doubtful if there can be a registration for a combination of separate articles even where they contribute to one object; compare R. v. Bessell (1851), 16 Q. B. 810. In the following cases combinations were held registrable:—Heinrichs v. Bastendorff, supra (writing table, the various parts of which were old); Knowles (S.) & Co., Ltd. v. Bennett (John) & Sons (1895), 12 R. P. C. 137; Nevill v. Bennett (John) & Sons (1898), 15 R. P. C. 412. In the following cases combinations were held not registrable:—Hothersall v. Moore (1891), 9 R. P. C. 27 (combination of old red border with yellow chamouis leather centre); Lazarus v. Charles (1873), L. R. 16 Eq. 117 (combination of two old baskets to form double basket); Mulloney v. Stevens (1864), 10 L. T. 190 (three ribbons and a button, all considered old, combined into a badge; this, however, is a very doubtful case, and is overruled in part by Sgunders v. Wied (1892), 10 R. P. C. 29, C. A.; [1893] 1 Q. B. 470); see also Gramophone Co., Ltd. v. Magazine Holder Co. (1911), 28 R. P. C. 221, H. L.; 104 L. T. 259.

SECT. 3.

Increased

eye rightly appreciates it as something really different from what has gone before, without considering in what the distinction consists (h). When, however, the novelty of the design does not appeal to the sense of artistic pleasure (i), as in the case of a mere alteration of the shape of some article adopted for reasons of convenience, it is necessary to consider more closely in what the real difference consists, and in such a case the court requires some clearly marked and defined difference of the class that the eye can detect and remember (k).

The eye is the sole judge of the existence of a difference between a design and what has gone before (l), but in judging of the importance of that difference it would seem that other factors may properly be taken into account. Although increased utility is not a necessary ingredient of a novel design (m), it may be of assistance in showing that it is really new and distinct from what has gone before, since, had such variation in fact been obvious and needed no mental activity, the probability is that it would have been made before, and on account of its increased utility would have persisted (n).

(i) Of course, the protection given by the law as to the registration of designs is not confined to those possessing artistic merit; see, for example, the designs in question in Hecla Foundry Co. v. Walker, Hunter & Co. (1889), 6 R. P. C. 551, H. L.; 15 App. Cas. 550; Tyler & Sons v. Sharpe Brothers & Co. (1893), 11 R. P. C. 35; *Leatherics, Ltd. v. T. 289, must be considered as confined to the class of designs there in question. The Patents and Designs Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 29), covers the designs protected by the stat. (1843) 6 & 7 Vict. c. 65, which was intended solely for articles of utility; compare Windover v. Smith (1863), 32 Bear. 290, per ROMILLY, M.R., at p. 206.

There are dicta opposed to this view (see the cases cited in note (m), supra), but, with the possible exception of Re Clarke's Registered Design, Clarke v. Julius Saxe & Co., Ltd., supra, the remarks were directed rather to the non-essentiality of utility, or the point that the protection accorded to the design did not cover other designs attaining the same end, than to the exclusion of the considerations of utility on the question of substantial novelty; compare title PATENTS AND INVENTIONS, Vol. XXII., pp. 150 et seq., where substantial utility is considered some evidence of novelty and subject-matter; and see Heinrichs v. Bastendorff (1893), 10 R. P. C. 160, where the conduct of 1311. A registrable design must not have been published in the United Kingdom prior to registration (o), unless it is protected under certain international arrangements (p). The general rules as to what constitutes publication of a design resemble those respecting publication in regard to letters patent (q). The registration of a design in one class or its application to goods of the class for which it is registered does not, however, affect the permissibility or validity of a subsequent registration by the same proprietor of such a design in another class (r). A disclosure to another person in confidence or the publication of a design in breach of good faith, or in the case of textile designs the acceptance of a first and confidential order for goods, does not invalidate subsequent registration (s).

SECT. 4.—Construction of Designs.

1312. Before deciding the question of either novelty or infringement, the court has to decide what in fact the registration seeks to protect. In many cases the registration is effected by merely leaving a sample or representation of the design together with a statement of the articles for which it is registered. The difficulty, however, arises, as in the case of specifications of letters patent, that in order to show his design the applicant has usually to show matters which are not part of the design. It is therefore provided that he may leave with his application and drawing a short statement of what he claims as the essential features of his design (t).

the infringer in immediately copying the design from the plaintiff's catalogue into his own was held to show that he recognised its substantial novelty; Walker, Hunter & Co. v. Falkirk Iron Co. (1887), 4 R. P. C. 390, 14 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 1072; Heela Foundry Co. v. Walker, Hunter & Co. (1889), 6 R. P. C. 554, 11 L. J. 14 App. Cas. 550.

(p) See note (e), p. 736, post.

(q) See title PATENTS AND INVENTIONS, Vol. XXII., pp. 146 et seq. If even a single article has got into public use, it voids a subsequent registration (Leatheries, Ltd. v. Lycett Saddle and Motor Accessories Co., Ltd. (1909), 20 R. P. C. 166). It seems that registration of a design is not publication against a later design registered by the same proprietor, though the protection afforded by the later registration may be limited to the differences (Harper (J.) & Co., Ltd. v. Wright and Butler Lamp Manufacturing Co., Ltd. (1895), 12 R. P. C. 483, 491, C. A.; [1896] 1 Ch. 142; compare title PATENTS AND INVENTIONS, Vol. XXII., pp. 147, 148). It is otherwise if the first registration was by another person (Re Read and Gresswell's Design (1889), 6 R. P. C. 471; 42 Ch. D. 260). The fact that protection has been obtained by letters patent does not affect a subsequent registration (Werner Motors, Ltd. v. Gamage (A. W.), Ltd. (1904), 21 R. P. C. 621, C. A.; [1904] 2 Ch. 580).

(r) Patents and Designs Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 29), s. 50. The provision as to use is not confined to use by the proprietor.

(s) Ibid. Prior to the Act it was held that mere discussion with a probable customer did not void registration (Heinrichs v. Bastendorff (1893), 10 R. P. C. 160), but that where a traveller showed the design to customers and accepted an order, this voided subsequent registration (Winfield & Son v. Snow Brothers (1890), 8 R. P. C. 15; Blank v. Footman, Pretty & Co. (1888), 5 R. P. C. 653; 39 Ch. D. 678).

Principles
guiding the court.

Such a statement is often of the greatest value, since on the one hand it prevents the risk of the application being interpreted as for some feature which is old, and on the other it prevents the registration being confined to cases where non-essential details, only put in to show the real design properly, are also copied. This statement is analogous to the claim in letters patent, its real use being as a disclaimer of non-essential details (a). It very frequently takes the form of saying that the design is for shape or pattern or for both (b).

Whether the application is or is not accompanied by such a statement, the court, in order to interpret it, looks at it with the eye of a craftsman (c). Thus, in the absence of a specific statement to the contrary, an applicant is not assumed to claim as an essential detail something which is notoriously old (d). Nor is it assumed, unless stated, except in the case of some purely decorative designs (e), that he intends to confine himself to the particular shape or kind of common article on which his design is shown where the shape of such article has to be continually varied in practical use (f). Again, the limits of the variation which will not prevent an article from being an infringement are wider where the design is broadly new a statement if he thinks fit; see p. 735, post. This statement should be looked at to resolve any doubts as to what is sought to be protected (Walker, Hunter & Co. v. Falkirk Iron Co. (1887), 4 R. P. C. 390, 395; 14 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 1072); so, too, where there is more than one drawing, any doubtful point in one may be decided by reference to another (Varley v. Keighley Iron Works Society, Ltd. (1896), 14 R. P. C. 169). In interpreting the drawing the nature of the article must be taken into account (Re Rollason's Registered Design (1897), 14 R. P. C. 909, C. A.; 14 T. L. R. 71).

(a) See title PATENTS AND INVENTIONS, Vol. XXII., pp. 161 et seq.

(b) Two identical designs may be registered, one for pattern, one for shape, Re Pearson's (Frederick) Designs, Pearson v. Morris Wilkinson & Co. (1906), 23 R. P. C. 738. Where a design is registered for pattern and for shape, all that is protected is the combination (Harper (J.) & Co., Ltd. v. Wright and Butler Lamp Manufacturing Co., Ltd. (1895), 12 R. P. C. 483, C. A.; [1896] 1 Ch. 142; Re Manchester's Design, Manchester v. Umfreville & Son (1907), 24 R. P. C. 782). It is not, however, the object of the Patents and Designs Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 29), or the rules thereunder to draw a sharp distinction between shape, configuration etc., or to compel the applicant to elect between them (Re Rollason's Registered Design, Heath (Samuel) & Sons, Ltd. v. Rollason (1898), 15 R. P. C. 441, H. L.; 14 T. L. R. 478); and see note (e), infra.

(c) Varley v. Keighley Ironworks Society, Ltd. (1896), 14 R. P. C. 169; Re Rollason's Registered Design, Heath (Samuel) & Sons, Ltd. v. Rollason, supra.

(d) This applies whether novelty is disputed or not (Gramophone Co., Ltd. v. Magazine Holder Co. (1911), 28 R. P. C. 221, H. L.; 104 L. T. 259; Staples v. Warwick (1906), 23 R. P. C. 609, C. A.; Walker & Co. v. Scott (A. G.) & Co., Ltd. (1892), 9 R. P. C. 482). The court is not bound by an admission as to the novelty and originality of the design (Gramophone Co., Ltd. v. Magazine Holder Co., supra).

(e) See Re Rollason's Registered Design, Heath (Samuel) & Sons, Ltd. v. Rollason (1897), 14 R. P. C. 909, C. A., where the design was for a coffin plate, and LINDLEY, M.R., at p. 912, expressed the view that though the claim was for pattern only, the outline could not be left out of account, since it really formed part of the pattern.

(f) Re Bayer's Design (1906), 24 R. P. C. 65, C. A. A design is always to be considered as capable of being applied on a larger or smaller scale, if the than where it is a mere detailed modification of some older well-known design (g). Subject to these rules, the registration is presumed to be for the design as a whole and not for any special feature (h).

It is probable that in addition to these rules, which are merely amplifications of the statement that the design is to be considered with the eye of a craftsman, an interpretation favourable to the validity of the design would be adopted in case of real doubt (i). In an infringement action the same construction must be put on the design for the purposes of determining the issues of novelty and infringement, and by analogy in rectification proceedings evidence of what the proprietor has claimed to cover by the registration has been admitted against him (k).

SECT. 5.—Registration and Office Procedure.

1313. Any person claiming to be the proprietor (l) of a new or original design may apply to the Comptroller (m) for its registration for a particular class or classes of articles (n). The application must be accompanied by the proscribed number of representations or specimens (o). The applicant may, and if required by the Comptroller must, indorse on the application a short statement of the novelty which he claims for his design (p). The application is considered by the Comptroller, and in general a search is made. The Comptroller may then accept the application or, if he objects,

This rule that the design was primarily to be considered for the combination, and not for the separate parts, was not formerly clearly understood and adopted; see, for instance, Norton v. Nicholls (1859), 1 E. & E. 761, 765. A corresponding simplification of patent construction was brought about by the decision in Harrison v. Anderston Foundry Co. (1876), 1 App. Cas. 574, 577.

furnish the applicant with a statement of the objections, and give him an opportunity of being heard (q). An appeal lies to the Board of Trade against an unfavourable decision of the Comptroller (r). The Comptroller may refuse to accept any design which is contrary to law or morality (s), and where the names or portraits of living persons appear on the design may require their consent, or in the case of persons recently dead the consent of their legal representatives, before proceeding with the application (t). Words, letters, or numerals not of the essence of the design are to be removed from the application (a). If the design is accepted, it is to be entered on the register with the name of the applicant (b). An application must generally be completed within one year, or it will be deemed to be abandoned, but the Comptroller has certain powers of extension (c). Applications for designs in the textile classes are made to the Manchester branch, and entered in the Manchester register as well as the London register (d). Applications for a design under the statutory provisions giving priority to applicants in certain foreign countries and British possessions are made in the same manner as ordinary applications (e).

protection.

1314. The period of protection is five years in the first instance, but the proprietor (f) has the right to protection for a further five years on payment of a fee. At the end of these ten years the Comptroller may, if he thinks fit, grant protection for a further five years (g).

Cancellation of registra-

punishable.

1317. It is an offence to apply, for the purposes of sale, a registered design, or any fraudulent or obvious imitation of a registered design, to any article of the class for which it is registered, or cause to be applied, except with the licence or written consent of the registered proprietor, or to do anything with a view to enabling such design to be so applied (n). Knowledge of the existence of the registration is immaterial to the above offences (o). It is also an offence to publish or expose, or cause to be published or exposed, for sale any article knowing that the design or imitation has been applied without the consent of the proprietor of the design (p).

These provisions apply to articles either manufactured or sold within the realm (q) during the duration of the registration (r), and also to acts done within the realm with a view to the application of the design elsewhere (s).

1318. Once it has been ascertained what is really protected by the registration (t), the further question as to whether the defendant has copied this is to be decided by the eye alone (a). The court has to decide only whether the alleged infringement has the same shape or pattern, and must eliminate the question of the identity of function (b), since another design may have parts fulfilling the same functions without being an infringement. Small differences in detail do not necessarily prevent infringement (c), but generally speaking, if under normal conditions of user the eye would not confuse the two designs, there is no infringement (d). It is not an actionable imitation merely to take the idea suggested by the design, unless it worked out in the way protected by the registration (e).

SECT. 6.
Effects of Registration.

Infringement

The use of the phrase "fraudulent or obvious" would suggest that a less degree of similarity will suffice if the defendant has been guilty of bad faith (f). It is not, however, sufficient to show bad Mala fides.

(f) Sherwood and Cotton v. Decorative Art Tile Co. (1887), 4 R. P. C. 207, where an attempt was made to define the difference between "fraudulent" and "obvious." Wright and Butler Lamp Manufacturing Co., Ltd.*, supra, it was held that where the defendants had given their designer the plaintiffs' article and told him to make an original design like it, this was strong evidence of an actionable imitation. In Demartial & Co. v. Booth (1892), 9 R. P. C. 499, it was held that the burden on the plaintiffs to prove the bad faith necessary to establish fraudulent imitation was not shifted by proof of the defendant having had the plaintiffs' article before he produced his own; contra, *Sherwood and Cotton v. faith, unless the defendant has imitated some feature which is protected by the registration (g).

SECT. 7.—Duties of the Proprietor.

Specimens.

1319. Before delivery on sale of any articles bearing the registered design the proprietor must furnish the Comptroller with the prescribed number of exact representations or specimens, if this has not been done previously. In the event of failure to do this the Comptroller may cancel the registration (h).

Marking of articles.

The proprietor must also cause each article before delivery on sale to be marked in the prescribed way to show that it is registered (i). It is sufficient if each article sold by him is marked, although it may be of such a nature that it will be subsequently divided up for retail sale (k); but where the article consists of a set of other articles, although made in one piece, each of these* must be marked (l). Where several pieces are necessary to make one complete article it is sufficient if the mark be put on one (m), but whether the complete article consists of one or several pieces, it is necessary that the mark be put on that part of the article for which the design is registered (n). If the proper mark is on the article, it

(g) Sackett and Barnes v. Clozenberg (1909), 27 R. P. C. 104; Cooper v. Symington (1893), 10 R. P. C. 264, 268.

(h) Patents and Designs Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 29), s. 54 (1) (a). As to these representations, see Designs Rules, 1908, rr. 20—29. Unless the Comptroller cancels the registration it does not appear that any other person can rely on the proprietor's failure in this respect as an objection to the registration, nor is there any means for compelling the Comptroller to exercise his powers.

(i) Patents and Designs Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 29), s. 54 (1) (b). The prescribed mark is the word "registered" or either of the abbreviations "Regd." or "Rd.," and (except in the case of lace or printed or woven designs) the number of the design (Designs Rules, 1908, r. 68). A small irregularity in the words used has been held not to constitute non-marking (Heitrichs v. Bastendorff (1893), 10 R. P. C. 160, 164 (use of "Regd." instead of "Rd." which was then the prescribed form)). This provision applies to a sale even in an unfinished condition (Woolley v. Broad (1892), 9 R. P. C. 429, 434, C. A.; [1892] 1 Q. B. 806), or a sale by a licensee of the proprietor, or by former proprietors (Wedekind v. General Electric Co., Ltd. (1897), 14 R. P. C. 190), even, apparently, if such sale be to the proprietor himself (ibid.). A sale made or concurred in by one of two joint proprietors is within the provision (ibid.). The requirements as to marking apply to sale abroad (Sarasin v. Hamel (No. 2) (1863), 32 Beav. 151); and to a sale of patterns bearing the design (Heywood v. Potter (1853), 1 E. & B. 439); but not to the sale of a book containing illustrations of the design (Branchardiere v. Elvery (1849), 4 Exch. 380).

(k) Blank v. Footman, Pretty & Co. (1888), 5 R. P. C. 653; 39 Ch. D. 678 (trimming sold in lengths of 144 yards, mark on wrapping of the article held sufficient).

(l) Hothersall v. Moore (1891), 9 R. P. C. 27 (dusters sold in squares of twelve).

(m) Fielding v. Hawley (1883), 48 L. T. 639 (butter dish); Ingram and Kemp, Ltd. v. Edwards Brothers (1904), 21 R. P. C. 463, 468 (lamp bracket having a separate cup on which the mark was placed).

(n) Re Morton's Design (1899), 17 R. P. C. 117, 122 (registered design for shank of cuff link, mark on plate held insufficient); Le's and Perrins v. Price & Son (1904), 22 R. P. C. 122, 128 (registered design for top of lamp, mark on ring at base held insufficient).

is no objection that there are other marks also, unless these were put on for fraudulent purposes (o). The Board of Trade may in certain cases modify or dispense with the requirements as to marking for special trades or industries (p). If it is shown that the regulations as to marking have not been complied with (q), then the plaintiff in an action for infringement is not entitled to recover either penalty or damages (r), unless he can show either that the proprietor (s) had taken all proper precautions to ensure the marking of articles (a), or that the infringer at the time of the acts complained of knew or had received notice that the design was registered (b).

SECT. 7.
Duties
of the Proprietor.

SECT. 8.—Legal Proceedings.

1320. In the case of infringement the registered proprietor of a design may bring an action (1) to recover a penalty not exceeding £50 for each case of contravention and not exceeding £100 in all courses.

Alternative

(o) Harper (J.) & Co., Ltd. v. Wright and Buller Lamp Manufacturing Co., Ltd. (1895), 12 R. P. C. 483, C. A.; [1896] 1 Ch. 142.

(q) Ibid., s. 54 (1) (b). A single breach of the provisions as to marking is sufficient to bring on the proprietor the disabilities imposed by this provision. Presumably this duty to mark cannot apply to sales before registration in the case of an application under the International Convention; see note (e), p. 736, ante.

(r) It should be noted that the cause of action or right to an injunction or delivery up is not affected. Nothing is said as to the right to an account of profits.

(s) "Proprietor" is defined as including an assignee (see p. 727, ante), but here seems to be used in a composite sense, since the meaning clearly is that the plaintiff must show that the proprietor at the time when the unmarked articles were sold took all proper precautions to ensure their marking. This view is supported by Wedekind v. General Electric Co., Ltd. (1897), 14 R. P. C. 180 (see note (i), p. 740, ante), but this case is not quite decisive, since a failure to comply with the regulations as to marking under the Act then in force immediately determined the copyright, and of course no subsequent assignment could revive it.

(a) Whether or not he has done so is a question of fact in each case (Johnson v. Bailey (1893), 11 R. P. C. 21). General instructions that articles should be marked may not be sufficient, unless there is some proper method of checking whether such instructions have been carried out (ibid., where there was no such check, and the marks which were impressed on the moulds became worn so that some of the articles were not properly marked, and this was held sufficient to void the registration). Where a licence is granted, the proprietor should insert a clause binding the licensee to mark the articles (Wedekind v. General Electric Co. Ltd., supra). But where the proprietor had provided the manufacturer with a proper die and the latter had in a few cases used another die, it was held that the proprietor had taken proper precautions (Wittman v. Oppenheim (1884), 27 Ch. D. 260). The same principle was applied where a workman had in error got one figure out of six wrong in the marking of a few articles (Re Rollason's Registered Design, Heath (Samuel) & Sons, Ltd. v. Rollason (1898), 15 R. P. C. 441, H. L.; 14 T. L. R. 478).

(b) What constitutes notice would be a question of fact. Probably if it could be shown that the infringer had actually seen articles which were properly marked, this would be sufficient; compare title PATENTS AND INVENTIONS, Vol. XXII., p. 211.

SECT. 8.
Legal Proceedings.

in respect of any one design (c), or (2) for an injunction and damages (d). He cannot, however, sue for both, but must elect in his statement of claim as to the remedy for which he proposes to ask (e).

The practice closely resembles that in patent actions (f), but where a penalty is sought interrogatories are not allowed (g).

(c) Patents and Designs Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 29), s. 60 (2). A less sum may be awarded than £50 (Lee and Perrins v. Price & Son (1904), 22 R. P. C. 122, 128; Bouslead v. Dempster, Moore & Co., Ltd. (1907), 25 R. P. C. 121; Oliver & Co. v. Thornley & Co. (1896), 13 R. P. C. 490). On the other hand, in Rivett v. Grimshaw (1894), 11 R. P. C. 351, 354, the jury was directed to find for the plaintiff for two penalties of £50 each. A penalty can be recovered even where there has been no actual sale (Oliver & Co. v. Thornley & Co., supra).

(d) Patents and Designs Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 29), s. 60 (2). It should be noted that while the first remedy is confined to the registered proprietor, the second is open to any proprietor, which term is not necessarily confined to persons whose title is registered; see p. 727, ante. As the term "proprietor" clearly includes licensee, it would seem that a licensee could sue, though this was doubted in Woolley v. Broad (1892), 9 R. P. C. 208; [1892] 1 Q. B. 806. The cases in regard to patents are not pertinent on this point, as the right to bring an action for infringement of a design is solely statutory, while in the case of patents it is a common law right; see title PATENTS AND INVENTIONS, Vol. XXII., p. 128. As to the right of non-registered owners to sue, compare ibid., p. 214. Nothing is said as to the right to an account of profits, but as this remedy is auxiliary to an injunction, it is probably open to the plaintiff to elect to take it. The proper form of injunction is against "infringing the design," not the "design or any part of it," since the registration only protects the whole (Harper (J.) & Co., Ltd. v. Wight and Butler Lamp Manufacturing Co., Ltd. (1895), 12 R. P. C. 483, 490, C. A.; [1896] 1 Ch. 142); where the registration is for shape only or for pattern only, the injunction may be limited accordingly (Re Manchester's Design, Manchester v. Umfreville & Son (1907), 24 R. P. C. 782), though this would seem unnecessary. In McRae v. Holdsworth (1848), 2 De G. & Sm. 496, 499, an injunction was granted against making as well as against selling, but this would seem to be wrong, as it is not unlawful to make for private use. Where the novelty of the design is disputed, an interim injunction will not generally be granted (Whitelock v. Automatic Phonograph Co. (1908), 25 R. P. C. 615; compare title PATENTS AND INVENTIONS, Vol. XXII., p. 220). An order for the delivery up of the articles complained of can also be made even where a penalty is claimed (Oliver & Co. v. Thornley & Co., supra). An injunction may also be granted in an action for a penalty (Cooper v. Whittingham (1880), 15 Ch. D. 501). As to injunctions generally, see title INJUNCTION, Vol. XVII., pp. 197 et seq.; as to damages generally, see title DAMAGES, Vol. X., pp. 301 et seq.

(e) Asilo (Titus), Ltd. v. Mansfield (1905), 22 R. P. C. 356.

(f) See title PATENTS AND INVENTIONS, Vol. XXII., pp. 214 et seq. Thus, particulars of objections to validity are delivered, although there is no statutory provision or order to this effect, and where it is suggested that some other person than the proprietor was the author the name should be given (Doble v. Spaendonck (1910), 27 R. P. C. 440). In general, leave to amend these particulars is given on the same terms as in patent cases (Morris, Wilson & Co. v. Coventry Machinists Co., Ltd. (1891), 8 R. P. C. 353; [1891] 3 Ch. 418), though the judge has absolute discretion on this point (Woolley v. Broad (1892), 9 R. P. C. 429, C. A.; [1892] 2 Q. B. 317). A certificate of validity may be given, and this carries the usual consequences as to costs in any subsequent action (Patents and

(g) For note (g) see p. 743, post.

1321. The ordinary defences are a denial of infringement, a plea of leave and licence, or an attack on the validity of the registration (h). It seems doubtful whether this last point can properly be raised by way of defence, and whether it should not rather be sought by means of a motion for rectification of the register, but the former course has often been adopted (i). A defendant may now also plead that a design is used for manufacture wholly or mainly abroad (k).

SECT. 8.

ceedings.
Defences.

1322. There seems no doubt that the county courts have jurisdiction to entertain an action for infringement of a design (l), though they cannot give a certificate of validity (m) or entertain a motion for rectification (n). The Palatine Court of Lancaster has the full powers of the High Court except as to rectification (o). The Scottish and Irish courts seem to have full powers, including those of rectification (p).

Courts having jurisdiction.

Designs Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 29), s. 61; compare p. 721, ante; title PATENTS AND INVENTIONS, Vol. XXII., pp. 224, 225. The rules as to costs are also similar: where the plaintiff succeeds on the issue of novelty and the defendant on infringement, the costs may be apportioned (Birkin & Co. v. Pratt, Hurst & Co., Ltd. (1895), 12 R. P. C. 371, 375); where, however, the defendant succeeds on one issue without a definite decision on the other, he gets the whole costs (Harper (J.) & Co., Ltd. v. Wright and Butler Lamp Manufacturing Co., Ltd. (1895), 12 R. P. C. 433, 438; [1895] 2 Ch. 593; see also Cooper v. Symington (1893), 10 R. P. C. 264, 268; Pugh v. Riley Cycle Co., Ltd. (1912), 29 R. P. C. 196, 206; [1912] 1 Ch. 613). The defendant in an infringement action or an applicant for rectification can generally obtain an order of the court for inspection of a design; compare Re Bayer's Design (1906), 23 R. P. C. 553, 557, C. A.

(g) Saunders v. Wiel (1892), 9 R. P. C. 459, C. A.; [1892] 2 Q. B. 321; Astle (Titus), Ltd. v. Mansfield (1905), 22 R. P. C. 356; compare title DISCOVERY, INSPECTION, AND INTERROGATORIES, Vol. XI., 41, 92 et seq.

(h) Generally on the ground of default of title, or lack of novelty or subject-matter, or that the applicant was not the author. In Hothersall v. Moore (1891), 9 R. P. C. 27, the objection that the design was registered in the wrong class was made and upheld, but the validity of such objection seems doubtful in view of the Patents and Designs Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 29), s. 49 (2), though these words also occurred in the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 47 (5).

(k) Patents and Designs Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 29), s. 58; see title PATENTS AND INVENTIONS, Vol. XXII., p. 217.

(l) This was actually done in Moody v. Tree (1892), 9 R. P. C. 333; 40 W. R. 558. The reason why a patent action cannot be so tried is because a patent is a franchise (R. v. Halifax County Court Judge (1891), 8 R. P. C. 338, C. A.; [1891] 2 Q. B. 263; see title COUNTY COURTS, Vol. VIII., pp. 431, 432; PATENTS AND INVENTIONS, Vol. XXII., p. 215, note (n)), and the reason why a trade mark action cannot be so tried is because at the passing of the early County Court Acts trade mark rights were purely equitable (Bow v. Hart (1905), 22 R. P. C. 222, C. A.; [1905] 1 K. B. 592); see, however, note (k), p. 719, ante. Neither of these considerations applies in the case of designs.

SECT. 8.
Legal Proceedings.
Threats.

1323. There is a statutory right of action on account of groundless threats, as in the case of patents (q). There is also a common law right of action if the threats have been made in bad faith and damage has resulted (r).

SECT. 9.—Assignments and Licences.

No special provisions.

1324. There are no special provisions as to assignments of or licences for registered designs, which apparently may be verbal or in writing (s), but to constitute a licence it is necessary that the right to apply the design should be given (t).

SECT. 10.—Offences.

offences.

1325. Certain offences connected with the register are made misdemeanours (u). It is also an offence, punishable summarily by a fine not exceeding £5, for a person falsely to describe a design applied to an article sold by him as registered, and the sale of an article bearing the word "registered," or other words implying that the design is registered, constitutes such offence. It is also an offence, punishable similarly, to put or cause to be put on an article any such words after the registration has expired (b).

Part V.—Trade Names and Passing Off.

SECT. 1.—In General.

Common law right.

1326. The only right the English law recognises in any name or mark other than a registered trade mark is the right of a person who uses such name or mark to prevent others using the same so as to deceive the public into thinking that the business carried on by such persons and the goods sold by them are his (c). The publication of a book of designs does not constitute a licence to use them (Blanchardiere v. Elvery (1849), 4 Exch. 380).

cases, however, this may amount to a practical prohibition of others using the name or mark (d).

SECT. 1.
In General.

1327. The cases of this class may be divided into those involving (1) the misuse of the trading name of a person or firm; (2) the misuse of the trade name of goods; and (3) the passing off of goods by means of get-up. In all these cases there is really but one question, namely, whether the defendant has knowingly (e) done that which would pass off other goods or another business as and for the goods or business of the plaintiff. In many cases the evidence can be conveniently divided into two separate heads, namely, the plaintiff's title to a name or get-up, and the defendant's infringement of that title; but these are not really separate issues, but classes of facts bearing on the one issue given above (f). The absence of any hard and fast line between the two branches of the plaintiff's case renders most of the so-called rules referred to hereafter—either as to what is a distinctive name or mark, or as to what constitutes infringement—merely secondary criteria for the guidance of the courts, of use doubtless in the majority of cases, but liable to modification in view of special circumstances, the plaintiff's cause of action depending on the combined effect of the distinctiveness of the indicia on which he relies and the nature of the defendant's acts. There is, therefore, an important distinction between these cases and those relating to trade marks, although of course both sprang from the same source, since in the case of trade marks the question of the plaintiff's title to the mark has been stereotyped by legislation, and has, therefore, to be treated separately. Further, in the case of trade marks, the question of the defendant's knowledge does not arise except on the question of what relief should be granted (g).

1328. Although the law only intervenes to prevent such names or marks being used so as to deceive, it is not necessary to show an actual fraudulent motive for the user (h). If the defendant originally knew of the plaintiff's claim to the name or mark, or if, having adopted such name or mark without knowledge of the plaintiff's use thereof, he has subsequently had the plaintiff's claim brought to his notice, and still continues his former conduct or challenges the plaintiff's rights, he is considered thenceforth as intending the natural consequences of his acts, and if such natural consequence is to deceive, he will then be restrained from continuing to use such name or mark (i). It seems that no action will lie for the use of an unregistered name or mark in ignorance of the plaintiff's prior use (j).

Though the proof of fraudulent motive is not a necessary element of the plaintiff's case, yet if he establishes such fraudulent motive, the court considers it as strong proof that the defendant's acts are such as illegitimately to affect the plaintiff's trade (k), and,

C. 27, 31; Yeatman v. Homberger & Co. (1912), 29 R. P. C. 561; 107 L. T. 43. There are, on the other hand, certain dicta which seem to imply that actual fraud is necessary; see Lery v. Walker (1879), 10 Ch. D. 436, C. A., per JAMES, L.J., at p. 447; Jamieson & Co. v. Jamieson (1898), 15 R. P. C. 169, C. A., per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., at p. 191; 14 T. L. R. 160. In Reddaway & Co. v. Bentham Hemp Spinning Co. (1892), 9 R. P. C. 503, C. A.; [1892] 2 Q. B. 639, LOPES, L.J., at p. 508, said that where there was actual fraudulent intention the plaintiff was entitled to at least nominal damages without proof of special damage.

C. 74; see also Humphries & Co. v. Taylor Drug Co. (1888), 5 T. L. R. 41. It seems clear from such cases as Millington v. Fox, supra; Burgess v. Hills (1858), 26 Beav. 244; Burgess v. Hately (1858), 26 Beav. 249; Upmann v. Elkan (1871), 7 Ch. App. 130; and the dicta in Maxwell v. Hogg, Hogg v. Maxwell (1867), 2 Ch. App. 307, 310; Wotherspoon v. Currie (1872), L. R. 5 H. L. 508, 521, that, prior to the existence of provisions for registration, the courts recognised rights of property in certain trade marks; thus, an infringement would give ground for relief in equity, even if the infringer had not had notice of the plaintiff's rights. But the right of action for the infringement of unregistered marks was taken away by statute (Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 91), s. 1). A similar provision occurs in the later statutes, and in the Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15), s. 42, while the right of action for passing off, for which wrongful intention as above defined is necessary, is unaffected (see ibid., s. 45). The only case since 1875 which is opposed to this view is Catterson & Sons, Ltd. v. Anglo-Foreign Manufacturing Co., Ltd., supra, following Upmann v. Elkan, supra, but the attention of the court does not seem to have been drawn to the change effected by the Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 15); see note (u), p. 720, ante. In Hatchard v. Mège (1887), 18 Q. B. D. 771, it was held that a person selling wine under an unregistered brand had sufficient property in such brand to maintain an action for the slander of his title to such brand, and that such cause of action survived to his executor.

1329. It is not necessary for the plaintiff to show that confusion has actually occurred in order to obtain an injunction (m), if the court is of opinion that there is a strong probability of confusion occurring in the normal course of trade (n); but the fact of such confusion having actually occurred is of course strong evidence of Brinsmead (E. A. Stanley)* (1913), 30 R. P. C. 493, C. A.; 29 T. L. R. 706. But this is merely evidence, and the mere assumption, even for improper motives, of a name which is the same as the plaintiff's is not sufficient to give a cause of action, unless the plaintiff can show that the name is generally understood to denote his business or his goods (Goodfellow v. Prince (1887), 35 Ch. D. 9, 18, C. A.; Macmillan v. Ehrman Brothers, Ltd. (1904), 21 R. P. C. 647, C. A.; Lever Brothers, Ltd. v. Beddingfield (1898), 16 R. P. C. 3, C. A.; 80 L. T. 100). Where fraudulent motive is relied on, it should be clearly alleged (Ash (Claudius), Sons & Co., Ltd. v. Invicta Manufacturing Co., Ltd. (1912), 29 R. P. C. 465, 475, H. L.).

(n) Hendriks v. Montagu (1881), 17 Ch. D. 638, C. A., per JAMES, L.J., at p. 646. The plaintiff need not put his case so high as to say that confusion must occur, a strong probability is sufficient (Valentine Meat Juice Co. v. Valentine Extract Co., Ltd. (1900), 17 R. P. C. 673, 680, C. A.; 83 L. T. 259; Daimler Motor Car Co., Ltd. v. British Motor Traction Co., Ltd. (1901), 18 R. P. T. 985; Ash (Claudius), Sons & Co., Ltd. v. Invicta Manufacturing Co., Ltd., supra. The court also takes into account that the trade will probably not be carried on in the future with the same precautions or under precisely the same conditions as at the commencement (*Manchester Brewery Co., Ltd. v. the probability of its recurrence in the future (o). On the other hand, where the defendant's trade is of some standing, the absence of any instance of actual confusion may be considered as evidence that interference is unnecessary (p).

Hirsch (Oscar) & Co.* (1886), 2 T. L. R. 318; but the suggested right of the plaintiff to relief depends on the principles of libel or trade libel rather than on those of trade name protection. As to trade libel generally, see title TRADE AND TRADE UNIONS, pp. 671 et seq., ante. As to the criminal law on the subject of trading names, see note (c), p. 749, post; see also Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 28), s. 3 (3); and title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., pp. 759, 760. The court will protect a foreign trader having any trade in this country (Collins Co. v. Brown (1857), 3 K. & J. 423; La Société Anonyme des Anciens Etablissements Panhard et Levassor v. Panhard-Levassor Motor Co., Ltd. (1901), 18 R. P. C. 405; [1901] 2 Ch. 513; Rey v. Lecouturier (1910), 27 R. P. C. 268, H. L.; [1910] A. C. 262). It has been held that a sole agent for sale in this country cannot maintain an action for passing off (Dental Manufacturing Co., Ltd. v. De Trey (G.) & Co., Ltd. (1912), 29 R. P. C. 617; [1912] 3 K. B. 96, C. A.), though possibly some other form of action would be open to him (ibid.); see also Richards v. Butcher (1890), 7 R. P. C. 288; 62 L. T. 867; *Goodfellow v. (r) Beasley v. Soares (1882), 22 Ch. D. 660; but see Birmingham Vinegar Co., Ltd. v. Liverpool Vinegar Co. (1888), 4 T. L. R. 613. "Trade" in this connexion is to be understood in a very wide sense and as including those engaged in professional and literary occupations. Thus, the court will protect an author against a fraudulent use of his name (Byron (Lord) v. Johnston (1810), 2 Mer. 29), or nom-de-plume (Londa v. Greenberg (1908), 24 T. L. R. 441), or the proprietor of a newspaper (Licensed Victuallers' Newspaper Co. v. Bingham (1888), 4 T. L. R. 419, C. A.; Borthwick (Sir Algernon) v. Evening Post, Ltd. (1888), 4 T. L. R. 236, C. A.; Walter v. Emmott (1885), 54 L. J. (CH.) 1059, C. A.; Reed v. O'Meara (1888), 21 L. R. Ir. 216); or the publisher of a book (Mack v. Petter (1872), L. R. 14 Eq. 431; Metzler v. Wood (1878), 8 Ch. D. 606, 610, C. A.), against a colourable imitation of the title of the newspaper or book. In such cases it is necessary to show that the name is widely associated with the plaintiff's newspaper or book, and that the use by the defendant is of such a nature as will lead to persons buying his publication under the impression that it is the plaintiff's; see the cases cited supra; Kelly v. Byles (1880), 13 Ch. D. 682, 691, C. A.; Dicks v. Yates (1881), 18 Ch. D. 76, C. A.; Coven v

In certain cases the court protects a body whose members use a term to denote that they belong to it, against other persons using the same term (s).

Holding out.

The court also protects a person, whether a trader or not, against his name being so used as to subject him to a real risk of being considered responsible for the business carried on, or of having actions brought against him in connexion therewith (a).

The rights in a trading name, trade name of goods or other distinguishing feature, in general pass with the goodwill of the business as a whole or the business in such goods, and cannot be so assigned as to be separated from such goodwill (b).

: SECT. 2.—Trading Names of Individuals, Firms, and Companies.

1331. The court is very reluctant to interfere with a man's right to trade under any name he chooses, and especially with his right to trade under his own name, even though it be the same as that of a better known competitor. Further, the court recognises that in ordinary cases the public is well aware that there may be many traders of the same name, and does not consider that mere identity of name necessarily means identity of person (c).

(Ct. of Sess.) 750). In Society of Architects v. Kendrick (1910), 26 T. L. R. 433, these decisions seem to have been doubted, and it was held that their application ought not to be extended.

(b) See p. 718, ante, pp. 756, 764, post; and compare title PARTNERSHIP, Vol. XXII., pp. 106, 107.

(c) There is no case in which a man has been absolutely prohibited from trading under his own name, and there are many decisions which would seem to imply that such an order would never be made; see, for instance, Holloway v. Holloway (1850), 13 Beav. 209; Burgess v. Burgess (1853), 3 De G. M. & G. 896; Turton v. Turton (1889), 42 Ch. D. 128, C. A.; Cash (J. & J.), Ltd. v. Cash (1902), 19 R. P. C. 181, C. A.; 86 L. T. 259, and especially the interlocutory observations ibid., at p. 679, seem to show that there is no difference in principle created by the fact that the name used is the defendant's own, and that if the plaintiff could show that any use of the defendant's name would necessarily deceive, such an order would be made; see also Reddaway v. Banham [1896] A. C. 199, per Lord HERSCHELL, at p. 210; Nicholls v. Kimpton (1887), 3 T. L. R. 674; Jamieson & Co. v. Jamieson (1898), 15 R. P. C. 169, 181, C. A.; 14 T. L. In some cases, however, the name of one particular individual or firm has such universal reputation in connexion with a particular class of goods that it becomes evident that if a second person enters the trade under a name which is the same or similar, confusion must arise unless special precautions are taken (d). In such cases the court interferes either to insist on the second individual taking proper measures to prevent such confusion arising (e), or, in certain ever, the court seemed to think that something like fraud is essential for the plaintiff to succeed in such a case); Teofani & Co., Ltd. v. Teofani (1913), 30 R. P. C. 446, C. A.; 109 L. T. 114. The practice of the civil courts has not been affected by the fact that the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 28), s. 3 (3), makes it a false trade description to use on goods a name or initials which are (i.) not a trade mark or part of a trade mark, and (ii.) identical with or a colourable imitation of the name or initials of a person carrying on business in connexion with such goods who has not authorised their use, and (iii.) those of a fictitious person, or some person not carrying on trade in those goods. In Lipton v. R. (1892), 32 L. R. Ir. 115, it was held that the last "and" in the above provision should be read "or," thus making it prima facie a criminal offence to use a name similar to the name of some other person in the trade, even though it be the user's own name, or to use a name of a person not actually connected with the trade, as, for instance, a name in connection with which the goodwill has been acquired, even though no other person in the trade is using a similar name. It seems improbable that any English court would adopt this construction. As to limited companies, see pp. 754, 755, post; as to choice of name in the case of a company generally, see title COMPANIES, Vol. V., pp. 84—86.

(d) The necessity of showing that the plaintiff's goods have acquired such repute that his name in connexion with them has acquired a "secondary meaning" has been very strongly laid down; see Goodfellow v. Prince (1887), 35 Ch. D. 9, 18, C. A.; Jamieson & Co. v. Jamieson (1898), 15 R. P. C. 169, 181, C. A.; 14 T. L. R. 160; Attenborough v. Jay (1898), 14 T. L. R. 439, C. C. 357; Lucas (Joseph), Ltd. v. Fabry Automobile Co., Ltd. (1905), 23 R. P. C. 33; see also note (c), p. 777, post. Generally, where the name of a trader is the same as that of a better known competitor, it is incumbent on him to see there is no unnecessary resemblance in the get-up (Brooks (J. H.) & Co., Ltd. v. Norfolk Cycle Co. (1899), 16 R. P. C. 523, 525; Williams (J. B.) Co. v. Williams (J. H.) (1909), 26 R. P. C. 765, 773, C. A.; Massam v. Thorley's Cattle Food Co. (1880), 14 Ch. D. 748, 761, C. A.; contra, Jamieson & Co. v. Jamieson, supra, per LINDLEY, J.J., at p. 180; 14 T. L. R. 160). The court will also interfere to protect the use of initials (Millington v. Fox (1838), 3 My. & Cr. 338; Bayr (Charles) v. Baird (J. & L.) (1898), 15 R. P. C. 615, 633; 25 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 1142 ("C. B."); Kinahan v. Bolton (1863), 15 I. Ch. R. 475 ("L. L."); Du Cros (W. & G.) v. Gold (1912), 29 T. L. R. 163; 30 R. P. C. 117 ("M. G.," imitating "W. & G.")). It has been said that for the plaintiff to succeed in preventing his name being used for other goods, he should show that the user is locally universal, at least in England (Chivers (S.) & Sons v. Chivers (S.) & Co., Ltd. (1900), 17 R. P. C. 420); but this would seem too wide in view of the above cases. In Barber v. Manico (1893), 10 R. P. C. 93, 101, the injunction was limited to Ireland, where the only user by the plaintiff had been; see also Jamieson v. Dublin Distillers' Co., [1900] 1 I. R. 43; and note (n), p. 763, post.

(e) Thus the court may insist on the use by the defendant of the full cases, to restrain him from trading under a name which is the same as or closely resembles that of the well-known trader (f), or from using such trader's name as the trade name of his goods (g).

Where the plaintiff can show that the defendant's object is to produce confusion the court intervenes much more readily, and often grants the plaintiff wider relief than he would otherwise obtain (h). The evidence of such fraudulent intention may be derived from the manner of trading (i), or from the circumstances under which the name was adopted (k).

christian name or, in the case of a firm, of the full names of the partners, or the defendant may be restrained from adding such words as "& Co." to his name (Brinsmead (John) & Sons v. Brinsmead (T.) & Sons (1895), not reported, but referred to in Re Brinsmead (Thomas Edward) & Sons, [1897] 1 Ch. 45, 46; James v. James (1872), L. R. 13 Eq. 421, 427; *Holt v. C. 446, 460, C. A.; 109 L. T. 114); but more generally the injunction is simply against carrying on business in such name, so as to deceive or without sufficiently distinguishing. For forms of such injunctions, see, inter alia, Cash (J. & J.), Ltd. v. Cash, supra; Valentine Meat Juice Co. v. Valentine Extract Co., Ltd. (1900), 17 R. P. C. 673, 688, C. A.; 83 L. T. 259. It is probable, however, that in some cases this might amount to an absolute prohibition, since it would be held that, if the well-known name were used, nothing could really distinguish the goods; see note (h), p. 772, post.

(g) This form of relief may be granted, even where the court does not absolutely restrain trading under the name (Cash (J. & J.), Ltd. v. Cash, supra; Rigden v. Jones, supra; Teofani & Co., Ltd. v. Teofani, supra).

(h) Valentine Meat Juice Co. v. Valentine Extract Co., Ltd., supra, at p. 684; and see the cases cited in note (k), p. 746, note (l), p. 747, ante. Sun Life Assurance Co. of Canada, supra*).

(i) As, for instance, where the defendant has "garnished" the use of the name (Turton v. Turton (1889), 42 Ch. D. 128, C. name (l), though such user is restrained if the court is satisfied that confusion would occur (m), especially where there is no reason for the defendant using this name (n).

1333. Where the name under which the plaintiff trades is a descriptive one the court is always reluctant to interfere, even where the defendant has taken a name very closely resembling that of the plaintiff (o). Nevertheless, if the plaintiff can show that the name, though composed of descriptive elements, in fact distinguishes his firm or company, the court restrains the improper use of such name or of a name so closely resembling it as to be calculated to deceive (p). In particular, it is not, as a general rule, allowable to take the whole of the trading name of an existing firm and merely make an addition thereto, especially if such addition would suggest the idea of amalgamation (q).

1334. Where the trade name belongs to none of the foregoing classes, but is what may be called a fancy name, the court, as a general rule, intervenes to prevent another person adopting the same trade name, if there is any real chance of confusion (r).

Names of companies.

1335. There is a statutory provision preventing a company from being registered with a name so closely resembling that of a company already registered as to be liable to cause confusion (s). Apart from this provision, a limited company can be restrained from carrying on business under a name likely or calculated to deceive (t). An injunction may also be granted against the directors allowing the company to continue to trade in such name, and, if the company has been formed with a fraudulent purpose, an action lies against the promoters (a). The fact that a company has been so formed for a fraudulent purpose may be a reason why it should be just and equitable to wind it up (b).

1336. In certain cases also the court restrains the use of a name for a place of business so like that of the plaintiff's as to be calculated to deceive (c). Where a place of business is sold, even without the goodwill, the right to use the name of that place usually passes to the purchaser (d), particularly if the name is carved on or affixed to the building (e).

1337. In deciding whether two trading names are so alike as to cause confusion, the court considers the impression likely to be conveyed by the names as a whole (f); but where a main and distinctive part of the plaintiff's name or the name of his goods is taken, little attention is paid to the other portions of the defendant's name (g). not decisive on the question of similarity (h), though considerable weight is attached to this feature (i). The fact that the plaintiff company or firm is often called by some shorter title, which the name adopted by the defendant resembles, is also important (k), but, again, not decisive (l).

Further, less wide protection is afforded to a name of a descriptive nature, and the custom of the particular trade as to the use of similar names must also be considered (m).

The purchaser of the goodwill of a business has in general the right to continue to use the trade name (o), subject to the limitation that he must not so use it as to expose any other person to liability (p); such a purchaser has also the right to restrain any other person from untruly representing that he carries on or is the successor to the business (q).

goodwill of a business (*Churton v. C. 177, 188; 23 T. L. R. 170). This may even be the case if the name is a real one if the exclusive use has been assigned (ibid., at pp. 188, 191; see also Bury v. Bedford (1863), 9 Jur. (N. S.) 956), but a very strong case would be needed to establish this (Franke v. Chappell (1887), 3 T. L. R. 524 (Richter concerts)); see title PARTNERSHIP, Vol. XXII., pp. 83, 106, 107.

Even an untrue assertion to this effect could not be restrained in the absence of special damage (Cundey v. Lervill and Pike, supra, at p. 586). In Rickett, Cockerell & Co., Ltd. v. Nevill (1904), 21 R. P. C. 394, it was held that the widow of a man who truthfully described himself as "from Cockerell & Co." could continue to trade under the same style.

(b) See note (g), p. 688, ante.

(c) This is particularly the case where the article sold is a natural product of the locality (Rugby Portland Cement Co., Ltd. v. Rugby and Newbold Portland Cement Co., Ltd. (1891), 9 R. P. C. 46, C. A.; Bewlay & Co., Ltd. v. Hughes (1898), 15 R. P. C. 290; Grand Hotel Co. of Caledonia Springs, Ltd. v. Wilson (1903), 21 R. P. C. 117, 134, P. C.; [1904] A. Norman* (1872), L. R. 14 Eq. 348). Where the article is not a natural product the plaintiff's task is easier, since there is less need for the defendant to adopt the name; see Montgomery v. Thompson (1891), 8 R. P. C. 361, H. L.; the same necessity for the defendant to use such a name as in the case of a purely descriptive word (d); hence, the burden on the plaintiff who seeks an injunction on the ground that such local name has come to indicate his goods only is less than on one who seeks to show such a secondary meaning in the case of a descriptive word (e). Such meaning can be acquired even if the plaintiff has been the only manufacturer of the articles in question in the district (f). The court relieves much more freely where the defendant is not in the locality, and so has no reason for

C. 321, 330; affirmed (1900), 18 R. P. C. 27, C. A.). In the following cases the plaintiff succeeded:—McAndrew v. Bassett (1864), 4 De G. J. & Sm. 380 ("Anatolia Liquorice"); *Seixo v. the use of the name, or has gone there merely to be able to use the name (g). Generally speaking, the right to the use of a name denoting locality of origin passes with the land from which the product comes or on which the business is carried on (h).

SECT. 3.
Trade Names of Goods.

1341. Where the trade name is of a descriptive character (i), the burden is on the plaintiff to show that it has acquired a secondary meaning when applied as a designation of goods in a particular trade (k), so as to mean the plaintiff's goods and not merely goods of the class denoted by its primary signification (l). This is a question of fact (m), depending on the joint effect of the nature of the word in question (n) and the strength of the plaintiff's evidence (o).

Descriptive names.

(g) Price's Patent Candle Co. v. Ogston and Tennant, Ltd. (1909), 26 R. P. C. 797, 813; compare Seizo v. Provezende (1885), 1 Ch. App. 192, where the court was influenced by the fact that though the defendant had a vineyard in the Seizo district, he was also selling under this name wine coming from another district; Free Fishers and Dredgers of Whitstable v. Elliott (1888), 4 T. L. R. 273, where an injunction was granted to restrain the defendants who had a concurrent right of user of a local name from using the name in connexion with oysters not coming from that district. But the mere fact that the defendant has no right to use the name does not relieve the plaintiff from the necessity of showing that it means his goods (California Fig Syrup Co. v. Taylor's Drug Co., Ltd. (1897), 14 R. P. C. 564, C. A.; 13 T. L. R. 438; Wotherspoon v. Currie (1872), L. R. 5 H. L. 508; Huntley and Palmer v. Reading Biscuit Co., Ltd. (1893), 10 R. P. C. 277; 9 T. L. R. 462; compare title INJUNCTION, Vol. XVII., p. 259).

(h) Van Zeller v. Mason, Cattley & Co. (1907), 25 R. P. C. 37; but compare Brock (C. T.) & Co.'s Crystal Palace Fireworks, Ltd. v. Paine (James) & Sons (1911), 28 R. P. C. 697, C. A.

(i) The tendency of the court is to regard names of a laudatory nature as descriptive; see Re Crosfield (Joseph) & Son, Ltd.'s Application to Register a Trade Mark ("Perfection") (1909), 26 R. P. C. 837, C. A.; 101 L. T. 587 ("Perfection"); and the court is not acute to find a name non-descriptive because of some technical inaccuracy (Parsons Brothers & Co. v. Gillespie & Co. (1898), 15 R. P. C. 57, P. C.; [1898] A. C. 239 ("Flaked Oatmeal")).

(k) A word may have a distinctive signification when used as a name, though not when used otherwise (McAndrew v. Bassett (1864), 4 De G. J. & Sm. 380 ("Anatolia Liquorice"); Havana Cigar and Tobacco Factories, Ltd. v. Tiffin (1905), Ltd. (1909), 26 R. P. C. 473, C. A. ("Corona")).

(l) It has been said that the secondary meaning must have wholly displaced the primary meaning in the trade (Cellular Clothing Co. v. Maxton and Murray (1898), 15 R. P. C. 612; affirmed (1899), 16 R. P. C. 397, 405, H. L.; 1 Fraser (House of Lords), 29; Hommel v. Bauer & Co. (1904), 22 R. P. C. 43, 47, C. A.; 21 T. L. R. 80; Weingarten Brothers v. Rosenthal, Same v. Sherwood & Co. (1904), 21 R. P. C. 212, 215; contra, Burberrys v. Cording (J. C.) & Co., Ltd. (1909), 26 R. P. C. 693, 704; 100 L. T. 985; and the cases cited in note (o), p. 760, post).

(m) Cellular Clothing Co. v. Maxton and Murray (1899), 16 R. P. C. 397, H. L., per Lord HALSBURY, L.C., at p. 404; 1 Fraser (House of Lords), 29; see also Reddaway v. Banham (1896), 13 R. P. C. 218, 221, H. L.; [1896] A. C. 199, where the questions left to the jury by COLLINS, J., and approved by the House of Lords, are set out.

(n) Thus, the burden on the plaintiff is less where the word is not a natural word obviously and simply descriptive of the goods (Faulder & Co., (o) For note (o) see p. 760, post.

SECT. 3.
Trade
Names of

New class of goods.

Ltd. v. Rushton (O. & G.), Ltd. (1903), 20 R. P. C. 477, 494, C. A.; 19 T. L. R. 452; Cellular Clothing Co. v. Maxton and Murray (1899), 16 R. P. C. 397, H. L., per Lord DAVEY, at p. 409; 1 Fraser (House of Lords), 29.

(o) Where the only goods of the kind on the market have been those made by the plaintiff, the use of the word in connexion with these goods is consistent with either alternative, and is therefore inconclusive (Cellular Clothing Co. v. Maxton and Murray, supra, at p. 409; compare Siebert v. Findlater (1878), 7 Ch. D. 801, 813; Kinnell (Charles P.) & Co., Ltd. v. Ballantine & Sons (1909), 27 R. P. C. 185, 190). So, too, the evidence of witnesses who only know the article as made by one manufacturer is of little value (Burberrys v. Cording (J. C.) & Co., Ltd. (1909), 26 R. P. C. 693, 704; 100 L. T. 985). Where the plaintiff has himself always used the word with his name in the possessive case, this may be some evidence that he did not consider it as a distinctive word in itself (Hommel v. Bauer & Co. (1904), 22 R. P. C. 43, C. A.; Wurm v. Webster and Girling (1904), 21 R. P. C. 373; Whitstable Oyster Fishery Co. v. Hayling Fisheries, Ltd. (1901), 18 R. P. C. 434, C. A.; see also note (g), p. 762, post). In the following cases the plaintiff succeeded where the names were prima facie descriptive or laudatory:—Braham v. Bustard (1863), 1 Hem. & M. 447 ("Excelsior White Soft Soap"); Eno v. Dunn & Co. (1893), 10 R. P. C. 261 ("Fruit Salt"); Reddaway v. Banham (1896), 13 R. P. C. 218, H. L.; [1896] A. is non-distinctive has only been successful where the goods were either the subject of a patent (q) or design (r) or of a secret process (s). Where this is so, any person has, as a general rule, the right to use the name (t) to describe goods of this class after the patent has expired or the secret become known (a), provided that he does not do it in such a way as to deceive (b), but he is still bound in some cases to distinguish such goods from the goods of the original manufacturer (c). But while the secret is kept the court looks on this fact as an additional reason for restraining other persons from using the name, since not only are the rights of the manufacturer invaded by its misuse, but the public is deceived by not getting the article expected (d). In some cases even a personal name may become publici juris by acquiring the secondary authority. Where the introducer of the new article calls it by a descriptive name, together with a fancy name, other persons are not entitled to take the combination (*Braham v. It tells strongly against the defendant's contention that the name is descriptive if the goods sold by him are not of the class it is said to denote (Barlow and Jones v. Johnson (Jabez) & Co. (1890), 7 R. P. C. 395, C. A.); or if he uses a modified form of the word (Slazenger & Sons v. Feltham & Co. (1889), 6 R. P. C. 531, 535, C. A.; 5 T. L. R. 364).

1343. The plaintiff need not prove that the name has always been used alone (g), or, indeed, that it has been used by him as a name for his goods, if the public has used it as such (h); nor need he show that the user has been such that the public associates goods so sold with his name, as long as it is shown that the public understands the name to mean the goods made by some special manufacturer (i) or sold by some special merchant (k). Again, the name may have been used by him as a trade mark which has been expunged from the register (l), or as a part of a trade mark as to which he disclaimed

A."); as to the different rule relating to user for the purpose of establishing an "old mark," see notes (l), (m), p. 693, ante. It has, however, been said that where the name is prima facie a descriptive one, the fact that the plaintiff has always used it with his name in the possessive case is some evidence that it was used descriptively—see p. 760, ante. It has also been said that where the manufacturer puts a retailer's name on the goods, it goes against his case (Wolff & Son v. Nopitsch (1900), 17 R. P. C. 321, per COZENS-HARDY, J., at p. 330, relying on Re Wood's Trade Mark, Wood v. Butler (1886), 3 R. P. C. 81, C. A.; 32 Ch. A.; Reddaway & Co., Ltd. v. Stevenson & Brother, Ltd. (1902), 20 R. P. C. 276), this can hardly be considered as of general application.

But in judging whether such a word has acquired a secondary meaning, it must not be forgotten that the plaintiff's monopoly of its use may have been due to his claim to a trade mark (Re Trade Mark "Hamalogen," Hommel v. Gebrüder Bauer & Co. (1904), 21 R. P. C. 576, 587; 20 T. L. R. 585).

any special trade mark rights (m). The extent of the user which it is necessary for the plaintiff to show depends on the nature of the word and the other circumstances of the case (n).

Where, however, the name is of a fancy kind a considerable general user, together with some user in the defendant's district, is sufficient (*Faulder & Co., Ltd. v. In Price's Patent Candle Co., Ltd. v. Ogston and Tennant, Ltd. (1909), 26 R. P. C. 797, 813 ("London Candles"), an injunction was granted for a limited area on proof of secondary meaning in the area; see also note (d), p. 750, ante; and as to the effect of local adverse user, see p. 777, post. *Passing Off action.

1348. The right to bring an action for passing off is founded on the same principles as those relating to actions for the misuse of trade names (c), and, in fact, actions for misuse of the trade names of goods are only particular instances of such actions. The most usual form of action is for the use of a distinctive mark or get-up of goods. As the various grounds on which the right of action is based are only different instances of the same cause of action, the plaintiff may rely on some or all of them, and there are many cases where the use of a trade name not in itself distinctive, together with imitation of get-up (d), or carelessness or fraud in supplying articles (e), or in the manner of trading (f), or the use of a label not in fact infringing the plaintiff's registered trade mark, have established a case of passing off (g).

1349. In considering the question of get-up regard must be had to the common practice of the trade, as there can be no monopoly in matters of get-up which are common to the trade (h); but this does not mean that matters which are common to the trade must be wholly disregarded, because the plaintiff may have a distinctive combination of matters which, separately, others have a right to use (i). No monopoly can, in general, be established for features of shape or size adopted merely for the purpose of convenience or for some other motive of utility (k).

1350. In considering whether the resemblance of the get-up of the different goods is such as to cause deception, it must be remembered that the goods will not be seen side by side (l), and the proper test is whether the get-up of the defendant's goods would be likely to deceive a purchaser who is acquainted with the plaintiff's get-up (m), but trusts to his memory. It is to be assumed that the purchaser will look fairly at the goods (n), and that they will be shown fairly to him without distinguishing features being concealed (o). The court must also have regard to the class of purchasers by whom the goods would normally be bought (p) and the circumstances of the sale (q). Another question to be considered is whether the get-up of the defendant's goods is such as to suggest a name by which the plaintiff's goods are asked for and recommended (r). The court is also considerably influenced by any evidence showing that the defendant has deliberately imitated the plaintiff's labels and the like (s).

SECT. 5.—Legal Proceedings.

1351. In an action for infringement the question to be decided by the court is, whether the defendant or his servants have used the trade name, mark, or get-up of the plaintiff's goods, or an imitation thereof (t), in such a manner as to be calculated to induce the public (a)

(q) Thus, where the goods are sold in small packets, little attention is paid to the cases in which these are sent out (Edge v. Johnson (1892), 9 R. P. C. 134, C. A.). So, too, in such cases as those dealing with the get-up of an omnibus, it must be remembered that the prospective passenger often only sees the omnibus in motion (London General Omnibus Co. v. Felton (1896), 12 T. L. R. 213; compare Du Cros (W. & G.), Ltd. v. Gold (1912), 30 R. P. C. 117; 29 T. L. R. 163).

(s) See pp. 746, 747, ante. The fact that the defendant has sent the plaintiff's label to his printer is prima facie a matter of suspicion (*Hammond & Co. v. or the trade (b) to believe that the infringing goods are the goods of the plaintiff (c). The acts of infringement may be using the name, mark or get-up of the goods in such a way that the public is likely to be deceived thereby if the goods are sold in an ordinary fair manner (d), or describing the goods by that name, or selling the goods in answer to orders in which the trade name of the plaintiff's goods has been used (e), or using the name or mark in advertisements, or otherwise so as to produce the impression that the goods are the plaintiff's goods (f). An action lies either against the manufacturer (g) who sends out goods with a name or get-up liable to deceive, or the retailer who sells such goods (h). The defendant is further liable for any

(h) Where, however, the retailer has acted innocently and has not misuse of a trade name or other act of passing off by his servants acting within the scope of their employment (i).

A defendant's acts are in general not considered as calculated to deceive unless he is selling goods of a class which the plaintiff sells or from the course of his trade might be supposed to be selling (k). Other points to be considered are the price and quality of the goods sold by the parties, since a considerable difference in these respects naturally diminishes the probability of confusion (l), and the respective localities in which the goods are sold (m), and any other circumstances tending to increase or diminish confusion (n).

Where the defendant is selling the goods of another manufacturer he is entitled to rely on any defence which such manufacturer might have put forward (o). Further, a defendant having genuine goods manufactured or sold by the plaintiff is entitled to sell those goods under the plaintiff's name or mark, and for that purpose to have labels printed and affixed to the goods (p), though an action lies claimed any right to continue his acts, he would probably be protected; see note (i), p. 748, ante.

for passing off an inferior class of goods made by the plaintiff as a superior class (q).

The fact that the name or mark used by the defendant has been registered by him does not generally afford him any additional ground of defence (r).

• 1352. It is for the court to decide whether the similarity of the name or get-up complained of to that employed by the plaintiff is such as to be calculated to deceive, and it is therefore not proper for witnesses to be asked whether in their opinion this is the case (s). Witnesses may, however, be properly called to show the custom of the trade as to the use of names or matters of get-up (t), the circumstances in which the articles are sold (u) and the method in which the plaintiff's name etc. is used (a), and any other matters necessary to instruct the court and enable it to arrive at a decision on this point (b), and the court should decide in view of this evidence and not merely on an inspection of the objects (c).

SECT. 5.
Legal Proceedings.

1353. Evidence may also be given as to cases of actual deception, where persons have traded with the defendant under the impression that they were trading with the plaintiffs, or have bought the infringing goods under the impression that they were the goods of the plaintiffs (d). If such instances relate to direct dealing with the defendants or their agents, they may of course constitute part of the cause of action, but even if they do not they are still available as evidence to show that the similarity is such as is likely to deceive (e). In the case of trade names evidence may also be given of persons having asked for goods by the plaintiff's trade name and been given infringing goods, whether in fact such persons were deceived or not.

Evidence of deception.

Where the plaintiff relies on "trap orders," or orders given for the plaintiff's goods by persons sent for that purpose to shops where it is expected that in response to an order for the plaintiff's goods the infringing goods will be supplied, the court, though recognising the necessity for this class of evidence, scrutinises it very closely, and insists that the evidence shall show that the order was given in a perfectly clear manner, so that the defendant or his employees fully realised what was being asked for (f).

Trap orders.

(b) As to evidence generally in passing-off cases, see North Cheshire and Manchester Brewery Co. v. Manchester Brewery Co., [1899] A. C. 83. In Wilkinson v. Griffith Brothers & Co. (1891), 18 R. P. C. 370, 372, the court admitted evidence of increase in the defendant's sales after the adoption of the label complained of, as showing that this had caused the goods to be bought as the plaintiff's goods.

(c) London General Omnibus Co. v. Lavell (1900), 18 R. P. C. 74, 79, C. A.; [1901] 1 Ch. 135. There may, however, be cases where no such evidence is necessary; see North Cheshire and Manchester Brewery Co. v. Manchester Brewery Co., supra.

(d) Where actual deception is alleged, particulars of the persons deceived must be given (Humphries v. Taylor Drug Co. (1888), 5 R. P. C. 687; 39 Ch. D. 693; contra, Duke & Sons v. Wisden & Co. (1897), 77 L. T. 67, C. A.). Where, however, the defendant seeks to show that the wrong goods were given inadvertently in these cases, other instances may be proved by the plaintiff to rebut this defence (Parozone Co., Ltd. v. Johnston Gibson (1904), 21 R. P. C. 317).

(e) Brinsmead (John) & Sons, Ltd. v. Brinsmead (E. G. Stanley) (1913), 30 R. P. C. 137, 146.

(f) It is preferable that the orders should be in writing (Oarr & Sons v. Crisp & Co., Ltd. (1902), 19 R. P. C. 497, 500), though in some cases this is not possible. Unless the defendants have been informed that the plaintiffs propose to rely on particular sales within a reasonable time after they have occurred, they are unfairly handicapped, because a shop assistant cannot be expected to remember details of every sale effected (Ripley v. Griffiths (1902), 19 R. P. C. 590, 597; Truefitt (H. P.), Ltd. v. Edney (1903), 20 R. P. C. 321; Burroughs, Wellcome & Co. v. Thompson and Capper (1903), 21 R. P. C. 69, 84; [1904] 1 Ch. 736; Lever Brothers, Ltd. v. Masbro' Equitable Pioneers Society, Ltd. (1912), 29 R. P. C. 226, 235, C. A.). In Ripley v. Griffiths, supra, FARWELL, J., at p. 597, said that notice ought to be given as soon as the order is fulfilled. This would in general seem to be impracticable, as the plaintiff would be unable to get further instances from that shop, and the courts are not usually satisfied with a single instance. In Knight (John) & Sons, Ltd. v. Crisp & Co., Ltd. (1904), 21 R. P. C.

SECT. 5. The defendant, on the other hand, may give evidence of long user without confusion, as showing that the similarity is not such as is likely to lead to deception (g).

Relief granted.

• 1854. The relief granted in these cases may include an injunction (h), damages (i), or an account of profits (k), and an order for delivery up of the infringing articles or labels or erasure of the

670, it was pointed out that for the reasons given in the above cases the evidence of the plaintiff's witness, if the court is of opinion that he intends to tell the truth, is to be preferred to that of the defendant's; but see Lever Brothers, Ltd. v. Masbro' Equitable Pioneers Society, Ltd. (1912), 29 R. P. C. 225, 231, C. A.; 28 T. L. R. 296.

(g) Cropper Minerva Machines Co., Ltd. v. Cropper, Charlton & Co., Ltd. (1906), 23 R. P. C. 388, 394; Great Tower Street Tea Co. v. Smith (1889), 6 R. P. C. 165; Ash (Claudius), Sons & Co., Ltd. v. Lucida Manufacturing Co., Ltd. (1911), 28 R. P. C. 587, C. A.; see also note (p), p. 748, ante.

(h) The usual form of injunction in passing-off cases is against passing off goods not of the plaintiff's manufacture as and for the goods of the plaintiff, but in many cases the injunction has, either in substitution for or in addition to this, a prohibition against certain specific acts. In the case of a trade name which is of personal, local or descriptive nature, the injunction is generally either against its use "so as to deceive" (Siebert v. Findlater (1878), 7 Ch. D. 810, 814 ("Angostura Bitters"); Reddaway v. Banham (1896), 13 R. P. C. 218, 221, H. L.; [1896] A. C. 199 ("Camel Hair")), or "without sufficiently distinguishing" (Powell v. Birmingham Vinegar Brewery Co., Ltd. (1897), 14 R. P. C. 720, H. L.; [1897] A. C. 710 ("Yorkshire Relish")); see also note (c), p. 749, ante. In Seixo v. Provezende (1865), 1 Ch. App. 192, 194 ("Seixo"), a combination of the two forms was adopted. Sometimes there may be a special prohibition against using a word "as the name" of an article (Rey v. Lecouturier (1910), 27 R. P. C. 268, 272, H. L.; [1910] A. C. 262 ("Chartreuse")); Grezier and Doyle v. Autran (1895), 13 R. P. C. 1, 12, C. A. ("Chartreuse"); Havana Cigar and Tobacco Factories, Ltd. v. Tiffin (1905), Ltd. (1909), 26 R. P. C. 473, C. A. ("Corona"); see also Montgomery v. Thompson (1891), 8 R. P. C. 361, H. L.; [1891] A. C. 217 ("Stone Ales")). The effect of the limited form of injunction, however, in many cases is practically to prohibit any use of the name; see Wotherspoon v. Currie (1872), L. R. 5 H. L. 508; Montgomery v. Thompson, supra, at pp. 365, 366; Powell v. Birmingham Vinegar Brewery Co., Ltd., supra; Worcester Royal Porcelain Co., Ltd. v. Locke & Co. (1902), 19 R. P. C. 479, 490; 18 T. L. R. 712; Reddaway (F.) & Co., Ltd. v. Stevenson (Robert) and Brother, Ltd. (1902), 20 R. P. C. 276. So, too, an injunction may be specially directed against certain features of get-up (Johnston v. Orr Ewing (1882), 7 App. Cas. 219). For another form of injunction, see Knott v. Morgan (1836), 2 Keen, 213. Sometimes an injunction may specially prohibit the supply of goods not of the plaintiff's manufacture in response to an order for goods by a certain name (Kerfoot v. Cooper (R. A.), Ltd. (1908), 25 R. P. C. 508). In Siebert v. Findlater, supra, the injunction was absolute against the use of the name "Angostura," till the discovery of the plaintiff's secret formula. In Grezier and Doyle v. Autran, supra, certain goods were exempted from the absolute portion of the injunction. Generally an injunction will not lay down a line of conduct for the defendant (Kerfoot v. Cooper (R. A.), Ltd., supra). Even where the defendant offers an undertaking, the plaintiff is in general entitled to have an order made in open court, if the infringement was deliberate (Gandy Belt Manufacturing Co., Ltd. v. Fleming, Birkley and Goodall, Ltd. (1901), 18 R. P. C. 276; see also title INJUNCTION, Vol. XVII., pp. 225, 259).

(i) As to damages generally, see title DAMAGES, Vol. X., pp. 301 et seq.; and compare pp. 720, 721, ante.

(k) It is generally in the discretion of the plaintiff which of these shall be taken (Weingarten Brothers v. Bayer & Co. (1905), 22 R. P. C. 341, 351, infringing mark (l). The court does not grant an injunction on proof of isolated acts of a deceptive nature, unless they are of such a character as to point to a probability of continuance of the deception (m). This is especially the case where the acts were those of a servant done without the master's concurrence or against his orders (n).

SECT. 5.
Legal Proceedings.

1355. It may be useful here to refer shortly to certain actions on the border line of passing off. It is not, as a general rule, actionable to sell goods as similar to those of another person, though this may be actionable as a trade libel if malicious motive, untruth, and special damage can be shown (o). It is, however, actionable to represent falsely that goods are licensed under certain letters patent or, possibly, even that they are made according to such letters patent (p), though it is not actionable to represent that goods

C. 37, JOYCE, J., at p. 41, treated it as a matter for the discretion of the court. Generally speaking, neither damages, apart from special damage, nor an account of profits, will be given for acts committed in ignorance; see note (u), p. 720, ante. The account of profits generally extends to cover all the infringing articles sold (Edelsten v. Edelsten (1863), 1 D. & G. 385 & Sm. 185; Saxlehner v. Apollinaris Co., supra; *Lever v. SECT. 5.
Legal Proceedings.

are made according to a process in which the plaintiff has no existing patent rights (q). An action lies to prevent a printer making or selling infringing labels unless these are required for use on genuine goods (r).

SECT. 6.—Special Defences.

Acquiescence.

• 1356. If a trader allows another person who is acting in good faith to build up a reputation under a trade name or mark to which he has rights, he may lose his right to complain (s), and may even be debarred from himself using such name or mark (t). But even long user by another, if fraudulent, does not affect the plaintiff's right to a final injunction (a).

Plaintiff's trade fraudulent.

1357. Neither law nor equity assists a wholly fraudulent trade, since both adopt the maxim ex turpi causa non oritur actio, and if it is shown that the plaintiff's trade is of this nature he cannot succeed in any action for the use of his trade name or trade mark, or for passing off (b).

Where the infringement has been committed by a person not worth suing, failure to sue may not amount to acquiescence (Rowland v. Michell, supra; Cocks v. Chandler (1871), L. R. 11 Eq. 446); acquiescence may, however, affect the right to special forms of relief, such as an account (Ford v. Foster, supra), or delivery up (County Chemical Co., Ltd. v. Frankenburg (1904), 21 R. P. C. 722). As to its effect on damages, see Gledhill (G. H.) & Sons, Ltd. v. British Perforated Toilet Paper Co. (1911), 28 R. P. C. 429, 451. In judging of acquiescence, regard must be had to the date when the facts came to the plaintiff's knowledge (Barlow and Jones v. Johnson (Jabez) & Co., supra; Rowland v. Michell, supra; Hirst v. Denham (1872), L. R. 14 Eq. 542; Gledhill (G. H.) & Sons, Ltd. v. British Perforated Toilet Paper Co., supra, at p. 451; see also Lee v. Haley (1869), 5 Ch. 1358. There is a further class of cases in which it has been argued that the plaintiff is not entitled to succeed because of misrepresentations made by him. The result of these cases seems to be that the court does not give specific protection to a name or mark containing representations that are false (c), but allows a common law action to be brought for the fraud of passing off, if the misrepresentations are not of such a nature as to disentitle the plaintiff to succeed on the ground that his trade is fraudulent (d). There has been some doubt expressed whether in such a case the plaintiff could obtain an injunction (e), but probably, once he had succeeded, the court would grant an injunction to avoid the necessity of bringing a series of actions against the defendant for what it has already decided to be a wrongful act (f). It is no defence that the plaintiff has failed to fulfil certain statutory requirements (g).

SECT. 6.
Special
Defences.

Misrepresentations by plaintiff.

(c) See Leather Cloth Co. v. American Leather Cloth Co. (1865), 11 H. L. Cas. 523; Ford v. Foster (1872), 7 Ch. App. 611, 630; Cropper Minerva Machines Co., Ltd. v. Cropper, Charlton & Co., Ltd. (1906), 23 R. P. C. 388, 394. A representation that an article is patented is such a misrepresentation if there has never been such a patent (Flavel v. Harrison (1853), 10 Hare, 467), or where the patent has expired (Cheavin v. Walker (1877), 5 Ch. D. 850, 862, C. A., overruling Edelsten v. Vick (1853), 11 Hare, 78, already doubted in Leather Cloth Co. v. American Leather Cloth Co., supra, per Lord KINGSDOWN, at p. 543, and Leather Cloth Co., Ltd. v. Hirschfeld (1863), 1 New Rep. 551; see also Re Boake (A.), Roberts & Co., Ltd.'s Trade Marks, Boake (A.), Roberts & Co., Ltd. v. Wayland & Co. (1908), 26 R. P. C. 257). Where, however, the word "patent" has become part of the name of the article, this rule would not apply (Marshall v. Ross (1869), L. R. 8 Eq. 661; see also Gridley v. Swinborne (1888), 5 T. L. R. 71; Cochrane v. MacNish & Son (1890), 13 R. P. C. 100, P. C.; [1896] A. C. 225). The same rule applies to a representation that a design (Winser & Co., Ltd. v. Armstrong & Co. (1898), 16 R. P. C. 167, 172), or trade mark (Lewis v. Goodbody (1892), 67 L. T. 194), is registered, but the use of the words "Trade Mark" is not necessarily such a representation (Sen Sen Co. v. Britten (1899), 16 R. P. C. 137; [1899] 1 Ch. 692). Representations made after action brought do not affect the plaintiff's right (Siebert v. Findlater (1878), 7 Ch. D. 801, 811).

(d) Ford v. Foster, supra; Sykes v. Sykes (1824), 3 B. & C. 541; see also Jamieson & Co. v. Jamieson (1898), 15 R. P. C. 169, C. A., per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., at p. 191; 14 T. L. R. 160; Wolff & Son v. Nopitsch (1900), 18 R. P. C. 27, C. A., per Lord ALVERSTONE, C.J., at p. 32. For other cases where misrepresentations have been held not to affect the plaintiff's rights, see Plotzker v. Lucas (1907), 24 R. P. C. 551, 562; Pomeroy (Mrs.), Ltd. v. Scalé (1900), 24 R. P. C. 177, 192; 23 T. L. R. 170. As to misrepresentation generally, see title MISREPRESENTATION AND FRAUD, Vol. XX., pp. 613 et seq.

(e) Jamieson & Co. v. Jamieson, supra. As to injunction generally, see title INJUNCTION, Vol. XVII., pp. 197 et seq.

(f) See Ford v. Foster, supra. The old equity practice was not necessarily to refuse an injunction in such cases, but to refuse it until the plaintiff had established his title at law (Pidding v. How (1837), 8 Sim. 477; Petry v. Truefitt (1842), 6 Beav. 66; Flavel v. Harrison (1853), 10 Hare, 467, 473). Such misrepresentation may, however, affect the plaintiff's right to other forms of relief, such as an account (Ford v. Foster, supra).

SECT. 6.
Special
Defences.
defendant.

1359. Misrepresentations by the defendant as to his goods or firm, even if they are not of such a nature as to give the plaintiff a cause of action, have in many cases led to the defendant being deprived of costs (h); but this is not a proper course where the misrepresentations have reference to a collateral matter and have nothing to do with the plaintiff's case (i). No action lies for falsely representing that the defendant's goods have obtained prize medals (k), though this is now a criminal offence with regard to certain medals (l), or, apparently, for appropriation of testimonials of the plaintiff's goods, unless it would lead to passing off (m).

(h) Estcourt v. Estcourt Hop Essence Co. (1875), 10 Ch. App. 276; Newman v. Pinto (1887), 4 R. P. C. 508, C. A.; 57 L. T. 31; Thorneloe v. Hill (1894), 11 R. P. C. 61, 72; [1894] 1 Ch. 569; Lever Brothers, Ltd. v. Bedingfield (1898), 16 R. P. C. 3, C. A.; 80 L. T. 100; Valentine Meat Juices Co. v. Valentine Extract Co., Ltd. (1899), 17 R. P. (i) King & Co., Ltd. v. Gillard & Co., Ltd. (1905), 22 R. P. C. 327, C. A.; [1905] 2 Ch. 7. Probably this rule would not apply to such cases as Estcourt v. Estcourt Hop Essence Co., supra; Newman v. Pinto, supra, in each of which the plaintiff had a cause of action, but failed because of fraud of which the defendant was equally guilty; compare title MISREPRESENTATION AND FRAUD, Vol. XX., pp. 726, 727.

(l) Exhibition Medals Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 119), by which a trader who falsely represents that he has obtained a medal or certificate from the Commissioners for the Exhibition of 1851, and the Commissioners for the Exhibition of 1862, or either of such bodies of Commissioners (see ibid., s. 3) in respect of any article or process for which the Commissioners awarded a medal or certificate, or falsely represents, knowing it to be false, that any other trader has obtained such a medal or certificate, or that any article sold or exposed for sale has been made by, or by any process invented by, a person who has won such a medal or certificate for such article or process, incurs a fine not exceeding for the first offence £5, and for each subsequent offence a fine of £20. Offences after the first may, instead, be punished by imprisonment (ibid., s. 1). Offences may be prosecuted summarily (ibid., s. 4), and in any proceedings there is no need to prove damages arising from the false representations (ibid., s. 2); nor is it necessary to set out a copy of any medal or certificate (ibid.). There is a saving for a period not exceeding six months of all rights and remedies to which any person is entitled at law or in equity (ibid., s. 5). As to evidence in civil proceedings, see ibid., s. 5; and title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 400, note (s). It should be noted that the decision in Tallerman v. Dowsing Radiant Heat Co., supra, was only that the point was not clear enough for interlocutory relief, and that on appeal the defendants practically submitted to judgment; see also Frankau (Adolph) & Co., Ltd. v. Pflueger (1910), 28 R. P. C. 130; Accumulator Industries, Ltd. v. Vandervell & Co. (1912), 29 R. P. C. 391. A representation that the defendant has executed work in fact done by the plaintiff may be restrained (Henderson & Son v. Munro & Co. (1905), 7 F. (Ct. of Sess.) 636); compare title MISREPRESENTATION AND FRAUD, Vol. XX., p. 676.

1360. If the defendant can show general user by other firms of the name or mark sued on, this defeats the plaintiff's claim to a right of monopoly in such name or mark (n). Apart from such general user the defendant can sometimes show a user by himself or his predecessors in business, perhaps merely local, but bonâ fide and of sufficient duration to negative the idea of deception (o). Such individual rights of user do not, however, necessarily prevent the plaintiff from succeeding against third parties (p).

Part I.—Tramways.

SECT. 1.—Methods of Promoting Tramways.

1361. The construction of tramways (a) may be promoted by (1) a Provisional Order (b) under the Tramways Act, 1870 (c); or (2) a private Act of Parliament (d).*

SECT. 1.
Methods of Promoting Tramways.

Two methods available.

SECT. 2.—Provisional Orders.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Application by Local Authorities or Private Persons.

1362. A Provisional Order under the Tramways Act, 1870 (e), for the construction of a tramway in any district may be obtained through the Board of Trade, either by the local authority (f), or

Who may be promoters.

(a) Tramways do not appear to have been specifically defined by statute. It may, however, be noted that the Conveyance of Mails Act, 1803 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 38), s. 5 (1), defines a "tramway" as authorised to be constructed "wholly along public roads or streets without any deviation," and a "tramroad" as "any tramroad or tramway which is not a tramway as hereinbefore defined," and as including tramways and light railways constructed under the Tramways (Ireland) Acts, 1860—1891 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 152; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 102; 34 & 35 Vict. c. 114; 39 & 40 Vict. c. 65; 44 & 45 Vict. c. 17; 46 & 47 Vict. c. 43; 52 & 53 Vict. c. 66; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 42), and the Railways (Ireland) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 52). "Tramway" is included within the term "railways" in the Railway Companies Securities Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 108), s. 2, and in the Regulation of Railways Acts, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 119), s. 2, and 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 78), s. 2. But, in public legislation, the word "railway" does not include "tramway" unless it is expressly made to do so by the terms of the Act; see title RAILWAYS AND CANALS, Vol. XXIII., pp. 619 et seq.; Tottenham Urban Council v. Metropolitan Electric Tramways, Ltd., [1913] A. C. 702; and, therefore, land occupied by a tramway is not entitled to be rated as a railway under the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 211 (1) (b) (ibid., following Swansea Improvements and Tramway Co. v. Swansea Urban Sanitary Authority, [1892] 1 Q. B. 357); see title RATES AND RATING, Vol. XXIV., pp. 85, 86. A tramway constructed without the authority of Parliament is a public nuisance (R. v. Train (1862), 2 B. & S. 640; Rapier v. London Tramways Co., [1893] 2 Ch. 588, C. A.; compare R. v. Morris (1830), 1 B. & Ad. 441; R. v. Charlesworth (1851), 16 Q. B. 1012).

(b) As to Provisional Orders, see the text, infra.

(c) 33 & 34 Vict. c. 78.

(d) As to the procedure for obtaining a private Act of Parliament, see title PARLIAMENT, Vol. XXI., pp. 727 et seq. Many lines on public roads worked by electrical powers and in other respects similar to electric tramways have been promoted under the Light Railways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 48), as light railways to which the general enactments relating to railways (including rating) also apply (Wakefield and District Light Railway v. Wakefield Corporation, [1907] 2 K. B. 256, C. A.; affirmed sub nom. Wakefield Corporation v. Wakefield and District Light Railway, [1908] A. C. 293); see Light Railways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 48), s. 12; and pp. 819 et seq., post; such undertakings have secured irrevocably the status and privileges of light railways (Tottenham Urban District Council v. Metropolitan Electric Tramways, Ltd., supra, per Lord MOULTON, at p. 719).

(e) 33 & 34 Vict. c. 78, s. 4.

(f) The local authority is, in the City of London, the Mayor and Corporation, in the County of London outside the City the London County Council, and elsewhere the urban or rural district council, as the case may be, or occasionally the parish council (ibid., s. 3, Sched. A, Part 1.:

SECT. 2. by any person, persons, corporation or company with the consent Provisional of the local authority; or, where the district is or forms part of a Orders. highway district under the Highways Acts (g), with the consent of — the road authority (h). In each case the local authority, person, • persons, corporation or company specified in the Order are deemed
 • the promoters of the tramway (i).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Consents Required.

Special meeting of local authority.

1363. No local authority may apply for a Provisional Order until a resolution approving of the intention to apply has been concurred in and passed at a special meeting at which two-thirds of the members are present and vote, and of which a month's previous notice has been given in the manner prescribed by the local authority (k).

Private
 promoters.

1364. Persons, corporations or companies must obtain the consent of the local authority or, in the case of a highway district, of the road authority, before making an application (l); and in districts where the road authority is distinct from the local authority, and where it is necessary to seek power to break up any road, the consents of both authorities are required (m).

Refusal of consent.

1365. Where it is proposed to construct a tramway in two or more districts, and the consent of any local or rural authority having jurisdiction in them is refused, the Board of Trade may, nevertheless, authorise the construction, if it is satisfied, after inquiry, that two-thirds of the length of the tramway is proposed to be laid in a district or districts the local and rural authorities of which consent to its construction, and the Board must, in such Local Government Acts, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 40 (8), and 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), ss. 6 (1), 21 (1)). As to the Mayor and Corporation of the City of London, see title METROPOLIS, Vol. XX., pp. 422 et seq.; as to the London County Council, see ibid., pp. 418 et seq.; as to urban and rural district councils, see title LOCAL GOVERNMENT, Vol. XIX., pp. 263 et seq., 329 et seq.; as to parish councils, see ibid., pp. 240 et seq.

 (g) As to the Highway Acts, see title HIGHWAYS, STREETS, AND BRIDGES, Vol. XVI., p. 24.

(h) "District" means the area within the jurisdiction of the local or road authority (Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 3); "road authority" means the authority of the districts specified in ibid., Sched. A, Part I. (ibid., s. 3). By the London Government Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 14), s. 4, the metropolitan borough councils have become the road authorities of the Metropolis; compare title HIGHWAYS, STREETS, AND BRIDGES, Vol. XVI., pp. 24 et seq.

(i) "Promoters" is defined by the Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), ss. 4 (2), 24, as "any person, persons, corporation, company or local authority authorised by special Act to construct a tramway"; the term also, apparently, comprises the permitted assigns of such persons (see ibid., ss. 43, 44 (sale and purchase of tramways)), but does not include lessees or licensees (Marshall v. South Staffordshire Tramways Co., [1896] 2 Ch. 36, C. A., per BENDLEY, L.J., at p. 51; Edinburgh Street Tramways Co. v. Edinburgh Corporation, [1894] A. C. 456, 469, 472).

case, make a special report stating the grounds on which the Order has been made (n):

SECT. 2.
Provisional
Orders.

Dissent of Occupiers.

1366. Every tramway in a town (o) must be, as nearly as may be, constructed and maintained in the middle of the road and, if one-third of the owners or occupiers of houses, shops or warehouses abutting thereon have expressed their dissent as prescribed by the Board of Trade (p), no tramway may be authorised by Order to be laid in such a manner that for 30 feet or upwards there is a less space than 9 feet 6 inches intervening between the outside of the footpath on either side of the road and the nearest rail of the tramway (q).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Procedure on Application.

1367. Promoters intending to apply for a Provisional Order must:—

Conditions as to notice and deposit.

(1) Notify their intention by an advertisement, headed with a short title descriptive of the undertaking, to be published in the October and November (or in one of those months) preceding their application (r);

(2) Serve notice of such intention, on or before the 15th December following, in accordance with the Standing Orders of both Houses of Parliament for the time being in force with respect to Bills for the construction of tramways (s);

(n) Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 5; see ibid., ss. 7, 63, regulating inquiries before a referee appointed by the Board of Trade; see also title PARLIAMENT, Vol. XXI., p. 730, note (e).

(o) There is no definition of "town" in the Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78); but compare the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), ss. 11, 15; London and South Western Rail. Co. (Directors etc.) v. Blackmore (1870), L. R. 4 H. L. 610, where the term is defined by Lord HATHERLEY, L.C., at p. 615; and title RAILWAYS AND CANALS, Vol. XXIII., p. 650, note (t).

(p) "Prescribed" means "prescribed by the Board of Trade Rules" (Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 3).

(q) Ibid., s. 9; compare ibid., ss. 25, 34 (gauge and overhang), which should be read in conjunction with ibid., s. 9; see also Board of Trade Rules, rr. iii.—v., xv. (4) (Stat. R. & O. Rev., Vol. XIII., Tramway, England and Scotland, p. 1); Edinburgh Street Tramways Co. v. Black (1873), L. R. 2 H. L. (Sc.) 336. As to notice to frontagers, see Standing Orders of the House of Commons (Private Business), No. 135; see title PARLIAMENT, Vol. XXI., p. 731. A connected line not shown on the plans and constructed less than 9 feet 6 inches from the outside of the footpath has been ordered to be removed by the promoters (Wilkinson and Marshall v. Newcastle-upon-Tyne Corporation (1902), 18 T. L. R. 332).

(r) Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 6 (1). As to the contents of the prescribed advertisement, see ibid., Sched. B, Parts I. and II. The insertion must be made once at least in each of two successive weeks in the same newspaper published in the district affected by the proposed undertaking, and where the proposed works will be made. If there is no such newspaper, the advertisement must be inserted in one published in the county in which the district is situated, or, failing this, in one published in some adjoining county. It must also be published in the London Gazette (ibid., Sched. B, Part I. (3)).

(s) Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 6 (1); Standing Orders of the House of Lords (Private Business), 1911, Nos. 13, 13a; see also Standing Orders of the House of Commons (Private Business), 1913, Nos. 13, 13a; Board of Trade Rules, rr. vi.—ix.; and compare Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 14.

SECT. 2.
Provisional
Orders.

(8) Deposit on or before the 80th. November, in the respective offices of the clerks of the county and parish councils and of the local authorities of every district proposed to be traversed by the undertaking, a copy of the aforesaid advertisement, together with a plan and section of the proposed works prepared in accordance with the regulations of the Board of Trade (t);

(4) Deposit on or before the 29th December at the office of the Board of Trade a memorial signed by the promoters praying for a Provisional Order, and a printed draft of such Order as proposed by them, with an estimate of the expenses of the proposed works signed by persons by whom it is made (u); and

(5) Deposit at the office specified in the advertisement a sufficient number of the printed copies above mentioned to be supplied to all persons applying for them for not more than 1s. a copy (w).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Consideration of Application by Board of Trade.

Duties of Board of Trade.

1368. The application for a Provisional Order must be considered by the Board of Trade, and the Board may, if it thinks fit, direct an inquiry (x) in the district to which the application relates, or otherwise inquire as to the propriety of proceeding upon the application. The Board must also consider such objections to the Order as may be laid before it on or before such date as the Board may prescribe, and determine whether the promoters may or may not proceed with the application (y); and where it appears expedient to the

SECT. 2.
Provisional
Orders.

SUB-SECT. 5.—Form and Contents of Order.

1369. Every Provisional Order so made must empower the promoters therein specified to make the tramway upon the gauge (b) and in the manner described, and contain such provisions as the Board of Trade, having regard to the nature of the application and the facts and circumstances of each case, may think fit to submit to Parliament for confirmation (c). No Order may, however, empower the promoters or any other persons to acquire land otherwise than by agreement, or to acquire any lands, even by agreement, except to the extent limited by the Order, or to construct a tramway elsewhere than along or across a public road or upon land taken by agreement (d).

Provisions as to gauge etc.

SUB-SECT. 6.—Deposit and Advertisement of Order.

1370. On the delivery to the promoters of a Provisional Order, they are required forthwith to publish it by the insertion of an advertisement in the local newspaper in which the original advertisement of the intended application was published (e), or if such newspaper be no longer published, in some other newspaper in the district; and by depositing printed copies for inspection at the offices of clerks of the county councils (f), and also at the office named in the advertisement for the sale of such copies to persons applying for them at not more than 1s. (g).

Advertis-
ment in local newspaper.

SUB-SECT. 7.—Costs.

1371. The costs in respect of the preparation and making of the Provisional Order must be paid by the promoters, who may be required by the Board of Trade to give security therefor before proceeding with the Order (h).

Provisional
Orders.

Deposit of security.

SUB-SECT. 8.—Deposit Fund.

1372. Before the delivery of the Provisional Order, the promoters, unless they are a local authority, must deposit in such bank, within such time, and in such manner, and subject to such conditions with respect to interest, repayment and forfeiture as the Board of Trade may prescribe, a prescribed (i) sum, amounting to not less than 4 per cent. on the amount of the estimated expense of the tramway, or any security prescribed by the Board having a value not less than such sum of money (j).

SUB-SECT. 9.—Confirmation by Parliament.

Procedure.

1373. The Board of Trade must, as soon as it conveniently can after the expiration of seven days from the completion, to its satisfaction, of the publication of any Provisional Order, which has been published not later than the 25th April in any year, provide for the introduction into either House of Parliament of a Bill for an Act to confirm such Order as set out in the Schedule to the Bill, and no Order under the Tramways Act, 1870 (k), shall have any operation until confirmed, with or without amendment, by Act of Parliament (l). If a petition be presented against any Provisional Order comprised in any Bill which is pending in either House, the Bill, so far as it relates to the Order petitioned against, may be referred to a select committee, and the petitioner may appear and oppose as in the case of a special Act (m). An Act of Parliament confirming a Provisional of a local authority with regard to expenses, see p. 806, post. The costs of applications to the Board of Trade for Provisional Orders under the Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), are to be taxed on the Chancery and not the parliamentary scale (Re Morley (1875), L. R. 20 Eq. 17). As to Parliamentary costs, see title PARLIAMENT, Vol. XXI., p. 745; as to High Court costs, see title SOLICITORS, Vol. XXVI.

By the Board of Trade Rules, r. xx., the promoters, if not a local authority and not already possessed of a tramway open for public traffic, must deposit not less than 5 per cent., but, by ibid., r. xxi., this deposit is not payable where the promoters own a tramway which has paid dividends on its ordinary share capital during the previous year. As to the respective rights of the promoters and creditors in case of non-completion of the line, see Re Lowesloft, Yarmouth, and Southwold Tramways Co. (1877), 6 Ch. D. 484; Re Birmingham and Lichfield Junction Rail. Co. (1885), 28 Ch. D. 652; compare Parliamentary Deposits and Bonds Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 27), as to which see title PARLIAMENT, Vol. XXI., p. 735, note (w). The parliamentary deposit made by a company that has failed to construct the tramway within the time limited and has been ordered to be wound up is not a fund out of which the liquidator is entitled to be paid his general costs of the winding-up, or his remuneration (Re Colchester Tramways Co., [1893] 1 Ch. 309; Re Tynemouth Borough Tramway Co. (1875), 33 L. SECT. 2.
Provisional
Orders.

SUB-SECT. 10.—Amending Orders.

1374. The Board of Trade may revoke, amend, extend or vary a Provisional Order by a further Order, made and confirmed in the same way, upon the application of any promoters, which must be made in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as that for the original Order (p).

Procedure.

SUB-SECT. 11.—Non-completion and Suspension of Works.

1375. If the promoters fail to complete and open a tramway for public traffic within two years from the date of the Provisional Order, or if the works are not substantially commenced within one year from such date or such shorter time as may be prescribed, or are suspended after their commencement without such reason as the Board of Trade regards as warranting such suspension, the powers of construction and erection given by the Order cease to be exercisable, except as to so much of the tramway as is then completed, unless the time be prolonged by the special direction of the Board (q). The Board may allow the exercise of such powers as to so much of the tramway as is then completed, but failing permission from the Board they will cease to be exercisable (r), and so much of the tramway as has been completed is deemed to be a tramway to which the provisions of the Tramways Act, 1870 (s), relating to discontinuance apply (t), and may be dealt with accordingly. A notice published by the Board in the London Gazette that a tramway has not been completed and opened for public traffic, or that the works have not been substantially completed or have been suspended without sufficient reason, is conclusive evidence of such non-completion, non-commencement, or suspension (u).

SECT. 3.
Construction.

SECT. 3.—Construction.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Gauge and Rails.

Construction of track.

1376. Every tramway must be constructed on the gauge prescribed by the special Act (w), or, if there be none, on such gauge as will admit of the use of carriages constructed for use upon railways of a gauge of 4 feet 8½ inches, and to be so laid and maintained that the uppermost surface of the rail shall be on a level with the surface of the road (x).

Inspection

No tramway may be opened for public traffic until it has been inspected and certified as fit for traffic in the prescribed manner (a).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Interference with Other Traffic.

(i.) Roads.

Conditions of interference.

1377. The promoters may from time to time open and break up any road (b) for the purpose of making, laying down, maintaining and renewing a duly authorised tramway or any part or parts of it, subject to the following restrictions:—

(1) They must give notice of their intention to the road authority (c) at least seven days before the commencement of the work, specifying the time of commencement and the portion of the road proposed to be dealt with (d).

(2) They must not open or break up or alter the level of any road except under the superintendence and to the satisfaction of the road authority, unless such superintendence is withheld at the time specified in the notice or discontinued during the work, and must pay all the reasonable expenses of such authority with respect to the superintendence (e).

(w) As to the meaning of "special Act," see Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 23; and p. 787, ante.

As to the space between rails etc., see also Board of Trade Memorandum, November, 1900, on these matters; and note (g), p. 783, note (b), p. 785, ante; compare title RAILWAYS AND CANALS, Vol. XXIII., pp. 686, 687. The intention of the Act has, however, in part not been carried out, as in practice it has been found that carriages and trucks cannot run upon the pattern of rail prescribed by regulation for use on tramways.

(b) "Road" is defined as "any carriageway being a public highway, and the carriageway of any bridge forming part of or leading to the same" (ibid., s. 2). Unauthorised interference with a road or street may be prosecuted under the Highway Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), s. 72, and the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 14; see title HIGHWAYS, STREETS, AND BRIDGES, Vol. XVI., p. 167.

(8) They must not, without the consent of the road authority (f), deal at any one time with a greater length than 100 yards of any road not exceeding a quarter of a mile in length, and, in the case of roads exceeding that length, must leave an interval of at least a quarter of a mile between any two places at which they open or break up the road, and must not open or break up a greater length than 100 yards at any such place (g).

SECT. 3.
CONSTRUCTION.

(ii.) Bridges.

1378. Where the carriageway over any bridge forms part of or is a road within the jurisdiction of the road authority (h), but the bridge is vested in any person, persons, or corporation distinct from the road authority, any work which the promoters are empowered to construct, affecting or in any way interfering with the structural work of the bridge, must be constructed at the cost of the promoters, under the superintendence and to the reasonable satisfaction of such person, persons, or corporation, unless such superintendence has been withheld after notice given seven days before the commencement of the work by the promoters (i).

Supervision of road authority.

(iii.) Level Crossings.

1379. Where the carriageway in or upon which any tramway is proposed to be laid down is crossed by any railway or tramway on the level, any work which the promoters are empowered to construct, affecting or interfering with such railway or tramway or the traffic thereon, must be constructed and maintained at the cost of the promoters under the superintendence and to the reasonable satisfaction of the person, corporation, or company owning the railway or tramway, unless such superintendence is refused or withheld after notice given seven days before the commencement of the work by the promoters (k).

Duties as to reinstatement.

SUB-SECT. 3.—Completion of Works and Reinstatement of Roads.

1380. When the promoters have opened or broken up any portion of any road they must comply with the following conditions:—

(1) They must with all convenient speed, and in all cases within four weeks, unless the road authority (l) otherwise consents in writing, complete the work on account of which the road was opened or broken up, and, subject to the formation, maintenance, or renewal of the tramway, fill in the ground and make good the surface to the satisfaction of the road authority, restoring the road to as good a condition as it was in before the opening and breaking up, and clearing away all surplus paving or metalling material or rubbish occasioned thereby (m).

(2) They must cause in the meantime the place where the road is opened or broken up to be fenced and watched and properly lighted at night.

(3) They must pay all reasonable expenses of the repair of the road for six months after its restoration, so far as such expenses are increased by the opening or breaking up (n).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Repair of Road.

Maintenance of track.

1381. The promoters must, at their own expense, maintain and repair to the satisfaction of the road authority (o), and with such materials and in such manner as the road authority directs, so much of any road upon which a tramway belonging to them is laid as lies between the rails; and, where two tramways are laid by the same promoters in any road at not more than 4 feet from each other, the portion of road between the tramways; and in each case so much of the road as extends 18 inches beyond the rails of and on each side of any such tramway (p). If they abandon the whole or any part of their undertaking and take up any part of any tramway belonging to them, they must, with all convenient speed, and within six weeks, unless the road authority otherwise consents in writing, fill in the ground and make good the surface, restoring, to the satisfaction of the road authority, the portion of road to as good a condition as it was in before the tramway was laid, and clearing away all surplus paving or metalling material or rubbish occasioned by such work (p).

(n) Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 27. Failure of the promoters to comply with these provisions as to restoration and repair is punishable by a penalty not exceeding £20, and a further penalty not exceeding £5 for each day during which any such failure continues after the first day on which the penalty is incurred, without prejudice to the enforcement by specific performance of the requirements of the Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), or to any other remedy against them (ibid., s. 27).

The promoters must also in the meantime provide for the fencing, watching and lighting at night of the place where the road is opened or broken up; and if they fail to comply with the foregoing provisions the road authority itself may, after seven days' notice to the promoters, open and break up the road and do the necessary works of repair, maintenance, or restoration, and recover the expenses incurred by it from the promoters (q).

SECT. 3.
Construction.

The road authority and the promoters may enter into, alter, renew, or vary contracts or arrangements for paving and keeping in repair the whole or any portion of the roadway of any road on which a tramway has been laid by the promoters, and with respect to the proportion of the incidental expense to be paid by either of the parties (r).

agreements.

SUB-SECT. 5.—Interference with Apparatus of Gas, Water, or Telegraphic Undertakings.

1382. For the purpose of laying down, maintaining, or renewing any of their tramways, and where it appears necessary or expedient in order to prevent frequent interruption of traffic by repairs or works connected therewith, the promoters may from time to time alter the position of any mains or pipes for the supply of gas or water, or any tubes, wires or apparatus for telegraphic or other purposes (s), subject to the following restrictions:—

Any alteration must be made with as little detriment and inconvenience to the company or persons owning or controlling the mains or pipes, tubes, wires, or apparatus, or to the inhabitants of the district, as the circumstances admit (x), and under the superintendence of such company or persons, or of their surveyor or engineer, for which purpose the promoters must give forty-eight hours' notice (a).

(a) Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 30. The operation of the provision is not confined to cases where the object of the alteration is to prevent interruption of traffic, but applies where the alteration is necessary to allow of the construction of the tramway, and the powers of the provision are not confined to alterations of pipes and apparatus in the road in which the tramway is authorised to be laid, nor to pipes and apparatus within the promoters' limits of deviation. The provision by implication gives the promoters the power of entering on private land necessary to enable them to carry out the alterations which it authorises (Re Rhondda Urban District Council and Taff Vale Rail. Co. (1907), 97 L. T. 892, C. A.). proposed to be removed or displaced, have first been made and laid down at the expense of the promoters, in lieu of such mains, pipes, and works, and are ready for use (b).

Construction.

(8) They must make good all damage to property belonging to or controlled by such company or persons, and make full compensation to all parties for loss or damage arising from interference with such property or with the private service pipes of any person supplied with water or gas; and they are also liable to a penalty not exceeding £20 for every day upon which the interruption occurs, if by any of their operations they interrupt the supply of water or gas in or through any main or main pipe (c).

Making good damage.

SUB-SECT. 6.—Interference with Sewers and Drains.

1363. Where any tramway, or any work connected therewith, interferes with any sewer, drain, watercourse, subway, defence, or work, or in any way affects the sewerage or drainage of any district, the promoters must not commence any work until fourteen days' previous notice (d) in writing of their intention, with all necessary particulars (e), has been left at the principal office of the proper authority, and such authority, unless it fails to do so within fourteen days after service of such notice and particulars, has signified its approval of the same. The promoters must also comply with and conform to all reasonable directions and regulations of the authority in executing the works, and provide, by such new, altered, or substituted works as the authority may require, for the prevention of injury or impediment to the sewers and works, saving harmless the authority against all and every expense occasioned thereby.

Conditions of interference.

(b) Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 30. The enactment also provides that the mains and works must be laid down "to the satisfaction of the surveyor or engineer of such water or gas or other company, or of such person, or, in case of disagreement between such surveyor or engineer and the promoters, as an engineer appointed by the Board of Trade may direct," and that no mains, pipes or other apparatus shall be laid down contrary to the regulations of any Act of Parliament relating to water, gas, or other companies, or to telegraphs. Though the provision includes all forms of supply and communication, it is the practice, in the case of undertakings to which the Electric Lighting Acts (see title ELECTRIC LIGHTING AND POWER, Vol. XII., p. 542, note (a)) apply, to provide that alterations of lines etc. shall be done only in terms of these Acts. It may be noted that the Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), which contemplated nothing more complex than the rails for a horse tramway, makes no provision as to road improvements and widenings carried out in connexion with their construction, or as to the protection of bridges, culverts etc., or as to the erection of posts and standards etc.; see titles GAS, Vol. XV., p. 358, note (p); TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES, pp. 360 et seq., ante; WATER SUPPLY.

(d) Notice may be dispensed with in cases of urgency (St. Luke's Vestry v. North Metropolitan Tramways Co. (1876), 1 Q. B. D. 760).

Jo. 408 (where it was held that the tramway company, having given the fourteen days' notice of the commencement of works prescribed by this provision, had sufficiently complied with the statute, and that the local authority, having failed to express its approval or disapproval within that period, could not maintain an action for a declaration to restrain the company from executing such works).

SECT. 3.
Construction.

All the works must be done under the direction, superintendence and control of the engineer or other officers of the authority, and at the reasonable cost and expense of the promoters, and any new, altered, or substituted works, or defence connected therewith, which have been so completed by or at the cost of the promoters are thereafter as completely under the jurisdiction and control of and as fully maintained by the authority as other sewers or works (f).

SUB-SECT. 7.—Power to Break up Road on which Tramway is Laid.

exercise.

1384. The powers of breaking up any road (g) along or across which any tramway is laid, and the powers vested in local (h) or road (i) authorities for any of the purposes for which they are constituted, or in any company, body, or person for any purposes with respect to gas or water supply or telegraphic communication, are unaffected by the Tramways Act, 1870 (j), but the exercise of such powers is limited by the following restrictions:—

(1) The authority, company, or person must cause as little detriment to the promoters as circumstances admit.

(2) Except in cases of urgency (k), they must give to the promoters and their lessees, if any, eighteen hours' notice at least of their intention to commence any work which will interrupt the traffic on the tramway, specifying the time at which the work will be begun; but they are not liable to pay to the promoters or lessees any compensation for injury done to the tramway (l) by the execution of such work, or for loss of traffic occasioned thereby, or for the reasonable exercise of the powers vested in them.

(3) Whenever they shall so require for the purpose of executing such work, the promoters, or their lessees, must either stop traffic on the tramway referred to in the notice, or shore up and secure it at their own risk and cost during the execution of the work, but such work must be completed by the local or road authority with all reasonable speed.

(4) No company, body, or person may execute any such work so far as it immediately affects the tramway except under the superintendence and to the reasonable satisfaction of the promoters, unless they refuse such superintendence at the time specified in the notice or discontinue it during the progress of the work, and the expense of the execution must be borne by the company, body, or person executing it (m).

SUB-SECT. 8.—Settlement of Differences.

SECT. 3.

Construction.

Settlement of differences.

1385. In the case of any difference (n) between the promoters or lessees and any local or road authority, or gas or water company, or other company or person possessing sewers, drains, tubes, wires or apparatus for telegraphic or other purposes (o), with respect to any interference or control exercised by or claimed to be exercised by either of the parties in respect of any tramway or work, or in relation to any work or proceedings, or the propriety or mode of execution of such work, or the amount of any compensation to be made by or to the promoters or lessees, or any other subject or thing regulated by the Tramways Act, 1870 (p), the matter in difference must be settled by an engineer or other fit person nominated by the Board of Trade on the application of either party, the expenses of the reference being borne and paid as the referee directs (q).

SECT. 4.—Working.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Carriages.

1386. The promoters and their lessees may use on their tramways carriages (r) with flange wheels or wheels suitable only to run on the flanged wheels.

793; ante. As to the meaning of "additional expenses" and "interruption of traffic" under this provision, see Bristol Tramways and Carriage Co. v. National Telephone Co., [1899] 2 Ch. 282; Re Bristol Gas Co. and Bristol Tramways and Carriage Co., Ltd., [1910] 1 K. B. 114, C. A. T. 533. This rule does not apply in the case of certain differences between the promoters or lessees and licensee (see Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 39), which must be determined by two justices; see Regent's Canal Dock Co. v. London County Council (1907), 71 J. P. 201, where it was held that the justices' jurisdiction is not ousted by the Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 33.

(r) A tramcar may be a "stage carriage" within the Railway Passenger Duty Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 79), ss. 13, 15, which provide against overcrowding (Brian v. Aylward (1902), 18 T. L. R. 371; compare Black v. Neilson (1897), 2 Adam, 424 (decided under the Glasgow Police Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. cclxxiii.)), but is not an omnibus within the Town Police Clauses Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 14), from the operation of which it is excluded (ibid., s. 3). As to the liability of tramcars to duty under the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 8), see Hickman v.

rail prescribed by their special Act and, subject to the provisions of the special Act and those of the Tramways Act, 1870 (s), they are entitled to the exclusive use of their tramways for carriages having such wheels (t).

No carriage may extend more than 11 inches on each side beyond the outer edge of the wheels (u).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Motive Power.

Prescribed by special Act.

1387. The motive power to be used on any tramway is prescribed by the special Act, and where no such power is prescribed all carriages used on any tramway must be moved by animal power only (v).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Bye-laws.

Scope of bye-laws.

1388. Local authorities (a) may frame bye-laws for the regulation of the rate of speed (b) to be observed in travelling on any tramway in Birch (1889), 24 Q. B. D. 172. A tramcar has been held to be a "coach" under a local Act (stat. 1767) 7 Geo. 3, c. lxxiii., s. 12 (Plymouth, Stonehouse, and Devonport Tramway Co. v. General Tolls Co., Ltd. (1896), 75 L. T. 467, C. A.; affirmed (1898), 14 T. L. R. 531, H. L.); see also London Tramways Co. v. Bailey (1877), 3 Q. B. D. 217; Armstrong v. South London Tramways Co., Ltd. (1890), 64 L. T. 96, C. A.; Barton v. Nicholson, [1909] 1 K. B. 397 (where a tramcar was held to be a "carriage" under the Motor Cars (Use and Construction) Order, 1904, art. iv. (Stat. R. & O., 1904, p. 516), as regards the rule of the road; see title STREET AND AERIAL TRAFFIC, pp. 276, 277, ante). As to carriages used on a light railway, see p. 819, post. The term "regular running cars" has been held, in an agreement between advertising contractors and promoters providing for the payment of rent in respect of each regular running car, to include any cars which were employed in the service of the undertakers as rolling stock for regular use at the commencement of the year and which were intended for employment as regular running cars, and it was held that regular running was not incompatible with occasional withdrawals for repairs (Griffiths and Millington, Ltd. v. Southampton Corporation (1906), 70 J. P. 170).

(s) 33 & 34 Vict. c. 78.

(t) Ibid., s. 34. A penalty not exceeding £20 is imposed on persons using such carriages except under lease or licence from the Board of Trade (ibid., s. 54; see p. 809, post); compare Cottam v. Guest (1880), 6 Q. B. D. 70; Manchester Corporation and Manchester Carriage and Tramway Co. v. Andrews & Son (1889), 5 T. L. N. 126; Edinburgh Street Tramways Co. v. Edinburgh Corporation, [1894] A. C. 456. As to the power of a local authority to license carriages using the tramways, see Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 48.

(u) Ibid., s. 34.

(v) Ibid. Under the powers conferred on it in this behalf by ibid., s. 64 (4), the Board of Trade has issued regulations from time to time with respect to motive power by steam and various forms of electrical traction; see Bell v. Stockton etc. Tramways Co. (1887), 51 J. P. 804. The Board of Trade regulations for cable traction require cars to be so constructed as to enable the driver to command the fullest view of the road, but a staircase leading to the roof shutting off a small part of the road does not indicate such a want of reasonable regard for public safety as to constitute a fault on the part of the tramway company (Cass v. Edinburgh and District Tramways Co., [1909] S. C. 1068). In St. Helens District Tramways Co. v. Wood (1891), 56 J. P. 70, a tramway company was held responsible for the neglect of an engine driver to comply with the Board of Trade regulations as to lamps on engines.

their districts, the distances at which carriages using the tramway shall be allowed to follow each other, the stopping of such carriages, and the traffic on the road on which the tramway is laid (c); and the promoters and their lessees are similarly empowered to make bye-laws for preventing the commission of any nuisance in or upon any carriage, or in or against any premises, and with respect to the travelling in or upon any carriage belonging to them (d).

SECT. 4.
Working.

Notice of the publication of bye-laws, made either by the local authority or by the promoters or their lessees, must be published by the insertion of an advertisement within one month of the making of the bye-law once at least in each of two successive weeks in a newspaper published in the district or, if there is no newspaper published in the district, in the county in which it is situated, or, if there be none, in some adjoining county, and also once at least in the London Gazette (e). A copy of every such proposed bye-law must also be sent to the Board of Trade not less than two calendar months before it will come into operation, and, if made by the local authority, must be delivered to the promoters of the tramway, and, if made by the promoters, to the local authority, and no bye-law which has been disallowed by the Board within two calendar months after it has been laid before the Board shall be of any effect (f).

Publication of proposed bye-laws.

The bye-laws may impose reasonable penalties for offences, not exceeding 40s. for each offence, with further penalties for continuing offences (g).

Though, however, there is no general power under that Act to make bye-laws, it is the practice to empower the Board of Trade to do so under special Acts. The Board has issued model bye-laws for the use of

SECT. 4.

SUB-SECT. 4.—Liability for Injuries to Employees.

Working.
Liability for injuries.

1389. Tramway companies are not liable to their employees in respect of injuries resulting from employment under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880 (h), unless the employee is a workman employed in manual labour (i); but they are so liable under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (j), which applies to all persons employed on tramways except those employed otherwise than by way of manual labour whose remuneration exceeds £250 per annum, casual labourers and outworkers (k).

SUB-SECT. 5.—Notice of Accidents to Employees.

Notice to Board of Trade.

1390. Where any accident occurs in connexion with the construction, use, working, and repair of any tramroad or tramway, which causes loss of life or such bodily injury to an employee as to prevent him from being employed for five hours on his ordinary work on any one of the three following working days, notice in writing must be sent to the Board of Trade as soon as possible, and, in case of an accident not resulting in death, not later than six days after the accident, specifying the time and place of the accident, the name and address of any person killed or injured, the work on which he was employed, and the nature of the injury, and failure to comply with this provision is punishable by a fine of 40s. (l).

SECT. 5.—*Rights and Liabilities of Promoters.*SUB-SECT. 1.—Extent of Rights over Roads and Subjacent Minerals.

Subordinate rights of promoters.

local authorities and promoters under this provision. Where a bye-law provided that every passenger shall enter or mount upon or depart from or get off a car by the hindermost or conductor's platform and not otherwise, it was held that a passenger who, on the arrival of a car at the terminus of the tramway, had alighted from the end which while the car was in motion was the driver's end had committed a breach of the bye-law (Monkman v. Stickney, [1913] 2 K. B. 377).

rights of any owner, lessee, or occupier of mines or minerals lying under or adjacent to so such road, nor is the owner, lessee, or occupier liable to make good, or pay compensation for, damage to the tramway occasioned by the ordinary working of the mines (n). The rights of the promoters also in no way affect the powers of road authorities or of the owners, commissioners, or lessees of railways, tramways, or inland navigations with respect to widening, altering, diverting, or improving any road, railway, tramway, or inland navigation (o), or of local or police authorities with respect to the regulation of traffic (p), or the right of the public to pass along or across any part of a road on which a tramway is laid, whether on or off the tramway, with carriages not having wheels suitable only to run on the rails (q).

Torbain* (1877), 3 App. Cas. 58. A passenger leaving a car and completing the journey authorised under a ticket issued to him thereon upon another car may, on refusal to make any further payment, be convicted for travelling without paying his fare

SUB-SECT. 3.—Liabilities.

1393. The promoters or their lessees are liable for all accidents, damages, and injuries happening through their act or default, or the acts or defaults of their employees, by reason or in consequence of any of their works or carriages, and they are required to save harmless all road and other authorities, companies or bodies, collectively and individually, and their officers and servants, from all damages and costs in respect of such accidents, damages and injuries (s).

(Bastable v. Metcalfe, [1906] 2 K. B. 288). In Nimmo v. Lanarkshire Tramways Co. (1912), 49 Sc. L. R. 549, it was held that a person, not being a workman, who declined to pay more than the fare demanded from workmen in cars run at certain times for their convenience, having acted without intent to defraud and in vindication of what he regarded as a civil right, was not liable to conviction for contravention of the Tramways Act, 1890 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 56, and also that the tramway company was not entitled to discriminate in the matter of charges between persons using workmen's cars. It seems that the actual tolls in force for the time being, and not the maximum tolls authorised by statute, must be exhibited; compare Gregson v. Potter (1879), 4 Ex. D. 142.

(s) Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 55. This provision does not make the promoters or their lessees liable for mere accidents, caused without negligence, by their use of tramways, but applies only to a wrongful act or default (Brocklehurst v. Manchester, Bury, Rochdale and Oldham Steam Tramways Co. (1886), 17 Q. B. D. 118; Goldberg & Son, Ltd. v. Liverpool Corporation (1900), 82 L. T. 362, C. A.; West v. Bristol Tramways Co., [1908] 2 K. B. 14, C. A.; Sadler v. South Staffordshire and Birmingham District Steam Tramways Co. (1889), 23 Q. B. D. 17, C. A.). Where there was uncontradicted evidence in an action for negligence causing injuries to a passenger on an electric tramway that the car was in good order and properly worked, and that the company had used every possible precaution known to electrical engineers to prevent the occurrence of the accident that took place, it was held that the defendant company, not being in the position of insurers against all risks, was entitled to judgment (Newberry v. Bristol Tramways and Carriage Co. (1912), 107 L. T. 801, C. A.). In Leaver v. Pontypridd Urban District Council (1911), 76 J. P. 31, H. L., two men wheeling a truck set it on end against a wall bounding a narrow road in order to avoid an approaching tramcar, the driver of which, after slowing down until the front part of the car had passed the men in safety, drove on at an increased speed, causing the car to strike the truck and thus fatally injuring one of the men, and it was held that this constituted sufficient evidence of negligence to go to the jury in an action by the widow against the owner under the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846 (9 & 10 Vict. c. 93); see title NEGLIGENCE, Vol. XXI., pp. 454 et seq. As to the liability of the promoters for assaults committed by their servants, see Smith v. North Metropolitan Tramways Co. (1891), 55 J. P. 630, C. A.; Seymour v. Greenwood (1861), 6 H. & N. 359; Dyer v. Munday, [1895] 1 Q. B. 742, C. A.; and title MASTER AND SERVANT, Vol. XX., pp. 248 et seq.; as to unjustifiable prosecution or detention of passengers by their officers under the Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 52 (as to which see, further, p. 808, post), see Delany v. Dublin United Tramways Co., Ltd. (1892), 30 L. R. Ir. 726, C. A. North Metropolitan Tramways Co.* (1898), 14 T. L. R. 286; Kidley v. London County Council (1913), 29 T. L. R. 680. As regards the use of electricity for motive power, tramway companies would appear not to be liable for nuisance caused by the exercise without negligence of their statutory powers (generally, see West v. Bristol Tramways Co., [1908] 2 K. B. 14, C. A., where it was held that the plaintiff, a market gardener, had a common law right of action for injury caused to his plants through the use of blocks of beechwood, impregnated with creosote, by a tramway company, which was authorised by its special Act to pave with wood, but might have employed a well-known method not involving the use of creosote, and was not protected from liability by its Act. In Clarke v. West Ham Corporation, [1909] 2 K. B. 858, C. A., the defendant corporation was held to be liable for damages sustained by a passenger on its tramway through coming into contact with a standard which was electrically charged owing to a defect constituting a breach of the statutory regulations of the Board of Trade, and was also held not to be entitled to impose a condition limiting its liability for negligence without giving the passenger, who was willing to pay the published fare, the option of travelling at a higher fare without any such condition. Where a tramway is leased, the owners contracting to do repairs at the cost of the lessees, the owners are liable to the lessees for damage arising from the negligence of a contractor employed by them to do the repairs (City of Birmingham Tramways Co., Ltd. v. Law, [1910] 2 K. B. 965). The protection under the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61), extends to local authorities empowered by statute to work tramways (Lyles v. Southend-on-Sea Corporation, [1905] 2 K. B. 1, C. A.; compare title PUBLIC AUTHORITIES AND PUBLIC OFFICERS, Vol. XXIII., p. 342). SECT. 6.—Powers of Local Authorities.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Power of Purchase.

Conditions of exercise.

1395. Where the promoters of a tramway in any district are not the local authority, that authority may, with the approval of the Board of Trade, require the promoters to sell their undertaking, or so much of it as is within the district, either within six months after the expiration of twenty-one years from the time when they were empowered to construct it, within six months after the expiration of every subsequent period of seven years, or within three months after any order made by the Board with respect to the discontinuance of a tramway (b) or the insolvency of the promoters (c). The purchase can, however, only be made if the local authority has decided to effect it by resolution passed at a special meeting, of which previous notice has been given in the manner in which such notices are usually given, and at which two-thirds of the members are present and vote, and a majority of those present and voting concur in the resolution (d). The local authority must pay the then value of the tramway, exclusive of any allowance for past or future profits or any compensation for compulsory sale or other consideration whatsoever, and of all lands, buildings, works, materials, and plant of the promoters suitable for the purposes of the undertaking (e), including buildings outside the South Lancashire Tramways Co.*, [1910] 2 Ch. 263, C. A. Where a local authority purchased the undertaking of a tramway company which was also empowered to run omnibuses, it was held that the statutory powers of the authority did not authorise it to work omnibuses in connexion with the tramways (A.-G. v. London County Council, [1902] A. C. 165). Similarly, a local authority empowered to use all tramways "belonging to or leased by" the authority for the purpose, inter alia, "of conveying and delivering animals, goods, minerals, or parcels," has been held not to be entitled to expend any part of the borough fund or the receipts of its tramways, or the proceeds of any borough rate, or any other moneys for establishing or maintaining the business of carriers, except as part of or in connexion with its tramway undertaking, and in respect of articles carried on tramways belonging to or leased to the authority or on which the authority had power to run carriages (A.-G. v. Manchester Corporation, [1906] 1 Ch. 643; compare A.-G. v. Mersey Railway, [1907] 1 A. C. 415).

district of the local authority (f), the value being determinable in case of difference by a referee nominated by the Board of Trade on the application of either party, and the expenses of reference being borne and paid as the referee directs (g). When any such sale has been made, all the rights, powers, and authorities of the promoters in respect to the undertaking are transferred to and vested in and may be exercised by the purchasing authority as if the tramway was constructed by it under a Provisional Order, and it is deemed to be the promoter in reference to such Order (h).

SECT. 6.
Powers of Local Authorities.

The local authority may pay the purchase-money and any expenses incurred in the purchase out of the same rate, and has the same powers of borrowing on the security of such rate, as if the expenses were incurred in applying for, obtaining, and carrying into effect a Provisional Order, and where the local rate is insufficient for these purposes on account of any limitation by law, the Board of Trade may extend its limits by a Provisional Order to be confirmed in the same manner as an Order for the promotion of a tramway. Subject to the foregoing provisions, two or more local authorities may jointly purchase any undertaking or so much of it as is within their districts (i).

(g) Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 43. It has been held under this provision that when one tramway has been incorporated with others by statute in one undertaking, the local authority may purchase such tramway within six months after the expiration of twenty-one years from the time when the promoters were authorised to construct the undertaking, although no right to purchase the other lines has arisen, or although they may not be within the district of the purchasing authority, and although the general system of the tramway may be dislocated by such purchase (North Metropolitan Tramways Co. v. London County Council (1895), 60 J. P. 23, C. A.). The basis of valuation is the value of the tramway as successfully constructed and in complete working condition, after deducting a proper sum for depreciation, but without taking into account rights of user (Edinburgh Street Tramways Co. v. Edinburgh Corporation, [1894] A. C. 456; London Street Tramways Co. v. London County Council, [1894] A. C. 489); see also Re Manchester Carriage and Tramways Co., Ltd. and Ashton-under-Lyne Corporation (1904), 68 J. P. 576 (purchase of depot); Re Southampton Tramways Co. and Southampton Corporation (1899), 81 L. T. 652, C. A. Leyton Urban District Council* (1908), 98 L. T. 792, C. A. (where a local authority had purchased a tramway running over private land, and was held liable to pay not merely for the materials of the tramway, but for some easement over such land). It has been held that the fact that the local authority would have to contribute to the cost of widening the street, if it had to make the tramway itself at the date of its requisition to sell, ought not to be taken into consideration for the purpose of assessing the " then value " of the tramway under the Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 43 (London, Deptford and Greenwich Tramways Co. v. London County Council, [1905] 1 K. B. 316).

Powers of Local Authorities.
Voluntary
sale.

1396. Where a tramway has been opened in any district for a period of six months the promoters may, with the consent of the Board of Trade, sell their undertaking to any person, persons, corporation, or company, or, provided that the purchase has been approved by a resolution passed at a special meeting under similar conditions to those above stated as to compulsory purchase, to a local authority. All the rights, powers, authorities, obligations, and liabilities of the promoters are after such sale transferred to and exercisable by the purchasers in the same manner as if the tramway had been constructed by such purchasers under the powers conferred by special Act, with respect to which they are deemed to be the promoters. Where the purchase is made by a local authority, such authority may pay the purchase-money and all incidental expenses out of the same funds, and has the same powers and is subject to the same conditions as in the case of a compulsory purchase as described above (j).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Power of Leasing.

Terms of lease.

1397. A local authority which has constructed or acquired a tramway may, with the consent of the Board of Trade and subject to the provisions of the Tramways Act, 1870 (k), demise by lease, to be approved by the Board, the right of user of the tramway, and of demanding and taking the tolls and charges authorised in respect thereof, to any person, persons, corporation, or company, the lease being made for a term or terms not exceeding twenty-one years and renewable for a similar term with the consent of the Board. Every such lease implies a condition of re-entry on the discontinuance of the working of the tramway or any part thereof by the lessees for three calendar months, if the discontinuance is not occasioned by circumstances beyond their control, other than the want of sufficient funds (l).

(j) Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 44. As to compulsory purchase, see p. 802, ante; as to the extent of powers transferred under this provision, see Edinburgh Street Tramways Co. v. Edinburgh Corporation, [1894] A. C. 456; Re Pontypridd and Rhondda Valleys Tramways Co., Ltd. (1889), 58 L. J. (CH.) 536; Kaye v. Croydon Tramways Co., [1898] 1 Ch. 358, C. A.; Marshall v. South Staffordshire Tramways Co., [1895] 2 Ch. 36, C. A.

(l) Ibid., s. 19. As to discontinuance of working, see p. 810, post; as to the validity of leases under this provision and the capacity of the lessees, see Omnibus Conveyance Co. v. Liverpool United Tramways and Omnibus Co. (1882), 26 Sol. Jo. 580. Where there was a provision in a lease of tramways that the lessees should "keep the lessors free from all expenses whatever in connection with the said tramways," it was held that all assessments, rates and taxes, whether imperial or local, were expenses within this provision (Glasgow Corporation v. Glasgow Tramway and Omnibus Co., [1898] A. C. 631). Where a corporation agreed to repair a tramway at the cost of a company to whom it had leased it, and to facilitate the maintenance of the tram service during the repairs, the lessees were held entitled to recover the amounts paid by them to passengers injured through the derailment of a car resulting from the negligence of a contractor who had been employed by the corporation and had agreed to be responsible for all damage arising from the relaying of the track (City of Birmingham Tramways Co., Ltd. v. Law, [1910] 2 K. B. 965). Where a local authority was empowered by special Act to purchase a tramway constructed in its borough within a specified period and the promoters, without

No lease of a tramway may be approved by the Board of Trade unless the intention to make the lease has been published by the local authority by an advertisement inserted once at least in each of two successive weeks in one and the same newspaper published in the district affected by it, or in one published in the county in which such district is situated, or in one published in some adjoining county, and has also been published once at least in the London Gazette. Every such advertisement must contain the term of the lease, the rent received, a general description of the covenants and conditions contained therein, and the place where the lease is deposited for public inspection; and a copy of the lease must be deposited for this purpose during office hours at the office of the local authority or some other convenient place within the district to which the lease relates (m).

1398. Nothing in the Tramways Act, 1870 (n), authorises any local authority to place carriages and run them upon, or to demand tolls and charges for the use of, a tramway (o), but this power may be given by special provisions in a Provisional Order or special Act (p).

completing it, had assigned their rights to a company, it was held that such assignment did not require the approval of the Board of Trade, and that the Board, by certain documents, signed by an assistant secretary, sufficiently recognised the company as the transferee of the undertaking (Hartlepool Electric Tramways Co. v. Hartlepool Corporation (1911), 75 J. P. 537, C. A.).

A., where a lease to the plaintiff company provided that the lessees should, in addition to rent, pay to the local authority £100 for each mile of tramway in lieu of repairing the road, and also so much per annum per unit of electricity supplied by the local authority, these additional rents being recoverable by distress, it was held that ad valorem duty was payable in respect of the amounts payable in lieu of repairs, but not on the minimum of any sum payable for electricity supplied. Where an agreement for the lease of a tramway by a local authority to a company provided that the company should be liable to a penalty if it failed to give a service in accordance with the requirements of the local authority, and the special Act confirming the agreement provided, inter alia, that "any penalties under the said agreement" should be recoverable summarily, it was held that this proviso was included under the lease, and was applicable on the failure of the company to comply with its conditions (R. v. Devonport Justices, Ex parte Devonport Tramways Co. (1909), 101 L. T. 424). • As to the limitation of powers of local authorities and the delegation of powers by lessees, see *Eccles Corporation v. The authority may, however, leave the tramway open to be used by the public, demanding and taking the tolls and charges authorised (q).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Expenses of Provisional Order.•

Rates.

1399. All expenses incurred by a local authority (r) which is the promoter of any tramway in applying for, obtaining, and carrying into effect the purposes of a Provisional Order must be defrayed out of the local rate (s), and are to be deemed to be purposes for and to which such rate may be made and applied (t). Where the rate is insufficient for the payment of such expenses on account of legal limitations the Board of Trade may, by the Provisional Order, extend the limits to such amount as the Board thinks fit and prescribe for such payment (u).

Loans.

The local authority may borrow any sums necessary for defraying such expenses for the purposes of the Provisional Order on the credit of the local rate, and may, for securing the repayment of sums so borrowed, mortgage the local rate to the persons by or on whose behalf such sums are advanced, provided that such sums do not exceed such amount as may be sanctioned by the Board of Trade (w). The money may be borrowed for such time, not exceeding thirty years, as the local authority may, with the sanction of the Board, determine, and, subject to repayment within thirty years, (r) As to the meaning of local authority, see note (f), p. 781, ante.

(s) The term "local rate" as defined by the Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 3, Sched. A, Part I., and modified by later legislation, comprises, in the City of London, presumably, a "consolidated rate" (see City of London Sewers Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. clxiii), s. 168; City of London Sewers Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. exxxiii.), s. 8); in the Metropolis, the county rate levied by the London County Council (Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), ss. 3 (1), 4, 8 (9), 69 (4); County Rates Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 81); in urban and rural sanitary districts, the rates levied by the councils of such districts (Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), s. 21 (1)); in local districts constituted under the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), and districts formed by a county council under the Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), rates levied by the councils of such districts (Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 271; Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 57); and compare R. v. Barnes, Ex parte Ratcliff (1890), 13 T. L. R. 25; in rural parishes, the parish rate levied by the parish council or, where there is no such council, the parish meeting (Local Government Act, 1896 (59 & 57 Vict. c. 73), ss. 1 (2), 6 (1), 19). A county council in England, other than the London County Council, is not a local authority for the purpose of the Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78). It may, however, apply for an order under the Light Railways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 48), s. 2.

the local authority may either pay off the amount borrowed by equal annual instalments, or in every year set apart as a sinking fund, and accumulate at compound interest by investment in Exchequer Bills or other Government securities, a sufficient sum to pay off the moneys borrowed or a part thereof at such times as the authority may determine (x). The provisions of the Commissioners Clauses Act, 1847 (a), with respect to mortgages executed by the Commissioners apply to all mortgages executed under the foregoing provisions (b). The local authority must keep separate accounts of all payments made in applying for, obtaining and carrying into effect the Provisional Order, and in the repayment of moneys borrowed, and also of all moneys received by way of rent or tolls in respect of the tramway authorised thereby; and any surplus remaining in its hands after payment of all the foregoing charges must be applied to the purposes for which the local rate may be applied (c).

1400. The obstruction of any person acting under the authority of the promoters in the lawful exercise of their powers in setting out, making, forming, laying down, repairing, or renewing any tramway, or the defacement or destruction of any mark made for setting out the line of any tramway, or the damaging or destruction of any property of the promoters or their lessees or licensees, is an offence in each case punishable by a fine not exceeding £5 (d).

Obstruction

(a) 10 & 11 Vict. c. 16, ss. 77—85. The terms "special Act" and "Commissioners" in these provisions are to be respectively construed to mean a Provisional Order under the Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), and a local authority (ibid., s. 20).

(b) Ibid., s. 20.

(c) Ibid.; compare Local Loans Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 83), s. 31, empowering a local authority to borrow any sum which it is authorised to borrow, notwithstanding any provision in any earlier Act; see title MONEY AND MONEY LENDING, Vol. XXI., p. 61. The Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 2, contains certain special provisions in this behalf relating to the Metropolis.

(d) Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 40. As to obstruction, see Hartley v. Chadwick (1904), 68 J. P. 512, where it was held that the drivers of tramcars and of vehicles must act "reasonably" when meeting, that the driver of a tramcar has no absolute right to make all other vehicles get out of his way, and that the driver of a dray has no absolute right to maintain his course on the left or usual driving side in such circumstances. As to a motor passing a tramcar, see Burton v. Nicholson, [1909] 1 K. B. 397; and title STREET AND AERIAL TRAFFIC, pp. 272, 273, ante. The fact that a company is authorised to run tramways on a highway does not exempt its drivers from the common law obligation to take reasonable care not to injure persons lawfully using the highway (Rattee v. Norwich Electric Tramway Co. (1902), 18 T. L. R. 562. C. A.).

SECT. 7.
Offences.

and wilfully refuses or neglects to quit such carriage on arriving at the point to which he has paid his fare, is liable to a fine not exceeding 40s. for every such offence(e). Any officer or servant of the promoters or lessees of a tramway, and all persons called by him to his assistance, may seize and detain, until he can be conveniently taken before a justice or otherwise discharged by due course of law, any person who is discovered either in or after committing or attempting to commit any of the foregoing offences, and whose name or residence is unknown to such officer or servant(f).

Dangerous
goods.

1402. No person is entitled to carry, or require to be carried, any goods of a dangerous nature on any tramway, and any person sending any such goods by any tramway without distinctly marking their nature on the outside of the package containing them, or otherwise giving written notice to the book-keeper or other servant with whom they are left at the time of their sending, is liable to a fine not exceeding £20 for every such offence. The promoters or their lessees may also refuse to take any parcel which they suspect to contain goods of a dangerous nature, or require it to be opened to ascertain the fact(g).

see also titles NEGLIGENCE, Vol. XXI., p. 415; NUISANCE, Vol. XXI., pp. 520, 521. As to interference with tramways, see, further, title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX. p. 706, note (b).

(e) Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 51. As to the liability of a passenger on refusal to pay his fare on demand after the loss of his ticket, see Hunt v. Green (1906), 96 L. T. 23; and, where such loss is due to the fault of an official of the company, Wilson v. Fearnley (1905), 92 L. T. 647. A passenger who has paid the fare entitling him to travel from his starting point to another point on the line is not entitled to alight at an intermediate place, walk a certain distance, and get on to another tramcar in order to complete the length of the journey paid for (Bastable v. Metcalfe, [1906] 2 K. B. 288). A passenger who, having been carried beyond his destination through neglect of the conductor of the tramcar to stop, and having thus travelled too far without any intention to defraud, refuses to pay his fare as a protest, and lodges a complaint with the company, is liable to pay such fare under a bye-law that each passenger shall pay the legal fare on demand of an authorised officer of the company (Tufley v. Tate (1906), 96 L. T. 24; compare Heap v. Day (1886), 34 W. R. 627; Lowe v. Volp, [1896] 1 Q. B. 256; Hanks v. Bridgman, [1896] 1 Q. B. 253; Nimmo v. Lanarkshire Tramways Co. (1912), 49 Sc. L. R. 549).

(f) Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 52. As to the liability of the promoters or their lessees for the acts of their servants under this and the foregoing provisions, see note (s), p. 800, ante. It has been held that a person stepping on to a tramcar from the street did not leave the street within the meaning of a provision in a local Act that "every known or reputed thief found in any street or place adjacent with intent to commit any crime" might be arrested (Martin v. McIntyre, [1910] S. C. (Justiciary) 72). As to bye-laws, see pp. 796, 797, ante.

(g) Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 53. The sender of specially dangerous goods is liable at common law for damage (Parrant v. Barnes (1862), 11 C. B. (N. S.) 553), but there must apparently be proof of guilty knowledge to make such person liable under this provision (Hearne v. Garton (1859), 2 E. & E. 66); compare Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), s. 105; East Indian Railway v. Kalidas Mukerjee, [1901] A. C. 396, P. C.; and title CARRIERS, Vol. IV., p. 27.

1403. Any person who uses on a tramway or any part thereof any carriages having flange or other wheels suitable to run only on the rail of the tramway, except under a lease from or by agreement with the promoters, or under a licence from the Board of Trade, is liable for every such offence to a fine not exceeding £20 (h). SECT. 7.

Unauthorised user.

SECT. 8.—Compulsory Licences.

1404. If, on the representation of the local or road authority or of twenty ratepayers in any district, it is proved to the satisfaction of the Board of Trade that the public is deprived of the full benefit of any tramway, the Board may grant a licence, if necessary after inquiry by a referee, to any company or person to use it for such traffic as is authorised by the special Act, with carriages to be approved by the Board (i). Condition of grant.

1405. The licence, which may be for any period not less than one nor more than three years, must specify the number of carriages, the times at which they may run, and the tolls to be paid for the use of the tramway by the licensee, who must permit one person, duly authorised for that purpose by the promoters or their lessees, to ride free of charge upon each of their carriages for the whole or any part of the journey (k). Terms of licence.

1406. On failure of the licensee to pay the tolls due in respect of passengers carried in any carriage, the promoters may sell such carriage, or, if it be removed from the tramway or premises, any other carriages thereon, retaining the amount payable and the Rights of promoters.

(h) Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 54. It is not necessary to prove that any obstruction has been caused to the tramway in order to secure conviction under this provision (Cottam v. Guest (1880), 6 Q. B. D. 70); and see the cases cited in note (t), p. 796, ante.

(i) Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 35. Neither licensees nor lessees are included under the term "promoters," which includes only the undertakers and their permitted assigns (Marshall v. South Staffordshire Tramways Co., [1895] 2 Ch. 36, C. A., per LINDLEY, L.J., at p. 51); compare note (a), p. 802, ante. The consent of the Board of Trade is essential to the validity of the licence. In Salford Corporation v. Eccles Corporation, [1912] A. C. 465, the tramways authorised by the respondent corporation's special Act were constructed by and demised to the Salford Corporation. The Salford Corporation, without the sanction of the Board of Trade, granted to the South Lancashire Tramways Company a licence to run over a small portion of the respondent corporation's tramways adjoining those of the Salford Corporation. It was provided by the respondent corporation's special Act that any such licence in respect of its tramways must be approved by the Board of Trade; but in the Act authorising the tramways of the Salford Corporation no such provision was included, such tramways being defined by that Act to include any tramways demised to the Salford Corporation; and it was held that the licence granted to the company was ultra vires, inasmuch as by the demise to the Salford Corporation the tramways of the respondent corporation were not shifted from the operation of its special Act to that of the appellant corporation, and the company might be restrained by injunction from using the respondent corporation's tramways. As to inquiries by a referee on behalf of the Board of Trade, see note (g), p. 795, ante.

(k) Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 35 (1)—(6). The Board may at any time revoke, alter, or modify any licence for good cause shown to the Board (ibid.).

SECT. 8. charges and expenses of the sale out of the moneys arising from such sale, and rendering any overplus, and such carriages as remain unsold, to the person entitled (l). They may also require the licensee to give an account of the number of passengers to an officer authorised by them (m), and any licensee failing to do so is liable to a penalty not exceeding £5, in addition to any tolls payable in respect of the passengers carried (n).
 * Licensees are also liable for any trespass or damage done by their carriages, horses, or servants to or upon the tramway of the promoters or to the property of any other person (o).

Liabilities of licensees.

SECT. 9.—Abandonment and Discontinuance of Working.

Order of Board of Trade.

Removal of tramway.

1407. If the promoters discontinue the working of any tramway or part of a tramway in any district for three calendar months, and the discontinuance is not due to circumstances beyond their control, other than insufficiency of funds, the Board of Trade may, on proof of the discontinuance to its satisfaction, declare by Order that the powers of the promoters shall cease and determine unless purchased by the local authority (p). Where any such order is made, the road authority (q) may, under the authority of a certificate for the purpose from the Board, remove the tramway (r) or part of it so discontinued at any time after the expiration of two months from the date of the Order. The promoters must pay to the road authority the cost of the removal and of making good the road as certified by the clerk or some authorised officer of the road authority; and the road authority, on failure of the promoters to pay the amount so certified within one calendar month of the delivery of the certificate or a copy of it to them, may without previous notice, but without prejudice to any other remedy for the recovery of the amount, sell and dispose of the materials by public auction or private sale for such sum and to such person or persons as the authority shall think fit, and reimburse itself the amount of the certified cost and of the cost of the sale out of the proceeds, paying the balance, if any, to the promoters (s).

SECT. 10.—Insolvency of Promoters.

it with advantage to the public, the Board of Trade may, on a representation to that effect from the road authority, direct an inquiry by a referee into the truth of the representation. If the referee finds that the promoters are as insolvent as has been represented, the Board may by Order declare that their powers shall cease and determine at the expiration of six calendar months from the making of the Order, and the road authority may remove the tramway in the same manner, and subject to the same provisions with respect to the payment and recovery of costs, as in the case of the abandonment and discontinuance of tramways (u).

SECT. 11.—Return and Application of Deposit.

1409. The court in which a deposit is made by the promoters of any tramway in accordance with the provisions of the Tramways Act, 1870 (w), respecting Provisional Orders must order the deposit fund to be paid or transferred to the depositors or as they shall direct on their application:—

When return

(1) If they complete and open the tramway for public traffic in accordance with the Confirmation Act and Board of Trade Rules within the time prescribed by the Order, or such time as prolonged by special direction of the Board, or, where there has been no time prescribed and no prolongation by the Board, within two years of the passing of that Act (a);

(2) If any portion of the line of tramway is opened for public traffic within such time as aforesaid, and a certificate of the Board is produced specifying the length of such portion and the portion of the fund which bears to the whole of the deposit fund the same proportion as the length of tramway opened bears to the whole length authorised (b);

(3) On the production of a certificate of the Board evidencing the refusal of either House of Parliament to confirm a Provisional Order on which a deposit has been made or to authorise a portion only of any tramway comprised in such Order, or the withdrawal of an Order before confirmation (c).

The court has no jurisdiction under the Parliamentary Deposits and Bonds Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 27), s. 1, to make an order for repayment of a deposit until the expiry of the time limited for the completion of the undertaking, even though the company's compulsory powers of land purchase have expired and it has neither raised capital nor taken steps for the acquisition of land, and has passed a resolution abandoning the undertaking (Ex parte Chambers, [1893] 1 Ch. 47); compare Re Peckham, Dulwich and Crystal Palace Tramways Bill, [1910] 2 Ch. 1, C. A person whose land is compulsorily acquired by a tramway company for the purpose of widening a street, no part of the tramway actually passing over the land, is entitled to compensation for depreciation in the value of his adjoining property by reason of the land being used for part of the street, but not for the depreciation caused by the running of the trams along the street (*R. v. Subject to any such application, the court, after such public notice as seems to the court reasonable, may order the deposit fund or any part of it to be paid or transferred to the depositors or the persons claiming through or under them (k).

SECT. 12.—Control of Tramways by the Crown in Emergency.

1413. Whenever it is declared by Order in Council that it is expedient that the Government should have control over railroads, a Secretary of State may by warrant empower any persons specified therein to take possession of any tramway and all the stations or accommodation necessary for its working, and employ it as he may direct, paying compensation for any loss or injury under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (l), all contracts with respect to the working of the tramway being enforceable against the Crown during its possession in the same manner as they would have been against possession.

(i) The most important change effected by the Parliamentary Deposits and Bonds Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 27), with respect to the law and practice as to deposits under the old Board of Trade Rules before its passing is the grant of discretion to the court to deal with the fund in spite of any provision as to forfeiture to the Crown.

(j) As to who are creditors, see Ex parte Bradford and District Tramways Co., [1893] 3 Ch. 463; Re Manchester, Middleton and District Tramways Co., [1893] 3 Ch. 638; Re Walsford, Lismore and Farnley Rail. Co. (1870), 4 J. R. Eq. 490; Re Dublin, Rathmines and Rathcoole Rail. Co. (1878), 1 J. R. Ir. 98; Re Hull, Barmley and West Riding Junction Railway, [1893] W. N. 83; Re Coventry and Nuneaton Tramways Co. (1888), 4 T. L. L. 458. They include the general creditors of the company, including persons who lent the money to the promoters to enable them to make the deposit, and all distinction between meritorious and non-meritorious creditors has ceased to exist since the passing of the Parliamentary Deposits and Bonds Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 27) (Ex parte Bradford and District Tramways Co., supra; Muir v. Forman's Trustees (1903), 5 F. (Cl. of Sess.) 546; compare Re Wrexham, Mold and Connah's Quay Railway, [1900] 1 Ch. 261, C. A.; Re Lancashire, Derbyshire and East Coast Railway Acts, [1903] W. N. 184. Where a company has been ordered to be wound up, the court has no jurisdiction to order the liquidator's general costs of the liquidation to be paid out of the deposit fund, and he cannot be allowed thereout any costs beyond those of proceedings taken by him in reference to the application of the deposits (Re Colchester Tramways Co., [1893] 1 Ch. 309; compare Turpin v. Somerton etc. Tramway Co., [1900] W. N. 94). (k) Parliamentary Deposits and Bonds Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 27), s. 1 (2), (3). The proper evidence with respect to the application for payment in the case of the abandonment of a tramway is a Board of Trade notice under the Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 18, but it has been held that in the absence of such a notice other evidence of the non-commencement of works is not excluded (*A. the promoters and their lessees (m). The Crown may also, whenever an order for the embodiment of the Militia or Territorial Force is in operation, declare by order that traffic for naval and military purposes shall have precedence over other traffic on any tramway (n), and any naval or military officer authorised to do so may, while such order is in force, require the promoters or their lessees to forward the traffic specified therein by any means he deems expedient, any failure to comply with or obstruction of the warrant being punishable by a fine of £50. No warrant may be in force for more than one month unless renewed, and every order is revocable by the Crown and ceases to operate on the disembodiment of the Militia or Territorial Force (o).

Remuneration to promoters.

The promoters or lessees of any tramway required to receive and forward traffic in accordance with the foregoing provisions are entitled to the payment of such reasonable remuneration as may be agreed upon or, in default of agreement, determined by arbitration (p).

Compensation.

The Secretary of State or the Admiralty may, on petition, compensate any person suffering loss through acts done under their authority, except in the case of contracts made subsequently, or which, though made before, might have been determined subsequently, to the date of an order (q).

The Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), s. 34 (1), and an Order in Council of the 9th April, 1908 (Stat. R. & O., 1908, p. 878), provided for the transfer of the battalions of Militia specified in the Order to the Army Reserve maintained under the Reserve Forces Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 48). It has, however, been held that the Militia units so transferred were not destroyed but reorganised (Re Donald. Moore v. Somers, [1909] 2 Ch. 410); and the power of embodying or disembodiment of the Militia vested in the Crown by the Militia Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 49), s. 18—which is apparently analogous to that with respect to the Territorial Force—is presumably not affected by the provisions of the Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9); see title ROYAL FORCES, Vol. XXV., p. 62, note (h).

• Provisional Orders.

Application for provisional order.

1414. Any of His Majesty's principal Secretaries of State or the Admiralty (r) may apply to the Board of Trade for a Provisional Order authorising the construction, maintenance and use of tramways on any land belonging to or to be acquired by them, or along or across any road (s).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Contents.

1415. The Board of Trade must insert such provisions of the Tramways Act, 1870 (a), with or without modification, and such other provisions as in the opinion of the Board are necessary for the protection of the local and road authorities, the public, and any person whose interests may be affected by the construction or user of such tramway, and for giving suitable powers to the Secretary of State and his subordinates (b).

Application of Tramways Act, 1870.

1416. Every Provisional Order authorising the construction and maintenance of tramways along or across any road must contain either the statutory provisions relating to (1) the breaking-up, reinstatement, repair and paving of roads (c); (2) the protection of gas and water companies and sewers (d); (3) the rights of authorities and companies to open roads (c); and (4) the reference to the Board of Trade for settlement of any differences between promoters and an authority or company (f); or such other provisions with reference to the matters hereinbefore mentioned as to the Board may seem necessary or proper (g).

As to the duty of promoters and their lessees to carry His Majesty's mails if required by the Postmaster-General to do so, see the Conveyance of Mails Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 38), ss. 2, 3; and title POST OFFICE, Vol. XXII., pp. 652, 653.

(r) The Admiralty has the same powers as a Secretary of State with respect to the construction, maintenance, and working of tramways; and every reference in the Military Tramways Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 65), to a Secretary of State includes the Admiralty (Naval Works Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 42), s. 2).

SECT. 1. Treasury, and may contain such provisions, with or without modification, of the Lands Clauses Acts (h) as in the opinion of the Board of Trade may be expedient (i).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Publication and Confirmation.

Publication. 1418. Every such Provisional Order must be published in the London Gazette, and by deposit and advertisement in such manner as the Board of Trade may require, and must be confirmed either by Act of Parliament or by His Majesty by Order in Council (j).

Confirmation by Parliament. 1419. If within one month after publication and such advertisement as the Board of Trade may direct a petition is received by the Board against a Provisional Order by any local or road authority within whose district it is proposed to authorise any tramways, or by the owner or occupier of any land which the Secretary of State is authorised to acquire, such Provisional Order must be confirmed by Parliament (k).

Confirmation by Order in Council. 1420. If no such petition has been received at the expiration of one month after publication and such advertisement as the Board of Trade may direct, or if any petition received by the Board has been withdrawn, every such Provisional Order must be submitted to His Majesty in Council and be confirmed by Order in Council (l).

Revocation of Order. 1421. Any Provisional Order may, on the application of the Secretary of State, be revoked, amended, extended or varied by the Board of Trade by a further Provisional Order (m).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Application by a Local Authority.

User by local authority. 1422. The local authority of any district, in which a tramway has been constructed by the Secretary of State along any road, or any person (n) may apply to the Board of Trade for a Provisional Order authorising them to use such tramways in addition to the Secretary of State and settling the terms and conditions of such user (o).

(h) See title COMPULSORY PURCHASE OF LAND AND COMPENSATION, Vol. VI., p. 12.

(i) Military Tramways Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 65), s. 5.

(j) Ibid., s. 10.

(k) Ibid., s. 10 (2). A Bill with the object of confirming a Provisional Order may be introduced into either House of Parliament. The Provisional Order must be set out at length in the schedule to the Bill. If a petition against a Provisional Order is presented while any such Bill is pending, the Bill is referred to a select committee, before which the petitioner may appear and oppose as in the case of a Bill for a special Act. An Act of Parliament confirming a Provisional Order under this Act is deemed a public general Act (ibid.). As to Bills to confirm Provisional Orders generally, see title PARLIAMENT, Vol. XXI., pp. 727 et seq.

(l) Military Tramways Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 65), s. 10 (3). A Provisional Order confirmed in this manner has the same force and effect as if confirmed by Act of Parliament (ibid.).

(m) Ibid., s. 10 (4). Such further Provisional Order must be duly confirmed as provided under the Act (ibid.).

(n) The word "person" includes a corporation (ibid., s. 12).

(o) Ibid., s. 11. The promoters, namely, the local authority or person applying for such Provisional Order (ibid.), must give such notice to the Secretary of State of the application as may be prescribed (ibid.). The promoters must apply in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as if the application were for a Provisional Order under the provisions 1423. Any such Provisional Order may authorise the promoters to use such tramways on such payment and subject to such conditions as to the maintenance and repair of the tramway or road as the Board of Trade deems expedient (p); or, if the Secretary of State so desires, may authorise the sale of the tramways by him to the promoters in such manner and subject to such conditions as to the user of the tramway by the Secretary of State as the Board deems expedient (q).

SECT. 1.
Provisional
Orders.
Terms of user.

SECT. 2.—Working.

1424. The carriages used on any naval or military tramway may have flange wheels or wheels suitable only to run on the rail prescribed by the Provisional Order (r), but must be moved by the power prescribed by the Provisional Order. In the absence of any power being prescribed, animal power only may be used (s).

Carriages.

1425. Any Provisional Order authorising the use of electricity, either as a motive power or otherwise, must contain provisions for the protection of the telegraphs of the Postmaster-General (t).

Electricity.

1426. The Secretary of State may, with the approval of the Board of Trade, make such bye-laws and regulations (a) as in the opinion of the Board are necessary for the protection of the public against danger in the use of steam or mechanical power with regard to the traffic on and the use of any tramways on which such steam or mechanical power is used (b).

Bye-laws.

SECT. 3.—Penalties.

1427. Any Provisional Order may contain provisions imposing penalties on any person injuring, obstructing or trespassing on any tramway, or any carriage used thereon, or in any way contravening any provision of such Provisional Order (c).

Offences.

of the Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78) (Military Tramways Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 65), s. 11). As to such applications, see pp. 781 et seq., ante.

(p) The provisions of the Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), apply so far as they are applicable or unless they are expressly varied by the Provisional Order (Military Tramways Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 65), s. 11). As to such provisions, see p. 790, ante.

(q) Military Tramways Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 65), s. 11.

(r) Ibid., s. 6. Subject to the provisions of the Provisional Order and of the Act, the Secretary of State has the exclusive use of the tramways for carriages with flange wheels or other wheels suitable only to run on the rail so prescribed. Any other person so using them, except under the authority of the Provisional Order, is liable to a penalty not exceeding £20 for every such offence (ibid.). The penalty is recoverable summarily (ibid., s. 9; Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 56).

(t) Military Tramways Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 65), s. 6.

(a) Any such regulations may impose penalties for any offence against the same (ibid., s. 8).

(b) Ibid. Such bye-laws may, with the approval of the Board of Trade, be rescinded, annulled, or added to by the Secretary of State. All bye-laws and regulations made under this provision must be signed by the Secretary of State and by a secretary or assistant secretary of the Board of Trade (ibid.); compare pp. 796, 797, ante.

SECT. 3.
Penalties.
Penalties.

1428. No penalty imposed by any Provisional Order, bye-law, or regulation may exceed £5 for each offence, or in the case of a continuing offence £5 for the first day and £1 for every additional day (d).

Part III.—Light Railways.

SECT. 1.—Constitution and Duties of Light Railway Commissioners.

Appointment
and duties.

1429. The Light Railway Commissioners are appointed by the President of the Board of Trade (e) for the purpose of facilitating the construction and working of light railways in Great Britain (f), (d) Military Tramways Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 65), s. 9. Penalties under the Act are recoverable summarily (ibid.; Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 56).

(e) Light Railways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 48), s. 1 (1). The President of the Board of Trade has power to fill any vacancy caused by the death, resignation, or incapacity of any of the Commissioners (ibid., s. 1 (3)). The Board of Trade may, with the consent of the Treasury, appoint such persons as the Board thinks necessary for the purpose of the execution of the Commissioners' duties (ibid., s. 1 (5)).

(f) Ibid., s. 1 (1). A light railway is not defined under the Act. Light railways are divided into three classes: Class A, lines on lands acquired (with motive power mostly steam); Class B, lines on public roads (with motive power mostly electric); Class N, lines which cannot be classed either in Class A or in Class B; see Wakefield and District Light Railways v. Wakefield Corporation, [1907] 2 K. B. 256, C. A.; affirmed, sub nom. Wakefield Corporation v. Wakefield District Light Railways, [1908] A. C. 293; Tottenham Urban District Council v. Metropolitan Electric Tramways, Ltd. (1913), 29 T. L. R. 720, H. L. A light railway may include a funicular railway (Ventnor (Funicular) Light Railway (1909), Light Railway Commissioners' Report, List XXVI., No. 6, Parliamentary Paper, 1911, 105; Malvern Funicular Light Railway (1910), Light Railway Commissioners' Report, List XXVIII., No. 3, Parliamentary Paper, 1912, 108); and authority may be given to work a mineral or industrial railway as a light railway (Bere Alston and Calstock Case (1899), 1 Oxley, Light Railways Procedure: Reports and Precedents, 102; North Staffordshire Railway (1907), Light Railway Commissioners' Report, List XVIII., No. 12, Parliamentary Paper, 1907, 188). Power may be reserved to the Board of Trade to require a railway used for goods and mineral traffic to be opened as a passenger-carrying light railway (Wales and Loughton Case (1900), 2 Oxley, Light Railways Procedure: Reports and Precedents, 23). A purely urban tramway in one borough which might have been promoted under the Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), ought not to be promoted as a light railway and may be rejected on that ground (Taunton Case (1897), Light Railway Commissioners' Report, List II., No. 17, Parliamentary Paper, 1902, 198, followed in Colchester Case (1899), Light Railway Commissioners' Report, List V., No. 8, Parliamentary Paper, 1902, 198, and in Aberdare Case (1900), Light Railway Commissioners' Report, List VI., No. 39, Parliamentary Paper, 1902, 198; and see Finchley Case (1900), Light Railway Commissioners' Report, List VI., No. 15, Parliamentary Paper, 1902, 198; Luton and District Case (1902), 2 Oxley, Light Railways Procedure: Reports and Precedents, 137; London Corporation Foreign Cattle Market, Deptford Case (1897), Light Railway Commissioners' Report, List II., No. 2, Parliamentary Paper, 1902, 198); but tramways partly in and partly outside a borough have been promoted as light railways (Crepe Case (1897), Light Railway Commissioners' Report, List I., No. 2, Parliamentary Paper, 1902, 198, followed in Potteries Case (1897), Light Railway Commissioners' Report, List I., No. 13, Parliamentary Paper, 1902, 198; but see Tottenham Urban District Council v. Metropolitan Electric Tramways, Ltd. (1913), 29 T. L. R.

and it is their duty to hear applications for orders authorising the construction of light railways (g), to hold local inquiries for that purpose (h), and generally to offer so far as they are able every facility for considering and maturing proposals with reference to light railways (i).

The Commission consists of three Commissioners, who may act by any two of their number (k).

sioners.

SECT. 2.—Application for Orders.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Who may Apply.

1430. Every application for an order authorising the construction of a light railway must be made to the Commissioners (l) in the month of May or November (m), and may be made by the council of the county, borough, or district through any part of which the proposed railway is to pass (n), or by the promoter, who may be an individual, corporation, or company (o), or by such council and promoter jointly (p).

A light railway may be allowed for the purpose of joining an existing tramway to an existing light railway (Weston-super-Mare Junction Light Railway (1910), Light Railway Commissioners' Report, List XXVII., No. 8, Parliamentary Paper, 1911, 105); or to connect a harbour with an existing light railway (South-wold Harbour Light Railway Case (1911), Light Railway Commissioners' Report, List XXXI., No. 5, Parliamentary Paper, 1912, 108); or to serve a dock (Grimsby District Case (1905), Light Railway Commissioners' Report, List XIII., No. 8, Parliamentary Paper, 1907, 138). The carriages used on a light railway are not "omnibuses" within the Town Police Clauses Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 14), and therefore are not "hackney carriages" within the Town Police Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 89), see 37, 45, and they therefore do not require to be licensed to ply for hire (Yorkshire (Woolfen District) Electric Tramways v. Ellis, [1905] 1 K. B. 396).

(o) A Lunacy Board has no power to construct and work a light railway (Uphall and Bangour Case (1898), Light Railway Commissioners' Report, List V., No. 53, Parliamentary Paper, 1902, 198). The application in the case of corporate bodies must be under seal; in any other case the application must be signed by the promoter, or in the case of more than two promoters, by any three of them (Light Railways Rules, 1913, r. 33). As to what documents must accompany the application, see pp. 822, note (r), 823, post.

(p) Before lodging the application the promoter must pay a fee of £50 by cheque in favour of an assistant secretary of the Board of Trade (Light Railways Rules, 1913, r. 37).

SECT. 2.

Application for Orders.Notices.
Advertisement.SUB-SECT. 2.—Notices of Application.

1431. Before an application can be considered by the Commissioners certain notices must be published and served by the applicants (q).

• 1432. Notice of the proposed application must in every case be published in a local newspaper once at least in each of two consecutive weeks in the month of May or November (r). The notice must describe the line, the termini, the proposed gauge and motive power of the railway, the lands proposed to be taken, and the quantity and the purpose for which it is proposed to take them (s). It must be subscribed with the name of the person responsible for its publication, and must name a place where the plan of the proposed works and the lands to be taken, the book of reference to the plan, the section and the estimate of the proposed works can be inspected, and where copies of the draft order can be obtained (t).

Notice in
Gazette.

1433. Notice of the proposed application must also be published in the London Gazette, giving the names of the promoters, their solicitors or agents, the termini of the railway, and the names of the counties or parishes through which the proposed railway is to run (u).

Owners and occupiers.

1434. Every owner, lessee (a), and occupier of any land intended to be taken or within the limits of deviation shown on the deposited plan must be served with a notice describing the particular lands in each case, inquiring whether the person so served assents or dissents to the taking of such land, and requesting the person, if he dissents, to state his objections (b).

(q) Light Railways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 48), s. 7 (2); see the text, infra. Where a promoter has statutory power to construct a railway, but applies for power to do so as a light railway, the application may be rejected unless the rules are observed and notices served so far as may be applicable or necessary in the circumstances (Gifford and Garvald Case (1901), 1 Oxley, Light Railways Procedure: Reports and Precedents, 31).

(r) Light Railways Rules, 1913, r. 1. The newspaper must be one published in the area to be traversed by the proposed railway, or if no newspaper is published in such area, then in a newspaper published in the county in which such area, or any part thereof, is situate. Copies of the newspaper containing the advertisements must be sent both to the Commissioners and to the Board of Trade (ibid.). An application of which no notice has been published in a local newspaper may be rejected (Finchley, Hendon, Edgware and District Case (1899), Light Railway Commissioners' Report, List VI., No. 16, Parliamentary Paper, 1902, 198); an application to vary a portion of a proposed route by carrying the line through certain streets as to which no public notice has been given may be disallowed (Cheltenham and District Case (1896), Light Railway Commissioners' Report, List I., No. 1, Parliamentary Paper, 1902, 198).

(s) Light Railways Rules, 1913, r. 2. Where it is proposed to take lands compulsorily for the purpose of erecting a station for generating electrical energy, the notice must also state if it is proposed to use the water of any stream, river or lake for such purpose (ibid.).

(t) Ibid. The notice must state that copies of the draft order are obtainable on payment of not exceeding 1s. per copy (ibid.); and see ibid., r. 10. The notice must further state that in accordance with the rules objections should be made to the Commissioners in writing, and that a copy of the objections should be sent to the promoters (ibid., r. 2).

(u) Ibid., 1913, r. 3.

(a) The words "owner," and "lessee," include reputed owner and reputed lessee (ibid., r. 27).

(b) Ibid. The notice must be served in the same month in which 1435. Every owner and lessee (c) of any railway, tramway, or canal which will be crossed or otherwise interfered with by the proposed railway must be served with a notice of the proposed application, stating the place where a plan of the proposed railway has been or will be deposited, and a similar notice must be served on the road authority, other than a county, borough, district, or parish council, of any road along which it is proposed to lay rails or with which it is proposed otherwise to interfere (d).

1436. Where it is proposed to take for the purposes of a light railway any land being part of, or any easement affecting, a common (e), a statement in writing must be sent to the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries describing the common affected and the mode in which it will be affected (f).

Board of Agriculture

the notice of the proposed application is advertised (Light Railways Rules, 1913, r. 27). A special notice must be served where part only of a house, building, or manufactory is proposed to be acquired (ibid.; see note (u), p. 824, post). For forms of notices, see schedule to the Rules. Failure to serve notices may necessitate the withdrawal or rejection of the application (Hayling Island Case (1900), Light Railway Commissioners' Report, List VIII., No. 7, Parliamentary Paper, 1902, 198; Devon South Hams Case (1899), Light Railway Commissioners' Report, List VII., No. 15, Parliamentary Paper, 1902, 198; Central Wilts Case (1903), Light Railway Commissioners' Report, List XIV., No. 6, Parliamentary Paper, 1904, 122).

(e) Including a reputed owner and reputed lessee (Light Railways Rules, 1913, r. 28).

(d) Ibid. The notice must be served in the same month in which the notice of the proposed application is advertised (ibid.). The Commissioners may reject any application where such notice has not been served (Devon South Hams Case, supra).

(e) For the definition of a common, see Light Railways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 48), s. 21 (2); and note (g), p. 834, post.

(f) Light Railways Rules, 1913, r. 8. A copy of the draft order and of so much of the plan, section, book of reference, and ordinance map as relates to the common must accompany this statement (ibid.). The notice of the proposed application must in such a case state the name of such common and of any parish in which the same is situate, and the quantity of such common proposed to be taken or used; as to notice of the proposed application, see p. 820, ante; see, further, title COMMONS AND RIGHTS OF COMMON, Vol. IV., p. 493.

(g) Light Railways Rules, 1913, r. 35. Notices may be partly in writing and partly in print (ibid.), and may be served (i.) by delivering the same to or at the residence of the person to whom they are addressed; or (ii.) in the case of an owner or occupier of premises, by delivering the same or a true copy thereof to some person on the premises or, in the absence of any person, by fixing the notice on some conspicuous part of the premises; or (iii.) by post by a prepaid letter, in which case the notice is deemed to be served at the time when the letter containing the notice would be delivered in the ordinary course of post, and service is proved by proving that the notice was properly addressed and put in the post (ibid., r. 36). Where any addition to, or alteration of, any work is proposed during the progress of an application, the promoters must, provided that such addition or alteration is not of such extent or character as to make it inconvenient or inadvisable in the opinion of the Commissioners that the same should be of every county, borough, district or parish in or through which any part of the proposed railway is to be made or which may be otherwise affected thereby copies of (1) the draft order; (2) the plan and book of reference to the plan; (3) the section of the proposed works; (4) the estimate of the expenses of the proposed railway (h); and (5) the ordnance map (i), with the line of railway and its mile points indicated so as to show generally the course, length, and direction of the proposed railway (j).

Board of Trade and other departments.

1439. The promoters must deposit with the Board of Trade two copies of the draft order and of all the documents mentioned above (k), and must deposit copies of the notice and draft order with the Postmaster-General, the Commissioners of Customs, and the Office of Works, and copies of the notice only with the Treasury, the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries, the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, the Admiralty, the War Office, and the Office of Woods and Forests (l).

Tidal waters; rivers.

1440. Where tidal lands within the ordinary spring tides will be affected by the proposed railway, a copy of the draft order and plan and section of the proposed works with the ordnance map marked "Tidal Waters" must be deposited with the Harbour Department of the Board of Trade (m); and where the work is to be situate on the banks, foreshore, or bed of any river having a board of conservators, similar documents must be deposited with the conservators of such river (n).

dealt with under the said application, publish such advertisements and give such notices and make such deposits as are required under the Light Railways Rules relating to applications for amending orders or may be required by the Commissioners (ibid., r. 38).

(h) For the form of estimates, see ibid., rr. 31, 32. Incomplete and inadequate estimates are a ground for rejecting the application (County of Middlesex (Extensions) No. 4 Case (1901), 2 Oxley, Light Railways Procedure: Reports and Precedents, 126).

(i) The scale of the ordnance map must be not less than one inch to a mile (Light Railways Rules, 1913, r. 4). As to the contents of plans, book of reference and section, see ibid., rr. 11—26.

(j) Ibid., r. 4. In the case of a council other than a county council so much only of the plan, section, and book of reference as relates to the district of each such council need be deposited (ibid.). A statement of these deposits must be included in the notice of application (see p. 820, ante). The application may be rejected if this rule is not complied with (Monmouth and Abergavenny Case (1898), 1 Oxley, Light Railways Procedure: Reports and Precedents, 44; County of Middlesex (Extensions) No. 4 Case, supra). The documents are deposited in the same month in which the application is made and are open to inspection during office hours (Light Railways Rules, 1913, r. 4). On or before the last day of the month the plan, book of reference, and section must be deposited at the place specified in the notice, and must be open to inspection at all reasonable times (ibid., r. 9).

(k) One copy of these deposits with the Board of Trade is available for public inspection (ibid., r. 5, n.).

(l) Ibid., r. 5. Failure to comply with this rule may entail the rejection of the application (Chatham, Rochester, and Gillingham Case (1898), Light Railway Commissioners' Report, List IV., No. 5, Parliamentary Paper, 1902, 198).

(m) Light Railways Rules, 1913, r. 6. Tidal waters must be coloured blue, and if the plan includes any bridges across tidal waters, the dimensions as regards span and headway of the nearest bridges above and below the proposed new bridge must be marked on the plan (ibid.).

(n) Ibid.; as to tunnels under a river, see ibid.

Where it is proposed to authorise the making or extension of any dam, weir, or obstruction to the passage of fish in any river or estuary, a copy of the draft order and of so much of the plan, section, book of reference, and ordnance map as relates thereto must be deposited with the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries and with the fishery board of such river or estuary (o).

1441. Every application to the Commissioners for an order must be accompanied, in addition to a short statement of the proposed application and of the nature of the traffic to be carried, by (1) three copies of the draft order, the plan, the book of reference, the section, the ordnance map, and the estimate; (2) a statement as to the proposed gauge and motive power of the railway; (3) a list, with their postal addresses, of the owners, lessees, and occupiers on whom notices have been served (p); (4) a list of the councils of every county, borough, district and parish with whom deposits have been made; (5) a list of the railway, tramway or canal companies on whom notices have been served; (6) a statement whether, where the consent of the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries is necessary, such consent has been obtained; (7) a statement whether it is proposed that the council of any borough or district shall expend or advance any money, and, if so, of the nature and amount of such expenditure or advance; (8) a statement whether it is proposed to apply to the Treasury for the advance of any money and, if so, of the amount of advance; and (9) a certificate that the required fee of £50 has been paid (q). Where the applicant is an existing company, a certificate must be deposited with the Commissioners certifying that the members of the company have assented to the application and in the proper manner (r).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Procedure on Application.

1442. The Commissioners must satisfy themselves that all reasonable steps have been taken for consulting the local and road authorities (s), and the owners and occupiers of land whose areas and lands are affected by the application, and must hold a local inquiry in order to possess themselves of all such information as they may consider material or useful for determining the expediency of granting the application (t).

Local
inquiries.

(o) Light Railways Rules, 1913, r. 7.

(p) A similar list of those on whom special notice has been served (see p. 821, ante) must also be included in this list (Light Railways Rules, 1913, r. 33).

(q) The above lists of the councils and of the railway and other companies must contain a statement whether such councils and companies have intimated assent or dissent (ibid., r. 33 (d), (e)). A statement must be deposited within the prescribed period with the Commissioners showing the assent, dissent or neutral attitude of every owner, lessee and occupier on whom notices have been served (ibid., r. 34).

(r) Ibid., r. 34. The certificate must (ibid.) be deposited before the local inquiry (as to which see the text, infra) is held. On an application by a light railway company for power to enter into agreements with another existing company, a certificate of approval of the application by the other company's shareholders is unnecessary, as such application is not within the meaning of this rule (Haglow (Amendment) Case (1901), 2 Oxley, Light Railway Procedure: Reports and Precedents, 46).

1443. Every applicant must satisfy the Commissioners that the notices required to be published in the local newspaper, and to be served on the owners, lessees and occupiers of land intended to be taken, have been published and served in the prescribed manner, and that the plan and book of reference are in the prescribed form (u).

• 1444. The Commissioners must give full opportunity for any objections to be laid before them, and must consider such objections, whether made formally or informally (u).

1445. If the Commissioners decide to grant the application, they must settle any draft order for authorising the railway submitted by the applicants, and must insert provisions for the safety of the public, particulars of the lands proposed to be taken, and all such matters as in their opinion are necessary for the proper construction and working of the railway (b).

SUB-SECT. 5. — Consideration of Application by Commissioners.

Matters to be considered.

1446. An application for an order authorising a light railway is considered by the Commissioners with reference to all material circumstances, including (1) the utility of the proposed railway and the advantage offered thereby to the public; (2) the desire of the persons living or interested in the district for the proposed railway, and the extent and nature of the opposition to the application; (3) the safety of the public; (4) the probable effect of the competition upon existing railways; and (5) the financial prospects of the proposed undertaking.

Local circumstances.

1447. The circumstances in each case differ greatly, but applications which do not offer sufficient advantage to the public (c), or application does not sufficiently conform with the rules of the Board of Trade, it may be rejected without a local inquiry being held (Gifford and Garvald Case (1896), Light Railway Commissioners' Report, List I., No. 23, Parliamentary Paper, 1902, 198; Finchley, Hendon, Edgware and District Case (1899), Light Railway Commissioners' Report, List VI., No. 16, Parliamentary Paper, 1902, 198), or in cases where the Commissioners are of opinion that the applicants have no power to construct a light railway (Uphall and Bangour Case (1898), Light Railway Commissioners' Report, List V., No. 53, Parliamentary Paper, 1902, 198).

(u) Light Railways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 48), s. 7 (2) (a), (b). Where it is proposed to acquire part only of a house, building or manufactory, no such provision is to be made in any order unless the Commissioners are satisfied that a special notice of such proposal has been given under ibid., s. 7 (2) (b), to the owner, lessee and occupier of such house, building or manufactory (Light Railways Act, 1912 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 19), s. 4; and see Light Railways Rules, 1913, r. 27).

(a) Light Railways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 48), s. 7 (3). An objection may be taken on the ground that the proposed undertaking will destroy or injure natural scenery or an object of historical interest; full opportunity must be given for the hearing of any objection on this ground (ibid., s. 22). As to other grounds of objection, see the text, infra. Objections must be made in writing to the Light Railways Commissioners and the date prescribed in each case and a copy sent to the solicitors or agents of the promoters (Light Railways Rules, 1913, r. 10); a copy of this rule must be printed as a notice at the end of the draft order (ibid.).

(b) Light Railways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 48), s. 7 (4).

(c) Wolverhampton and Bridgnorth Case (1899), Light Railway Commissioners' Report, List VI., No. 37, Parliamentary Paper, 1902, 198 (scheme rejected which without junction did not offer sufficient public advantage, although the railway proposed to serve a district entirely without railway accommodation); Penarth and Cardiff Case (1897), Light which do not appear to serve the district in the best practicable way, may be rejected (d). If any serious opposition is raised against the proposed railway, the general demand on the part of the persons living or interested in the district in favour of the application must be sufficient to outweigh it and to justify the grant of compulsory powers (e).

by reason of there not being sufficient provision for widening roads (h).

1449. Where competition is likely to affect an opposing railway company, the Commissioners must determine whether it is of a character contemplated as being admissible under the statute (i); if it is not admissible, they must reject the application (k).

1450. The Commissioners may reject an application if they are not satisfied with the way in which the financial position is put before them (l), or if the whole scheme is not before them (m), or may grant the application subject to the appointment of responsible persons as directors (n). Competition was not proved to the satisfaction of the Commissioners in some of the above applications, and Orders were made so as to leave the question to be decided by the Board of Trade. In Ramsbottom, Edenfield and Rawtenstall Case (1902), 2 Oxley, Light Railways Procedure: Reports and Precedents, 158, and Ashby, Swadlincoate and Burton Case (1902), 2 Oxley, Light Railways Procedure: Reports and Precedents, 138, the Commissioners rejected applications, although in the former application they were satisfied that the proposed line was greatly desired, and in the latter application with the greatest regret, as the public need was never more thoroughly demonstrated. Under the Light Railways Act, 1912 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 19), it is open to the Commissioners in such cases now to make an Order, so that the Board of Trade may submit the proposals to Parliament under ibid., s. 1; and see p. 828, post.

In these cases the applications were rejected because, although considerable road widening was necessary, application for the necessary powers to acquire the land and houses required was not included in the scheme or made to the Commissioners, and therefore the whole scheme was not before them.

1451. The Commissioners have refused to consider an application for a light railway of the tramway type upon a road on which Parliament had recently refused to allow tramways (r), and also upon a road on which parliamentary powers for the construction of tramways were still in existence (s); but they have granted an application conditionally upon a Bill before Parliament asking for powers to run tramways over the same road not being passed (t).

SUB-SECT. 6.—Appeal from Refusal of Order.

1452. Where an application for a light railway has been refused, the applicants, if the council of any county, borough, or district, may appeal to the Board of Trade, who may, if it thinks fit, remit the application, with or without instructions, to the Light Railway Commissioners for further consideration (a).

Appeal to Board of Trade.

SUB-SECT. 7.—Submission of Order to Board of Trade.

1453. Every order made by the Light Railway Commissioners must be submitted to the Board of Trade for confirmation (b), accompanied by (1) such particulars and plans as the Board may require, and (2) a report stating the objections to the application and the manner in which they have been dealt with, and any other matters in reference to the order which the Commissioners may think fit to insert in the report (c).

Report to Board of Trade.

Public notice must be given by the Board of Trade of every order so submitted, and the notice must state that any objections to the confirmation of the order must be lodged with the Board of Trade and the date by which such objections must be lodged (d).

(d) Ibid., s. 8 (2). The Board of Trade has no power to hear objections on the ground of competition which are not lodged in time, but will hear evidence on objections on the ground of public safety, although such objections are not in time, because, quite apart from any objection by any individual objector on this ground, the Board of Trade has to consider every order with special reference to public safety (Southwold Case (1901), 2 Oxley, Light Railways Procedure: Reports and Precedents, 26; and see note (h), p. 828. note).

1454. Every order submitted to the Board of Trade must be considered by the Board with special reference to (1) the expediency of requiring the proposals to be submitted to Parliament; (2) the safety of the public; and (3) any objection (e) lodged in accordance with the Light Railways Act, 1896 (f).

1455. The Board of Trade may remit any order to the Light Railway Commissioners for further consideration, or may itself hold or institute a local inquiry and hear all parties interested (g).

1456. The Board of Trade may confirm any order with or without modification (h), or may refuse to confirm any order either by upholding an objection (i), or because by reason of the magnitude of the proposed undertaking, or of its effect on the undertaking of an existing railway company, the Board is of opinion that the application ought to be submitted to Parliament (k). In the latter case the Board of Trade may, if it thinks fit, submit the proposals to Parliament by bringing in a Bill for the confirmation of the order (l).

1457. Every order confirmed by the Board of Trade has the same effect as if enacted by Parliament (m), and is conclusive evidence

(g) Ibid., s. 9 (6). The Board of Trade Arbitrations etc. Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 40), Part I., applies to any such inquiry as if the inquiry were held on an application made in pursuance of a special Act; and as if, in the case of an inquiry held with reference to an objection made to an application under the Light Railways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 48), the persons making the objection were also parties to the application within the meaning of the Board of Trade Arbitrations etc. Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 40), s. 3 (Light Railways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 48) s. 15 (1)). As to inquiries under the Board of Trade Arbitrations etc. Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 40), see titles RAILWAYS AND CANALS, Vol. XXIII., pp. 739, 740; TRADE AND TRADE UNIONS, p. 516, ante.

(h) The Board of Trade may modify the provisions of any order for ensuring the safety of the public (Light Railways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 48), s. 9 (4)), or for removing any objection lodged with the Board in accordance with the Act (ibid., s. 9 (5)).

(m) A light railway order is an Act of Parliament as defined in the Telegraph Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 78) (Light Railways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 48), s. 25).

The Clauses Acts only apply when and so far as they are incorporated or applied by the order authorising the light railway (Light Railways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 48), s. 12 (1)). In Gosforth and Ponteland Case (1899), 1 Oxley, Light Railways Procedure: Reports and Precedents, 95, where it was sought to dispense with the provisions of the Light Railways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 48), for determining the compensation for lands compulsorily taken (ibid., s. 13 (1)), the Commissioners held that they had no power to declare the provisions of the Light Railways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 48), relating to the incorporation of the Lands Clauses Acts (see title COMPULSORY PURCHASE OF LAND AND COMPENSATION, Vol. VI., p. 12) to be inapplicable.

An application which was incomplete in that there was no provision in the draft order for road widening, to obtain powers for which a Bill was before Parliament, was rejected by the Commissioners on the ground that the double procedure before them and Parliament nullified the provision that nothing in the provision is to authorise any variation of the provisions of the Lands Clauses Acts with respect to the purchase and taking of land otherwise than by agreement (London County (Deptford, Shooter's Hill and Woolwich) Case (1900), 2 Oxley, Light Railways Procedure: Reports and Precedents, 74).

(d) Light Railways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 48), s. 11 (c), (f). The Board of Trade may, on the application of any company thus incorporated, order such company to be wound up if satisfied, either by statutory declaration or otherwise, that such company, owing to the sale of its undertaking or otherwise, is unable to carry out the objects for which it was incorporated. After such order is made, the provisions of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 69), apply as if such company had resolved by special resolution that the company be wound up voluntarily (Light Railways Act, 1912 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 19), s. 7).

(e) Light Railways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 48), s. 18; North Staffordshire Railway (Trentham, Newcastle and Silverdale Light Railway) Case (1912), Light Railway Commissioners' Report, List XXXI., No. 3, Parliamentary Paper, 1913, 113; Mawddwy Railway (Light Railway) Case (1911), Light Railway Commissioners' Report, List XXVI., No. 8, Parliamentary Paper, 1912, 138 (application to reconstruct and work as a light railway an existing but derelict railway); North Shropshire Light Railway Case (1911), Light Railway Commissioners' Report, List XXII., No. 6, Parliamentary Paper, 1912, 108.

(f) The Commissioners have refused to allow a company to apply for general purposes any money raised under a light railway order and not used for that purpose (Aberdeenshire Case (1897), 1 Oxley, Light Railways Procedure: Reports and Precedents, 16).

(g) Such a provision is inserted where an undertaking is promoted by a council, or where an advance is made by a council to a light railway company as part of its share capital (Light Railways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 48), s. 11 (h)).

(h) The order may empower lists of the rates and charges to be fixed in the carriages of the railway in a prominent place (Nelson and District Case (1900), 1 Oxley, Light Railways Procedure: Reports and Precedents, 203).

(i) Such a provision is inserted where the managing body is not a local authority (Light Railways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 48), s. 11 (1)).

1464. Any order may, in the case of a new company, require such company to make a deposit and provide for the time of making, and the application of, such deposit, and may empower any local authority to acquire the authorised railway (j), and generally may contain provisions which, whether similar to the above or not, may be considered ancillary to, or expedient for carrying out, the objects of the order (k).

1465. The sale and transfer, under a light railway order, of a railway which obtained powers under an Act of Parliament has been held inadmissible (l), and provisions giving a corporation powers to supply electric energy outside their own district (m), or provisions which, although agreed between the parties, are not called for by any special circumstances, and depart from the decisions of the Commissioners in previous applications, have been disallowed (n).

Provisions
disallowed.

1466. Any matter which under any light railway order is to be determined by arbitration (o) must, subject to any special provisions of the order, be determined either (1) by the Board of Trade, or if the Board thinks fit by a single arbitrator appointed by the Board (p);

tion of

(j) Light Railways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 48), s. 11. The Commissioners have in exceptional circumstances made the consent of a county council necessary jointly with the consents of the local and road authorities where these consents were required by the order (Waltham Cross and Enfield Case (1899), 1 Oxley, Light Railways Procedure: Reports and Precedents, 196, following London United Tramways, Ltd. (Light Railway Extensions) Case (1898), 1 Oxley, Light Railways Procedure: Reports and Precedents, 164); they may authorise a road authority (a county council) to make bye-laws (where the road is repairable by them), in lieu of a local authority (Bromsgrove Case (1899), 1 Oxley, Light Railways Procedure: Reports and Precedents, 238), or make a road authority the purchasing authority outside an urban district (ibid.; Worcester and District Case (1900), 1 Oxley, Light Railways Procedure: Reports and Precedents, 240). This power to acquire is always given, in the case of a railway laid on a public road, either to the road authority or to a local authority, at the expiration of a certain period, or successive periods, prescribed by the order. Where an authority is authorised and agrees to buy a light railway at a price to be settled in case of difference by arbitration, the proper basis of valuation is not the value to the light railway company of the railway as an income-earning concern, but that of the railway in situ capable of earning a profit (Dudley Corporation v. Dudley, Stourbridge and District Electric Traction Co. (1907), 97 L. T. 556, II. L.).

or (2) by the Light Railway Commissioners as arbitrators if the parties make a joint application for the purpose (q).

SECT. 4.—Acquisition of Land.

Appointment of arbitrator.

• 1467. Where any order incorporates the Lands Clauses Acts (r), any matter which under those Acts might have been determined by the verdict of a jury, by arbitration, or by two justices, must be referred to and determined by a single arbitrator appointed by the parties, or, if the parties do not concur, by an arbitrator appointed by the Board of Trade (s).

Matters to be considered.

1468. The arbitrator must, in determining the amount of compensation due to any proprietor of land, have regard to the extent to which the remaining and contiguous lands belonging to such proprietor may be benefited by the proposed light railway (t), and must award costs according to the scale fixed under rules made by the Board of Trade (u).

the matter, as if such matter were an arbitration pursuant to a submission; the Board of Trade Arbitrations etc. Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 40), applies with reference to any such determination and appointment as if the Light Railways Act, 1912 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 19), or the order were a special Act within the meaning of the Board of Trade Arbitrations etc. Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 40), s. 4 (Light Railways Act, 1912 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 19), s. 9 (2), (3)); see note (g), p. 828, ante.

(q) Light Railways Act, 1912 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 19), s. 8 (1). The Commissioners may, with the consent of the parties, be appointed by the Board of Trade where the Board of Trade has power under an order to appoint an arbitrator. In such case the Board of Trade Arbitrations etc. Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 40), applies as if the Commissioners were appointed by the Board of Trade in pursuance of a special Act; and the Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49), applies for the purpose of determining the matter as if the arbitration were pursuant to a submission (Light Railways Act, 1912 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 19), s. 8 (2)); see, generally, title ARBITRATION, Vol. 1., pp. 437 et seq.

(r) See title COMPULSORY PURCHASE OF LAND AND COMPENSATION, Vol. VI., p. 12.

(s) Light Railways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 48), s. 13 (1). The Light Railway Commissioners have no power to vary this provision (Mid-Suffolk Case (1899), 1 Oxley, Light Railways Procedure: Reports and Precedents, 91). This provision "only extends to the assessment of the amount of compensation and the basis of the assessment. It does not extend to the enforcing of the award after it has been made. Consequently the award remains enforceable as it was under s. 35 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), unaffected in this respect by the Arbitration Act, 1889 [52 & 53 Vict. c. 49]" (R. v. Barton and Immingham Light Railway, Ex parte Simon, [1912] 3 K. B. 72, per Lord ALVERSTONE, C.J., at p. 75). The costs of a reference and award of an arbitration under this provision are governed by the Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49) (even though the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), is incorporated in the order), and are therefore in the discretion of the arbitrator (Baxter v. Midland Railway (1905), 93 L. T. 568). Such costs must, if required, under the Lands Clauses (Taxation of Costs) Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 11), be taxed and settled by a master of the Supreme Court, whose decision is not open to review (Re Cannings, Ltd., and Middlesex County Council, [1907] 1 K. B. 51, C. A.). The costs of a solicitor on an application for an order must be taxed on the Chancery scale, and not on the parliamentary scale (Re Peterson, [1909] 2 Ch. 398, C. A.); see title SOLICITORS, Vol. XXVI.

1469. Any order (w) may authorise the payment to trustees of any purchase-money or compensation not exceeding £500 (r).

1470. Any person with power either by statute or otherwise to sell and convey land for the purpose of any works of a light railway may convey free from all incumbrances (a), with the sanction of the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries (b), either without payment of any purchase-money or compensation or at a price less than the real value (c); and the land of any landowner (d) who contributes any money for the same purpose may, with the sanction of the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries, be charged with such contribution (e); but the Board must, before giving its sanction, be satisfied that a permanent increase in the value either of the land held by the same title, or of other land of the same landowner, will be effected (f).

rules is necessary (Light Railways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 48), s. 13 (2)). The scale varies according as the amount awarded does not exceed £300, exceeds £300 but does not exceed £500, or exceeds £500 (Light Railways (Costs in Arbitrations) Rules, 1898 (Stat. R. & O. Rev., Vol. XI., Railway, p. 78)). No fees to counsel are allowed if the sum awarded does not exceed £300; if the sum awarded exceeds £300, but does not exceed £500, such fees for counsel will be allowed as the taxing master considers reasonable; where the amount exceeds £500, see ibid. In order to ascertain which scale applies the amount awarded must include (i.) any sums awarded by the arbitrator in respect of any land or interest in lands taken for or injuriously affected by the execution of any works or order under the Act; (ii.) any amounts which the arbitrator may deduct in arriving at such sums in respect of the permanent increase of value in the remaining and contiguous lands of the same proprietor; and (iii.) the expenses of any accommodation works which may be prescribed by the award, or which the light railway company may have agreed to construct for the protection and advantage of the claimant (ibid, r. 4). The arbitrator must, if required, certify the amounts of such deductions and expenses (ibid). The arbitrator has no power to award solicitor and client costs (ibid, r. 5). These rules do not apply to the fees and remuneration properly payable and charged by the arbitrator (ibid, r. 6), which fees can be recovered by the claimant from the person directed or liable to pay the same (ibid). As to an arbitrator recovering fees for services under this provision, see Tuckett v. Isle of Thanet Electric Tramways and Lighting Co., Idl. (1901), Times, 21st December.

(a) Where any land is subject to incumbrances notice must be given to every incumbrancer, and the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries must consider any objections raised before giving its sanction to the conveyance (ibid, s. 19 (3)).

No common, or easement over or affecting any common (g), may be purchased, taken, or acquired without the consent of the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries, and unless the Board is satisfied that the purchase is necessary, that the exercise of the powers conferred by the order will not cause greater injury to the common than is necessary, and that all proper steps have been taken in the interest of the commoners and of the public to add other land in lieu of the land taken (h), and to secure convenient access from one part of the common to the other where the common is divided (i).

Scope of amending orders.

1472. Any order may be altered or added to by an amending order (k), which may authorise the promoters either to vary the whole or any part of the railway authorised by, or to repeal or alter any provision in, the former order. An amending order may vary the whole or any part of a light railway by extension (l), deviation (m), extension and deviation (n), or abandonment (o). An amending order may repeal or alter (p) any provision in the former order by increase, in the case of a conveyance, must exceed the real value (in the opinion of the Board) of the land conveyed, or the difference between such value and the price (Light Railways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 48), s. 19 (3)).

(g) "Common" includes any land subject to be inclosed under the Inclosure Acts, 1845—1899 (see title COMMONS AND RIGHTS OF COMMON, Vol. IV., p. 541, note (t)), any metropolitan common within the meaning of the Metropolitan Commons Acts, 1866—1898 (see title COMMONS AND RIGHTS OF COMMON, Vol. IV., p. 606, note (f)), and any town or village green (Light Railways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 48), s. 21 (2); and see title COMMONS AND RIGHTS OF COMMON, Vol. IV., p. 493).

SECT. 5. The Board of Trade may require an amending order to be submitted to Parliament, having regard to the scope and provisions of the original order (d).
Amending Orders.

Consents. 1473. No amending order may confer any power to acquire the railway except with the consent of the owners (e). Such consent is, however, unnecessary in the case of an order amending an order which empowers any local authority to acquire a light railway on a public road; and such amending order may, on the application by any local or road authorities in whose area any part of the railway is situate, determine or vary the authorities by whom the railway may be acquired, and make such further provisions as may be necessary in connexion therewith. The consent of the owners of the railway is, however, necessary if it is sought to alter the period within which such right of acquisition may be exercised, or the basis on which the purchase-money is to be assessed (f).

Sub-SECT. 2.—Application.

Advertisement. 1474. Notice of the proposed application (g), describing the nature of the proposed amendment, must in every case be published in a local newspaper once at least in each of two consecutive weeks in the month of May or November, and must be advertised shortly in the London Gazette (h).

Service of notices. 1475. If an amending order proposes to authorise the promoters to vary or relinquish the whole or any part of the railway authorised by the former order, or to extend the time limited by such order or otherwise for the compulsory purchase of lands, notice must be served in the month in which the notice is advertised on every owner, lessee and occupier affected (i), and if an amending order proposes to repeal or alter a provision contained in the former order for the protection of any person, public body or company specifically named, the promoters must, in the month in which the notice is advertised, give notice of their intention to repeal or alter such provision to every person, public body or company affected (k).

(s) No order authorising a council to advance money to a light railway company shall be made except on an application by the council in pursuance of a special resolution as required by ibid., s. 3 (2) (a), Sched. I. The resolution, so long as it is passed before the inquiry is held, may be passed after the deposit of the application (County of Middlesex (No. 2) Case (1901), 2 Oxley, Light Railways Procedure: Reports and Precedents, 59).

(a) Light Railways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 48), s. 3 (1) (b). A council may join any other council or person or body of persons for this purpose (ibid., s. 3 (1) (c)).

in its interests (b). The expenditure, if authorised, must be limited by the order to such amount as the Board of Trade thinks fit in the circumstances (c).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Expenses.

Rates.

1480. Any expenses incurred by any council and allowed by the Light Railway Commissioners (d) with reference to any application or intended application (e) under the Light Railways Act, 1896 (f), may be paid, in the case of a county council (g) as general expenses, in the case of a borough council out of the borough fund or rate or as general expenses under the Public Health Acts (h), and in the case of a district council other than a borough council as general expenses under the Public Health Acts (i).

Loans.

1481. Any council authorised to expend money by an order authorising a light railway may raise the money required by borrowing in manner authorised by the order (j), if the expenditure

(d) A council applying for allowances must lodge with the secretary to the Light Railway Commission a statement of expenses and a formal application under a resolution of the council for allowance, and must pay the Board of Trade the sum of £1 in all cases where the amount exceeds £25, and a further sum at the rate of £1 per centum on the amount of expenses included in the statement delivered with the application (Light Railways Rules, 1913, i. 39).

(f) 59 & 60 Vict. c. 48.

(g) Expenses incurred by a county council may be declared by the order authorising the railway or, in the case of an unsuccessful application, by the Light Railway Commissioners, to be chargeable exclusively on certain parishes only (Light Railways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 48), s. 16 (1)). The Commissioners originally had no power to charge a part only of a parish (Wick and Lybster Case (1898), 1 Oxley, Light Railways Procedure: Reports and Precedents, 88), but such power was expressly given by the Light Railways Act, 1912 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 19), s. 5 (4). Such expenses must be levied as expenses for a special county purpose under the Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41) (Light Railways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 48), s. 16 (1)).

(j) Suitable provision must be made in the order for requiring the replacement of the money within a period fixed, as occasion requires by the Board of Trade or other Government department, by means of a sinking fund or otherwise (Light Railways Act, 1912 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 19), s. 5 (5), amending the Light Railways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 48), s. 16 (4)).

Any council making a profit in respect of a light railway must apply the same in aid of the rate out of which the expenses of the council are payable (l).

SECT. 6.
Powers of Local Authorities.

SUB-SECT. 5.—Joint Committees.

1482. The councils of any county, borough or district may appoint a joint committee for the purposes of any application for an order authorising a light railway or for the joint construction or working of a light railway, or for any other purpose in connexion therewith which may be convenient (m).

Purposes
for which appointed.

SECT. 7.—Loans and Special Advances by Treasury.

1483. The Treasury may make an advance by way of loan to any light railway company to which a council has advanced or agreed to advance money (n). No such advance may exceed one quarter of the total amount required or exceed the amount for the time being advanced by the council, and one half at least of the total amount required must be provided by means of share capital, whether shares or stock, not raised by borrowing, of which one half at least has been subscribed and paid up by persons other than local authorities (o).

Treasury
loans.

1484. If the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries certifies that the making of any light railway would benefit agriculture in any district, or is necessary to establish communication between a fishing harbour or village and a market (p), or if the Board of Trade certifies that the making of any such railway is necessary to develop or maintain some definite industry, but that owing to the exceptional circumstances of the district the railway cannot be constructed without special of district.

Development

The Board of Trade has power on the application of a council to extend the limit of the amount which such council has been authorised to borrow (Light Railways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 48), s. 16 (3)).

(k) Ibid., s. 16 (2). The demand note for any rate levied for meeting any expenditure under this Act must state the proportion of the rate levied for such expenditure (ibid., s. 16 (6)). The form of such demand note is prescribed by the Local Government Board (ibid.).

(l) Ibid., s. 16 (8).

(m) Ibid., s. 17 (1), Sched. III. The provisions in ibid., Sched. III., only apply to councils which have no power to appoint joint committees under the Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), or the Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73). The provisions of those Acts apply to all councils which have power to appoint joint committees under those Acts (Light Railways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 48), s. 17 (2)).

(n) Light Railways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 48), s. 4 (1). The rate of interest must be not less than £3 2s. 6d. per cent. per annum, and every loan is subject to such conditions as the Treasury may determine (ibid., s. 4 (2)). Any loan by the Treasury ranks pari passu with the loan by the council under ibid., s. 4 (ibid., s. 4 (3)).

assistance, the Treasury may by a special advance (q) aid the light railway out of public money if the Treasury is satisfied that any railway company working railways open for traffic has undertaken to work the railway when constructed in the event of an advance being made (r); and that landowners, local authorities, and other persons locally interested have by the free grant of land or otherwise given all reasonable assistance and facilities in their power for the construction of the railway (s). No special advance may exceed one half of the total amount required for the construction of the railway (t); and the order authorising the railway may make provision (u), as regards any parish, that so much of the railway as is in that parish shall not be assessed to any local rate at a higher value than that at which the land occupied by the railway would have been assessed if it had remained in the condition in which it was immediately before it was acquired for the railway (a).

Limits on total sum advanced.

1485. The Treasury may not advance at any one time a sum exceeding in all £1,000,000, including a sum not exceeding £750,000 for the purpose of special advances (b). The Treasury may borrow such money as may be required for the purpose from the National Debt Commissioners on such terms as to interest, sinking fund, and period of repayment, not exceeding thirty years from the date of the loan, as may be agreed on between the Treasury and the National Debt Commissioners (c).

(q) A special advance may be a free grant or a loan or partly both, and may be subject to such conditions and interest as the Treasury directs (Light Railways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 48), s. 5 (2), (3)).

(r) Ibid., s. 5 (1), as amended by the Light Railways Act, 1912 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 19), s. 5 (2). The Treasury has power, on the recommendation of the Development Commissioners, to make advances to a Government department, or through a Government department to a public authority, university, college, school, institution, association of persons or company not trading for profit, for the purpose of making light railways and for the general improvement of rural transport. Such advance may be by grant or loan, or by both methods, and subject to such terms and conditions as the Treasury may think fit (Development and Road Improvement Funds Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 47), s. 1 (1) (d)). For this purpose, the Light Railway Commissioners are to be taken to be the Government department concerned (Light Railways Act, 1912 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 19), s. 3).

(t) Ibid., s. 5 (1) (b).

(u) This provision may be made for a period not exceeding ten years, with powers of extension by the Board of Trade, or may be fixed by the order (ibid., s. 5 (1) (c)).

(a) Before such provision is made the local and rating authorities must be informed, and are entitled to be heard (ibid.).

(b) Ibid., s. 6 (1), as amended by the Light Railways Act, 1912 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 19), s. 2.

(c) Light Railways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 48), s. 6 (2). Loans by the National Debt Commissioners to the Treasury must be repaid out of money provided by Parliament for the purpose, and if that is insufficient are charged on and are payable out of the Consolidated Fund or the growing produce thereof (ibid., s. 6 (3)).

SECT. 1.

Definition.

Definition.

Trespass by relation.

SECT. 1.—Definition.

1486. Trespass (a) is a wrongful act of commission (b), done in disturbance of the possession of property of another or against the person of another against his will (c).

To constitute a trespass the act must in general be unlawful at (a) 3 Bl. Com. 208. Trespass in its original form was a wrongful act committed vi et armis and directly and immediately injurious to the person or property of another; force must have been either actually used or presumed to have been used. Where the injury was only consequential, the appropriate form of action was an action on the case; see Scott v. Shepherd (1773), 2 Wm. Bl. 892; 1 Smith, L. C. (11th ed.), p. 454; Harvey v. Brydges (1845), 14 M. & W. 435; Wright v. Burroughes (1846), 3 C. B. 685; Holmes v. Mather (1875), L. R. 10 Exch. 261, 268; Taylor v. Rowan (1834), 1 Mood. & R. 490; Gilbertson v. Richardson (1848), 5 C. B. 502; Sharrod v. London and North Western Rail. Co. (1849), 4 Exch. 580; Leame v. Bray (1803), 3 East. 593.

(b) A mere act of omission cannot be a trespass (Six Carpenters' Case (1610), 8 Co. Rep. 146 a; 1 Smith, L. C. 11th ed., p. 132; West v. Nibbs (1847), 4 C. B. 172), but continuing to remain in possession of the property of another is an act of commission and not an act of omission; see Winterbourne v. Morgan (1809), 11 East, 395.

(c) Miles v. Dawson (1796), Peake, Add. Cas. 54, 59; Washborn v. Black (1774), 11 East, 405, n.; Christopherson v. Bare (1848), 11 Q. B. 473; Latter v. Braddell (1881), 44 L. T. 369, C. A.; see pp. 860, 870, 872, post.

the time when it was committed; if an act done in respect of property was lawful when it was done, the doer cannot be made a trespasser by relation in consequence of a person becoming entitled to the property and of such person's title relating back to the time when the act was done (d). If the act complained of was unlawful when it was done, a person whose title relates back can sue for a trespass committed before he became owner (c).

To amount to a trespass an act must be voluntary; but an act may be trespass, although it is committed by mistake (f) or without malice (g). A negligent act of commission may amount to a trespass (h), but a person who has not been negligent cannot be a trespasser in respect of an involuntary and inevitable accident (i).

Voluntary
act.

SECT. 2.—Nature of Trespass.

1487. Trespass is an actionable wrong, and, if a mere trespass, is, as a rule, actionable only and not criminal (k). Similarly, an agreement to commit a mere trespass is only actionable and is not criminal (l). There are certain trespasses, however, which are both actionable and criminal, as, for instance, a trespass which is

Civil and criminal proceedings.

(e) Tharpe v. Stallwood (1843), 5 Man. & G. 760; Kirk v. Gregory (1876), 1 Ex. D. 55. If the business of a debtor is transferred to a company and the transfer is afterwards set aside as an act of bankruptcy to which the title of the trustee in bankruptcy relates back, and if the business has in the meantime been carried on by a receiver appointed by the debenture-holders of the company, the receiver is liable as a trespasser to account to the trustee in bankruptcy for the assets (if any) which have come to his hands or for the value of them (Re Goldberg (No. 2), Ex parte Page [1912] 1 K. B. 606; see Re Prigoshen, Ex parte Official Receiver, [1912] 2 K. B. 494). Under some special statutes trespass is a criminal offence, as, for instance, under the Railway Regulation Act, 184 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 97), s. 16 (see title RAILWAYS AND CANALS, Vol. XXIII. pp. 720, 721); Regulation of Railways Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 119 s. 23 (see title RAILWAYS AND CANALS, Vol. XXIII., p. 723; for a form of a covenant by a company to prevent persons trespassing on their railway see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. V., p. 512); Explosive Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 17), s. 77 (see title EXPLOSIVES, Vol. XIV., p. 393). Except under the provision of a special statute, or where wilful and malicious damage is done, no trespasser can be "prosecuted" criminally. The common form of notice that "trespassers will be prosecuted" is men brutum fulmen so far as criminal proceedings are concerned, but notice given to a person that his trespassing may have some effect in a civil action on the question of damages.

(l) See title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 261.

also a breach of the peace (m), or trespass in pursuit of game (n). A trespasser who wilfully and maliciously commits any damage, injury, or spoil to land is liable to an action and also to criminal prosecution; but the gist of the criminal offence is the wilful and malicious injury of some one else's property (o).

The unlawful taking and carrying away of goods with intent to steal is actionable as a trespass and is also indictable as larceny, or, if accompanied with force, as robbery (p). Arson (a), burglary (b), housebreaking (c), assault (d), false imprisonment (e), and other offences against the person are both actionable as trespasses and indictable as crimes (f).

Person liable.

1488. A person cannot be sued in trespass unless the act complained of was committed by him or some person (g) or animal (h) for whose act he is responsible.

1489. An action for trespass does not lie against the Crown (i). As between subject and subject, if a trespass is committed by a servant of the Crown acting as such servant, an action lies against the servant and any superior, except the King, by whose orders the trespass is committed (k). As between a foreigner and a servant of the Crown, the order of the Crown is an excuse; as between a subject and a servant of the Crown, such order is no excuse (l).

SECT. 2. 1491. There are three kinds of trespass (n), namely, trespass to Nature of land (o), trespass to goods (a), and trespass to the person (b).
 Trespass.

Kinds of trespass.

Part II.—Trespass to Land.

SECT. 1.—What Constitutes Trespass to Land.

Unlawful
 entry.

1492. Every unlawful entry by one person on land in the possession (c) of another is a trespass for which an action lies, although no actual damage is done (d). A person unlawfully enters on land if he wrongfully sets foot on or rides or drives over it (e), or takes possession of it or expels the person in possession (f), or pulls down or destroys anything permanently fixed to it, or places or fixes anything on (g) or in it (h), or erects or plants or suffers to continue on his own land anything which permanently overhangs the land of another (i), or discharges or causes water to flow upon such land (k), (n) The same wrongful act may cause damage both to land and goods and to the person; in such a case there would be three separate causes of action (Brunsdan v. Humphrey (1884), 14 Q. B. D. 141, C. A.). A wife may sue her husband for trespass to land or goods which are her separate property, but she cannot sue him for a trespass to the person committed during coverture; a husband cannot sue his wife in trespass at all; see title HUSBAND AND WIFE, Vol. XVI., p. 460.

Hart* (1865), 6 B. & S. 249, 252); compare title REAL PROPERTY AND CHATELS REAL, Vol. XXIV., p. 156, note (f). or suffers filth or any injurious substance which has been collected by him on his own land to pass to another's land (l).

An owner of land who, without wilfulness or negligence, uses his land in the ordinary manner is not liable for mischief occasioned to his neighbours by such use (m). If, however, he brings upon his land anything which would not naturally come there, and which is in itself dangerous, and may become mischievous if not kept under proper control, he is, though not guilty of wilfulness or negligence, liable for any mischief caused by it (n).

1493. It is trespass for a landlord to distrain wrongfully (o), or for a sheriff to levy wrongful execution (p), or for a landlord or sheriff who has rightfully entered on land for the purposes of distress or execution to remain there when the distress or execution has become wrongful (q).

1494. If a tenancy determines by effluxion of time or otherwise, and the former tenant remains in possession against the will of the rightful owner, the former tenant is a trespasser from the date of the determination of the tenancy (r).

1495. If land is subject to a public or private way or other similar right, a person who unlawfully uses such land for any purpose other than that of exercising the right to which it is subject is a trespasser, and can be sued by the person in possession of the land (s).

An owner of land does not commit a trespass if he erects an embankment on his land to keep water from flowing on to it, even though the effect of such an erection may be to increase the pressure of water on the land of someone else (Maxey Drainage Board v. Great Northern Rail. Co., supra). The damage suffered by the neighbouring owner in such a case is damnum absque injuria (ibid.).

1496. The subject-matter, in the case of trespass to land, must be real and corporeal property, that is, land or buildings, or the vesture of land or herbage or pasture, to the exclusive possession of which the person complaining of the trespass is entitled (t). Trespass does not lie for the disturbance of a mere incorporeal right, as a right of common of pasture, or of fishing, or digging turf, or a right of way, or to a pew, or to any easement annexed to land, if such right does not give exclusive possession (u).

Person in possession.

1498. Trespass is an injury to a possessory right, and therefore the proper plaintiff in an action of trespass to land is the person who is in actual or constructive possession^(b) at the time of the trespass^(c). The owner has no right to sue in trespass, if any other person is in possession of land, since a mere right of property without a right of possession is not sufficient to support the action^(d). If, however, land is vacant, the owner has sufficient possession to sue in trespass^(e).

If an owner who has a right to enter makes an entry on land, his Trespass by relation.

(a) British South Africa Co. v. Companhia de Mocambique, [1893] A. C. 602; Doulson v. Matthews (1792), 4 Term Rep. 503. Parties may, however, agree that the English courts are to have jurisdiction; see The M. Morhane (1876), 1 P. D. 107. Formerly the venue in this action was local and had to be laid in the county in which the land was situate, and it was necessary in an action of trespass to land to give a sufficient description of the situation of the land; see Bullen and Leake, Precedents of Pleadings, 3rd ed., p. 418; Beaufort (Duke) v. Vivian (1852), 7 Exch. 580; Humphrey v. London and North Western Rail. Co. (1852), 7 Exch. 325; Holt v. Daw (1851), 16 Q. B. 990; North v. Ingamells (1841), 9 M. & W. 249; Lempriere v. Humphrey (1835), 4 Nev. & M. (N. B.) 638; Brownlow v. Tomlinson (1840), 1 Scott (N. R.), 426. Local venues are now abolished except where otherwise provided by statute (R. S. C., Ord. 36 r. 1), but it is still necessary in a statement of claim in an action of trespass to land to give a sufficient description of the land; see Bullen and Leake, Precedents of Pleadings, 6th ed., p. 501. SECT. 2.
Who may Sue.

Right to possession.

right of possession relates back to the time at which his right of entry accrued, and he may sue for a trespass committed before his entry; the wrongdoer thus becomes a trespasser by relation, so far as the person who enters is concerned (f).

A person having the right to the possession of land acquires by entry the lawful possession of it, and may maintain trespass against any person who, being in possession at the time of entry, wrongfully continues on the land (g).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Nature of Possession.

Actual
possession.

1499. Actual possession is a question of fact (h): it consists of two elements, the intention to possess the land and the exercise of control over land to the exclusion of other persons. The extent of the control which should be exercised in order to constitute possession varies with the nature of the land; possession means possession of that character of which the land is capable (i). Thus, a person may be in possession of minerals, although he is not in possession of the surface and has no actual occupation of the minerals (k).

SECT. 2.

Who may Sue.

Documentary title.

A documentary title commencing with some person rightfully in possession or who has an admitted or proved right to be in possession and connecting itself with the plaintiff is, generally speaking, and in the absence of any title in the defendant by adverse possession, sufficient for a plaintiff in an action of trespass (l).

1500. If one person is in actual occupation of land, and another person who is entitled to the possession enters on the land, the entry vests the possession in the person entitled and makes the other person a trespasser (m). Possession acquired by such an entry is called constructive possession, as by virtue of such entry the person entitled is deemed to have been in possession from the time when his right of entry accrued and to remain in possession, although he does not continue in actual occupation (n).

Constructive possession.

by servant
or agent.

1501. Any possession, so long as it is clear and exclusive and exercised with the intention to possess, is sufficient to support an action of trespass against a wrongdoer (o). A mere trespasser cannot, however, by the very act of trespass immediately and without acquiescence give himself possession (p); such a person may be ejected by force, if no more force is used than is reasonably necessary (q). The occupation of land by a servant or agent in that capacity vests the possession in the master or principal. The servant or agent cannot sue in trespass, but the master or principal can (r).

1502. If land is in the possession of a tenant, the tenant (s) is the proper plaintiff to sue for trespass committed in respect of the land; but where the trespass is not merely of a temporary nature, but is injurious to the reversion, the reversioner, although he cannot sue in trespass, may sue for the injury done to his interest (t).

SECT. 2.
Who may
Sue.
Tenant and reversioner.

1503. A joint tenant or tenant in common of land can maintain trespass against his co-tenant if the co-tenant expels him from the land (a) or destroys the subject of the co-tenancy without the co-tenant's consent (b), but not otherwise (c).

Co-owners.

(s) Including a tenant at sufferance; see title LANDLORD AND TENANT, Vol. XVIII., p. 438.

(t) The action by the reversioner is not an action of trespass. In an action of trespass to land the plaintiff alleges that the defendant "broke and entered" the land of the plaintiff (Bullen and Leake, Precedents of Pleadings, 3rd ed., p. 415); in an action by a reversioner, the plaintiff generally alleges that the defendant injured the plaintiff's reversion in land (ibid., p. 393; Metropolitan Association v. Petch (1858), 5 C. B. (N. S.) 504; Jackson v. Peaked (1813), 1 M. & S. 234; Kidgill v. Moor (1850), 9 C. B. 364; Hosking v. Phillips (1848), 3 Exch. 168; compare title MINES, MINERALS, AND QUARRIES, Vol. XX., p. 539). A reversioner may sue for such injuries as the following:—structural injury to a house (Shelfer v. City of London Electric Lighting Co., Meux's Brewery Co. v. City of London Electric Lighting Co., [1895] 1 Ch. 287, C. A.); cutting down trees (Coltwell v. Hobby (1825), 4 B. & C. 465); digging holes and spoiling the surface of land for the purpose of quarrying or mining (Rogers v. Taylor (1857), 1 H. & N. 706); placing the foundation of a wall in the plaintiff's land (Mayfair Property Co. v. Johnston, [1894] 1 Ch. 508); building a house with eaves which discharged water on the plaintiff's land (Tucker v. Newman (1839), 11 Ad. & El. 40; Batishill v. Reed (1856), 18 C. B. 696); pulling down the eaves of the plaintiff's house and preventing the rain-water from flowing on to adjoining land (ibid.); removing a dam placed for the purpose of diverting a stream so as to irrigate the plaintiff's land (Greenslade v. Halliday (1830), 6 Bing. 379); polluting a river by pouring sewage into it (Jones v. Llanrwst Urban Council, [1911] 1 Ch. 383, 404); flooding land and houses with water (Rust v. Victoria Graving Dock Co. and London and St. Katharine Dock Co. (1887), 36 Ch. D. 113, C. A.). The reversioner may sue the tenant for doing any act which might be injurious to the reversion, such as opening a new door in a house (Young v. Spencer (1829), 10 B. & C. 145); compare title LANDLORD AND TENANT, Vol. XVIII., p. 500. The reversioner cannot sue for a trifling trespass which produces no substantial injury (Cooper v. Crabtree (1882), 20 Ch. D. 589, C. A.). As to the duty of a tenant when sued by a person claiming possession adversely to the landlord, see title LANDLORD AND TENANT, Vol. XVIII., p. 559. (c) Martyn v. Knowllys (1799), 8 Term Rep. 145; Cubitt v. Porter (1825), 8 B. & C. 257; Job v. Potton, supra. A co-tenant of a party wall cannot bring trespass against his co-tenant for pulling down the wall merely for the purpose of rebuilding it (Cubitt v. Porter, supra), unless he trespasses on the property held in severalty by his co-tenant (Mayfair Property Co. v. Johnston, [1894] 1 Ch. 508; compare Stedman v. Smith (1857), 8 E. & B. 1).

SECT. 2.
Who may
Sue.

It is not trespass for one co-tenant to use the common property in the natural and necessary course of use or enjoyment, as, for instance, by working a coal-mine or cutting the grass of a field and making it into hay (d).

Sect. 3.—Trespass ab Initio.

Trespass
ab initio.

1504. If a person enters on the land of another under an authority given him by law, and while there abuses the authority by an act which amounts to a trespass, he becomes a trespasser ab initio, and may therefore be sued as if his original entry was unlawful (c). Instances of an entry under the authority of the law are the entry of a customer into a common inn, of a landlord to distrain, of a reversioner to see if waste be done, or of a commoner to see his cattle (f).

To make a person a trespasser ab initio there must be a wrongful act committed; a mere nonfeasance is not enough (g).

SECT. 4.—Remedies.

Expulsion.

1505. If a trespasser peaceably enters or is on land, the person who is in possession or is entitled to the possession may request him to leave, and if he refuses to leave may remove him from the land,

In London and some other cities the rights of co-tenants of party walls are now regulated by statute (London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccciii.); see Standard Bank of British South America v. Stokes (1878), 9 Ch. D. 68; Knight v. Purcell (1879), 11 Ch. D. 412. As to party walls, see title BOUNDARIES, FENCES, AND PARTY WALLS, Vol. III., p. 134. As to what constitutes possession by co-owners for the purposes of limitation of actions, see title LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, Vol. XIX., p. 130. As to the rights of co-owners generally, see title REAL PROPERTY AND CHATTELS REAL, Vol. XXIV., pp. 202 et seq. (joint tenants), 209 (tenants in common). For a form of an award by an arbitrator with reference to a trespass by breaking a party wall, see Encyclopedia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. II., p. 184.

(d) Job v. Polton (1875), L. R. 20 Eq. 84; Jacobs v. Seward (1872), L. R. 5 H. L. 444. In such cases the remedy of the co-tenant is to sue the other co-tenant to recover a share of the proceeds; see title REAL PROPERTY AND CHATTELS REAL, Vol. XXIV., p. 204.

(e) Six Carpenters' Case (1610), 8 Co. Rep. 146 a; 1 Smith, L.C., 11th ed., p. 132.

(f) Ibid., at p. 133. As regards distress, where distress is made for rent justly due, or for money justly due for relief of the poor, and any irregularity or unlawful act is afterwards done by the distrainer, the distress is not to be deemed unlawful, nor the distrainer a trespasser ab initio, but the party aggrieved may recover damages for the special damage sustained, unless tender of amends is made before action brought (Distress for Rent Act, 1737 (11 Geo. 2, c. 19), ss. 19, 20; Poor Relief Act, 1743 (17 Geo. 2, c. 38), s. 8; Rodgers v. Parker (1856), 18 C. B. 112; Lucas v. Turlington (1858), 5 H. & N. 116; Atack v. Bramwell (1863), 3 B. & S. 520; but see Plasnewydd Collieries Co., Ltd. v. Partridge, Jones & Co., Ltd., [1912] 2 K. B. 345; Winterbourne v. Morgan (1800), 11 East, 395 (where there was a further substantive trespass); Ferrie v. Beasley (1831), 1 Mood. & R. 21). A sheriff who enters land under legal process becomes a trespasser by remaining there for more than a reasonable time (Ash v. Dawnay (1852), 8 Exch. 237; Playfair v. Musgrove (1845), 14 M. & W. 239), but is not, it seems, a trespasser ab initio (Lee v. Dangar, Grant, & Co., [1892] 1 Q. B. 231, 242, C. A.).

(g) Shorland v. Govett (1826), 5 B. & C. 485; West v. Nibbs (1847), 4 using no more force than is reasonably necessary; if a trespasser enters with force and violence, the person in possession may remove him without a previous request to depart (h). If the force or violence used in turning out a trespasser is excessive, the person who uses such force himself commits a trespass upon the person of the person removed (i). To justify the expulsion of a trespasser, the person who uses force must be in possession or acting under the authority of the person in possession (j).

SECT. 4.
Remedies.

If a trespasser erects a building on the land of another, the person who is entitled to the possession of the land may pull down the building, even though the trespasser is in it (k).

Pulling down building.

1506. If a person who is entitled to the possession of land enters or is on the land and expels the occupier by force, he may in certain cases be indicted for a forcible entry, but he cannot be sued for trespass to the land (l). If a person who has the legal title to land is in actual possession of it, and another person attempts to eject him by force, the person who makes the attempt is liable to be indicted for a forcible entry (m).

Forcible entry.

1507. If any animal or anything inanimate is unlawfully on the land of a person and is doing damage to the land or its produce or to any animal or thing on the land, the person entitled to the possession of the land may distrain the animal or thing doing the damage (n).

Distrain damage feasant.

1508. In an action of trespass the plaintiff, if he proves the trespass, is entitled to recover damages, even although he has not suffered any actual loss (o). If the trespass is accompanied by aggravating circumstances, the plaintiff is entitled to recover exemplary damages (p). If the trespass has caused the plaintiff actual damage, the plaintiff is entitled to receive such an amount as will compensate him for his loss (q). Where the defendant has made use of the plaintiff's land and has received benefit from such use, the plaintiff is entitled to receive by way of damages such a sum as it is just should be paid for such use (r).

The defendant in an action of trespass may give evidence in mitigation of damages. For this purpose, where exemplary or substantial damages are asked for on the ground that the trespass was wilful, the defendant may rely on facts which amount to a justification or excuse, although no justification is pleaded (s).

SECT. 5.
Defences.

Claim of right.

The defendant may admit the entry and justify it on the ground that he had a legal right to enter (c).

1512. A defendant in an action of trespass may plead and prove that he is the owner of and has a right to the possession of the premises on which the trespass is alleged to have been committed, or that he acted under the authority of the owner (d).

Leave and licence.

1513. It is a good defence to an action of trespass to land, if the defendant proves that he entered on the land by the leave and licence of the plaintiff (e).

Right of the licensee.

If the person in possession of land gives to another person licence to enter on the land, then, so long as the licence continues and the entry is justified by the licence, the person to whom the licence was given cannot be treated as a trespasser (f).

A person who has been let into possession of land by the person entitled to such possession has the right to occupy the land as a licensee, until the licence is revoked by competent authority, although he may have no estate in the land (g). An entry on land do an act with regard to the property of another depends upon the right or authority which he really has, not upon that which he says he has (Trent v. Hunt (1853), 9 Exch. 14; Baillie v. Kell (1838), 4 Bing. (N. C.) 638, 650; Phillips v. Whitshed (1860), 2 E. & E. 804); see 1 Wms. Saund. (ed. 1871) 19. As to pleading in an action of trespass to a several fishery, see Crichton v. Monckton (1840), 2 Mood. & R. 303. This defence must be specially pleaded; see Bullen and Leake, Precedents of Pleadings, 6th ed., p. 937. Under the old system of pleading the plea of the defendant's ownership was known as the plea of liberum tenementum; see Slacombe v. Lyall (1851), 6 Exch. 119; Hawke v. Bacon (1809), 2 Taunt. 156; Doe v. Wright (1839), 2 Per. & Dav. 672; Drest v. Lever (1841), 7 M. & W. 593; Smith v. Royston (1841), 8 M. & W. 381; Davison v. Wilson (1848), 11 Q. B. 890. The plea admitted the possession of the plaintiff, but asserted a title to the freehold and a right to possession in the defendant (Bullen and Leake, Precedents of Pleadings, 3rd ed., p. 802). As to pleading generally, see title PLEADING, Vol. XXII, pp. 417 et seq. As to justification under a co-owner, see Jacobs v. Seward (1872), L. R. 5 H. L. 464; and p. 850, ante. As to the liability of the owner of land towards the licensee, see Latham v. Johnson (R.) and Nephew, Ltd., [1913] 1 K. B. 398, C. A.

(f) This defence must be specially pleaded (Bennett v. Allcott (1787), 2 Term Rep. 166; Kavanagh v. Gudge (1844), 7 Man. & G. 316; Rapp v. London, Chatham and Dover Rail. Co. (1863), 2 H. & C. 212; Hyde v. Graham (1862), 1 H. & C. 593). The plea must cover all the acts of trespass (Daynard v. Grant (1824), 1 C. & P. 448). A plea of leave and licence means leave and licence in fact; a licence in law must be expressly pleaded (Moron v. Savage (1860), 2 F. & F. 182). A licence is not implied by law to the purchaser of goods, though sold under an execution or distress, to enter upon the premises of the former owner and take them away, although they have remained there with his consent (Williams v. Morris (1841), 8 M. & W. 488).

for the purpose of hunting or similar purposes is lawful if it is with the express or tacit consent of the person in possession of the land, but is unlawful if there is no such consent (h).

SECT. 5.
Defences.

A bare licence to enter on land is revocable (i), but a licensee whose licence has been revoked has a right to a reasonable time to go off the land after the revocation of the licence, and if the licence is to put goods on land of the licensor, the licence cannot be revoked without allowing the licensee reasonable time to remove his goods (j).

Revocability of licence.

A licence coupled with an interest, executed and acted upon, is not revocable (k).

In order that a licence should be a defence to an action of trespass, the defendant must have only done an act which the licence allows; thus, a licence to enter a dwelling-house and seize goods does not justify a breaking and entering the house, unless a demand of the goods is first made and an intimation given of the authority under which the demand is made (l); and a licence to enter into a house or land does not justify an entry except in the usual way (m).

Limitation of licence as defence.

1514. It is a good defence to an action of trespass if the defendant pleads and proves that he entered on land in the exercise of a legal right (a). A person may, it seems, be entitled to enter on

SECT. 1.

Definition.

Possession essential to right of action.

* Trespass to goods in foreign country.

The subject-matter of trespass to goods must be a personal chattel of which the person complaining of the wrong may have lawful possession (c).

A person cannot sue in trespass, unless he is in actual possession, or has a right to the immediate possession of the chattel in respect of which the action is brought (d).

• 1521. An action may be maintained in England for a trespass to goods committed in a foreign country, if the act is not justifiable by the law of such country (e).

(a) The technical term for a removal in trespass is asportation; any unlawful removal, however slight, amounts to a trespass (Kirk v. Gregory (1876), 1 Ex. D. 55). As to asportation in larceny, see title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 630.

(b) Any damage, however slight, is sufficient, such as, for instance, "scratching the panel of a carriage" (Foulkes v. Willoughby (1841), 8 M. & W. 540, per ALDERSON, B., at p. 540); see Wennhak v. Morgan (1888), 20 Q. B. D. 635. SUB-SECT. 2.—Trespass and Trover.

SECT. 1.

Definition.

1522. Trespass and trover are analogous actions, each of them arising out of an unlawful dealing with personal chattels; in neither action can the plaintiff succeed, unless he had, when the unlawful act was committed, the possession, or a right to the immediate possession, of the chattel unlawfully dealt with (f). The gist of an action of trespass is an unlawful taking or removing or damaging of a personal chattel; the gist of an action of trover is the wrongful conversion of a personal chattel to the defendant's use or to the use of some third person or the destroying or changing the quality of the chattel (g). An act of trespass may be complete by an unlawful taking without any conversion (h), and an act may amount to conversion, where there is no unlawful taking (i). An act of trespass may be accompanied or followed by a conversion, and in such case the owner of the chattel may sue in trespass or trover, or in both, or he may sue in trespass alone and may give evidence of the conversion in aggravation of the damages (k). In an action of trespass the plaintiff may recover vindictive or only nominal damages, but in an action of trover the damages are generally the value of the goods (l) or of the plaintiff's interest in them (m).

Distinction between trespass and trover.

SECT. 2.—Nature of Right of Possession Infringed.

1523. A plaintiff in an action of trespass to goods cannot succeed unless he proves that he had, at the time when the unlawful act was committed, actual possession, or a right to the immediate possession, of the chattel in respect of which the act was committed (n); if his right accrued subsequently to the unlawful act, he must prove that his right related back to the time of such act, and that the act was unlawful when it was committed (o).

Possession or right to possession.

As against a wrongdoer any possession is sufficient (p), provided that it is complete and unequivocal (q).

(f) As to trover, see Bradley v. Copley (1845), 1 C. B. 685; and see, generally, title TROVER AND DETINUE, pp. 887 et seq., post. As to trespass, see the text, infra.

Nibbs* (1847), 4 C. B. 172.

SECT. 2.
Nature of Right of Possession
Infringed.

Right of
property.

1524. The right of property in goods draws with it a right to the possession (r), and where no one else is lawfully in possession the owner may sue in trespass although he has no actual physical control over the goods (s). Proof that a person has the property in a chattel is prima facie evidence that he is in possession (t). When the possession is doubtful, it is attached by law to the title (u). If a person has a property in a chattel at his election, by bringing an action of trespass in respect of the chattel he elects to take the chattel and is competent to sue (w).

Co-owner.

1525. One co-owner of goods may not sue another co-owner in trespass, unless the latter has ousted his co-owner or destroyed the common property without his co-owner's consent (x).

Bailment.

1526. An owner cannot sue in trespass if he has parted with the right of possession, as, for instance, by letting the goods on hire (a); but an owner who gratuitously permits another person to use his goods may sue a third person in trespass for an injury done to the goods while they are so used (b). If a bailee of goods (c) is entitled to the exclusive possession of the goods, the bailee and not the bailor is the proper plaintiff to sue in trespass. If a bailee who has a right to the exclusive possession of goods does an act which amounts to a determination of the bailment, the right to sue then vests in the bailor (d); thus, if a bailee of goods unlawfully destroys them, he is liable in trespass to the owner, as the destruction determines the bailment (e).

On a bailment of goods which does not exclude the right of the bailor to immediate possession, either the bailor or the bailee may

SECT. 2.
Nature of Infringed.

A shopkeeper may sue for a trespass to goods sent to him on sale or return (h).

Goods on sale

Ship-master.

The master of a ship has sufficient possession to enable him to sue for a trespass to goods on board the ship (i). The charterer of a ship, however, has not possession of the ship, unless the terms of the charterparty are such as to give him the possession (k).

Auctioneer.

An auctioneer who is entrusted with goods to sell, whether in a public auction room or on the premises of the owner of the goods, has sufficient possession of the goods to enable him to sue in trespass (l).

1527. A mortgagee of a chattel may not sue in trespass, unless he is in possession or has a right to immediate possession (m). If a mortgagee of a chattel seizes the mortgaged chattel when he has no right to seize it, he may be sued in trespass by the mortgagor (n). If a third person commits a trespass to a mortgaged chattel at a time when the mortgagee has no right to seize, the mortgagor is the proper plaintiff (o).

Mortgagor
and mortgagee.

1528. If premises are demised to a tenant, the tenant may maintain trespass against a wrongdoer who severs and carries away fixtures attached to the freehold (p); but if timber is cut down, the right to the possession of the timber vests at once in the reversioner, and he alone can sue a wrongdoer who carries the timber away (q).

whom such property is vested may maintain trespass against a person who wrongfully removes and defaces the tombstone (r).

1530. A person who enters on land under a contract which is unenforceable by action because of s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds (s) and who places his goods on the land, may justify his possession on the ground that the contract gave him a licence to enter, and may, if his goods on the land are seized, sue the wrongdoer in trespass (t).

SECT. 3.—Remedies.

Resistance.

1531. If one person wrongfully seizes the goods of another, the owner may resist the seizure and may use such force as is reasonably necessary; if the goods are wrongfully removed or are in the wrongful possession of someone else, the owner may retake them and may use force if necessary, and may enter on the land of the wrongdoer for the purpose of recovering the goods (q).

Retaking.

Damages.

1532. In an action of trespass to goods the plaintiff is entitled to recover damages for the wrong committed by the defendant and for loss sustained by the plaintiff in consequence of the wrong (b). The plaintiff need not, however, prove actual damages except perhaps in the case of a trespass committed in respect of an animal (c).

If special damage is claimed but not proved, the plaintiff may recover general damage (d).

As to the measure of damages for the destruction of a picture which is a scandalous libel, see Du Bost v. Bercsford (1810), 2 Camp. 511. As to damages for a trespass by or in respect of cattle, see Anderson v. Buckton (1719), 1 Stra. 192; Thompson v. Berry (1723), 1 Stra. 551. As to the measure of damages generally, see title DAMAGES, Vol. X., pp. 331 et seq. There is no set-off allowed in actions of trespass (Hawkins v. Baynes (1823), 1 L. J. (o. s.) (κ. β.) 167; Gillard v. Brittan (1841), 8 M. & W. 575). In an action of trespass for the retaking of goods from a buyer who has bought them on credit and has not paid for them, evidence of the debt cannot be given in mitigation of damages (Hawkins v. Baynes, supra; Gillard v. Brittan, supra); but now the defendant in such an action might counterclaim for the debt (R. S. C. Ord. 19, r. 3). As to a plea in such an action of payment after action brought, see Rundle v. Little (1844), 6 Q. B. 174. As to set-off and counterclaim generally, see title SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM, Vol. XXV., pp. 481 et seq. As to staying proceedings in an action of trespass on the defendant undertaking to restore the goods or pay their value and to pay the costs of the action, see Pickering v. Truste, supra; Knott v. Barker (1797), 3 Anst. 806. A person against whose goods a trespass has been committed may recover damages in an action of replevin, and the recovery of damages in such an action is a bar to an action for trespass to goods (Gibbs v. Cruikshank (1873), L. R. 8 C. P. 454); as to an action of replevin, see title DISTRESS, Vol. XI., pp. 199 et seq. As to the right of an owner of goods to take possession of them, see p. 868, ante.

(g) The Winkfield, supra; see title BAILMENT, Vol. I., p. 563.

(h) Oughton v. Seppings (1830), 1 B. & Ad. 241.

(i) See p. 859, ante. As the action of trespass is based on possession and not on property (see pp. 865, 866, ante), the judgment in the action does not affect the property in the goods.

property or in the possession of the plaintiff (k), or that the defendant took the goods.

If a person in possession sues in trespass, the defendant cannot set up as a defence the right of a third person under whom he does not claim (l); but if the plaintiff relies on a mere right of property, the defendant may set up the right of such third person (m).

Ignorance.

It is no defence to an action of trespass that the defendant took the plaintiff's goods in ignorance that they were the plaintiff's, or in the bonâ fide belief that they belonged to a third person; in this case it is immaterial that the plaintiff's goods are mixed with those of a third person, provided that they can be distinguished and identified (n).

Self-defence.

1535. An act which otherwise would be a trespass may be justified on the ground that it was reasonably necessary for the defence of the person of the defendant or of the person of someone whom the defendant is bound to or may protect, or for the defence of the property of the defendant or other person whose property the defendant may protect (o).

Leave and licence.

1536. In an action for trespass to goods the defendant may also plead as a defence that the act complained of was done by the leave and licence of the plaintiff (p), or in the exercise of a legal right (q), or in the execution of legal process (r), or in the levying

Part IV.—Trespass to the Person.

SECT. 1.—In General.

1537. Trespass to the person is a wrong committed against the personal security or personal liberty of one man by another (x). Classification.
There are three varieties of trespass to the person (a), namely, assault (b), assault and battery (c), and wrongful imprisonment (d).

The act complained of must be either intentional or negligent (e), seizure of goods under a magistrate's warrant, see titles CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 310; MAGISTRATES, Vol. XIX., p. 604. This defence must be specially pleaded; see p. 862, ante.

(s) See title DISTRESS, Vol. XI., p. 117; Trent v. Hunt (1853), 9 Exch. 14; Phillips v. Whitted (1860), 2 E. & E. 804. This defence must be specially pleaded; see p. 862, note (d), ante. As to distress of animals damage feasant, see p. 857, ante; title ANIMALS, Vol. I., pp. 378 et seq. As to a person who distrains animals damage feasant becoming a trespasser ab initio by committing a tortious act, see Dye v. Leatherdale (1769), 3 Wils. 20; Orley v. Watts (1785), 1 Term Rep. 12.

(t) Wakeman v. Robinson (1823), 1 Bing. 213; Carstairs v. Taylor (1871), L. R. 6 Exch. 217; compare Wyatt v. White (1860), 5 H. & N. 371; and p. 862, ante. This defence need not, it seems, be specially pleaded; see p. 862, note (e), ante.

(u) Knapp v. Salisbury (1810), 2 Camp. 500; Hall v. Fearnley (1842), 3 Q. B. 919. This defence should be specially pleaded; see p. 862, ante. If a chattel is unlawfully on someone else's land, the person in possession of the land may remove the chattel to some place within reasonable distance (Rea v. Sheward (1837), 2 M. & W. 424; Drewell v. Towler (1832), 3 B. & Ad. 735; Pratt v. Pratt (1848), 2 Exch. 413; Holding v. Pigott (1831), 7 Bing. 465; Ackland v. Lutley (1839), 9 Ad. & El. 879; Melling v. Leak (1855), 16 C. B. 652). If cattle trespass on a person's land, he may drive them out and is not obliged to distrain them (Tyrringham's Case (1584), 4 Co. Rep. 36 b); and he may, it seems, drive them on to a highway, except where the cattle have trespassed owing to his own default in repairing hedges which he was bound to repair; in such a case he must drive them back on to the land from which they came (Carruthers v. Hollis (1838), 8 Ad. & El. 113).

(w) See title LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, Vol. XIX., p. 37. As to special periods of limitation in particular cases, see ibid., p. 176. This defence must be specially pleaded (ibid., p. 183). As to tender of amends, see p. 863, ante.

(x) As to the criminal law relating to offences against the person, see title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., pp. 570 et seq.

But if A., intending to strike B., strikes C. by mistake, the injury to C. is regarded in law as intentional and A. is liable (James v. Campbell (1832), 5 C. & P. 372). As to the liability of a person who keeps a dangerous animal for injuries caused by SECT. 1. and must be done against the will of the person who sues for the wrong (f).

In General.

Trespass to wife or servant. 1538. A husband or master may maintain an action for a trespass to the person of his wife or servant, if the husband or master suffers damages caused by such trespass (g).

Trespass committed abroad. 1539. An action may be maintained in England for a trespass to the person committed abroad, provided that the act would be actionable if it had been committed in England and is not justifiable by the law of the country where the trespass was committed (h).

Civil and criminal proceedings. 1540. Trespass to the person is an actionable wrong, and is also punishable criminally either on summary proceedings or by indictment (i). In the case of summary proceedings for an assault, if the charge is dismissed on the merits and a certificate of such dismissal is given by the justices, or if the defendant is convicted and undergoes the punishment awarded, no subsequent proceedings, civil or criminal, in respect of the assault can be taken by the complainant (j). Except in the case of summary proceedings, a conviction or an acquittal on a charge involving trespass to the person is not a bar to an action (k).

A conviction or dismissal of a charge for assault on B., the wife of A., before a court of summary jurisdiction is a bar to an action by A. and B. for the assault on B. (Masper v. Brown, supra); but a conviction or dismissal of a servant upon a charge of assault is no bar to an action against the master (Dyer v. Munday, [1895] 1 Q. B. 742, C. A.).

SECT. 2.—*Assault and Assault and Battery.*SUB-SECT. 1.—*In General.*SECT. 2.
Assault and Assault and Battery.
Assault.

1541. A mere assault is an attempt or offer by force or violence to do a bodily hurt or outrage to another (l). To constitute an assault there must be a threat by an outward act of violence exhibiting an intention to do a bodily injury or outrage, and there must be a present ability to carry the threat into execution (m).

Thus, it is an assault for one person within striking distance unlawfully to advance to another in a threatening attitude with the fist clenched and with the intention of striking him immediately (n); or to point or brandish a weapon at another with the intention of using it (o); or to present a loaded firearm at another with the intention of shooting (p); or to ride after another in a threatening manner so as to compel him to run for shelter to avoid being beaten (q).

A battery is an unlawful act of violence committed by one person beating or touching another (r). Battery.

(l) Buller, Law of Nisi Prius, 15; see title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., pp. 608 et seq. As to indecent assaults, see ibid., pp. 616, 619.

(m) Read v. Coker (1853), 13 C. B. 850. It is not an assault for one person merely passively to obstruct the movements of another, as by barring his entrance into a room (Innes v. Wylie (1844), 1 Car. & Kir. 257; see Lird v. Jones (1845), 7 Q. B. 742). A threat to do hurt contained in words only cannot be an assault (Buller, Law of Nisi Prius, 15). As to threatening to murder, see title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 596.

(n) Stephens v. Myers (1830), 4 C. & P. 349. If the offer of violence is such that the threatened blow would almost immediately have reached the person threatened, if the assailant had not been stopped, it is an assault, although at the time the assailant was not near enough to have struck the other person (ibid.).

(o) Genner v. Sparks (1704), 1 Salk. 79.

(p) Buller, Law of Nisi Prius, 15; Oshorn v. Veitch (1858), 1 F. & F. 377 (threat to shoot a person coupled with the act of presenting a loaded firearm is an assault, although the firearm is at half-cock); Blake v. Barnard (1840), 9 C. & P. 626 (not an assault, if the firearm is unloaded, or if the person presenting shows that it is not his intention to shoot the other).

(q) Mortin v. Shoppee (1828), 3 C. & P. 374.

(r) The least touching of another in anger is a battery (Cole v. Turner (1704), 6 Mod. Rep. 149); it is not a battery for one person to touch another without any violence or design of harm (ibid.; Coward v. Baddeley (1859), 4 H. & N. 458; Williams v. Jones (1736), Lec temp. Haid. 298, 301). Any unlawful act of personal violence is a battery whether done by blows or direct contact, or by anything thrown from a distance; see Forde v. Skinner (1830), 4 C. & P. 239 (parish officers cutting off the hair of a pauper without her consent); Agnew v. Jobson (1877), 13 Cox, C. C. 625 (examination of the person of a female prisoner by a doctor without her consent); Desborough v. Home (1857), 1 F. & F. 6 (unlawful sexual intercourse accompanied by some degree of violence); Pursell v. Horne (1838), 8 Ad. & El. 802 (throwing water upon a person); Collins v. Renison (1754), Say. 138 (overturning a ladder on which a defendant is standing and causing him to fall); Hopper v. Reeve (1817), 7 Taunt. 698 (injuring the person of another by driving a carriage against another carriage in which he is sitting). As to forcible feeding of a prisoner refusing to eat, see Leigh v. Gladstone (1900), 26 T. L. R. 139. If A. throws a squib at B., and B. to protect his person or property throws the squib from him and the squib strikes C., this is a trespass by A. to the person of C. (Scott v. Shepherd (1773), 2 Wm. Bl. 892; 1 Smith, L. C. 11th ed., p. 454). The act

SECT. 2.
Assault and Battery. An unlawful blow which is struck in anger or which is likely or is intended to do bodily hurt is actionable, but a blow struck in sport and not likely nor intended to cause bodily harm is not actionable; thus, playing with single-sticks or boxing with gloves in the ordinary way does not involve an assault; but a blow struck in a prize-fight or in a fight with gloves with ferocity and severe punishment to the boxers is an assault; in the case of such a fight the consent of the person struck is immaterial (s). To perform a surgical operation on a person against his will or against the will of the person entitled to give consent on behalf of the patient is an assault (t).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Remedies.

Resistance. 1542. A person who is assaulted may repel force by the use of force, and, if no more force is used than is reasonably necessary, he is not liable for the consequences (a).

Action. 1543. An action lies for an assault, and criminal proceedings may also be taken against the offender; the injured party may pursue both remedies except in cases where summary proceedings are taken (b).

Damages. 1544. In an action of assault the plaintiff is entitled to recover by way of general damages compensation for the indignity or suffering which the assault has caused; these damages are determined by the circumstances of time and place and the manner of the indignity (c). Special damages are recoverable if claimed in the statement of claim and if they are not too remote (d).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Defences.

Justification. 1545. A person who is sued for an assault or an assault and of beating or striking a person is often called an assault, which term is not confined to a mere offer or threat of violence; see Blunt v. Beaumont (1835), 2 Cr. M. & R. 412; R. v. Coney (1882), 8 Q. B. D. 534, Q. C. R. It has not been expressly decided that to infect a person wilfully with disease is actionable; but it seems to follow on principle; see Hegarty v. Shine (1878), 4 L. R. Ir. 288, C. A. where, in the circumstances, the maxim ex turpi causâ non oritur actio was held to apply; and compare Hales v. Kerr, [1908] 2 K. B. 601; R. v. Clarence (1888), 22 Q. B. D. 23, 52, C. C. R. As to the wilful exposure of persons suffering from infectious diseases, see title PUBLIC HEALTH AND LOCAL ADMINISTRATION, Vol. XXIII., pp. 446 et seq.

(s) R. v. Coney, supra, per CAVE, J., at p. 539; Matthew v. Ollerton (1693), Comb. 218; Boulter v. Clark (1747), Buller, Law of Nisi Prius, 16; but see R. v. Coney, supra, per HAWKINS, J., at p. 553. Under the old system of pleading a plea of leave and licence in an action of assault was bad Christopherson v. Bare (1848), 11 Q. B. 473; it would now probably be advisable to plead consent; see R. S. C., Ord. 19, rr. 4, 15; and title PLEADING, Vol. XXII., pp. 446 et seq.

(t) Pollock, Law of Torts, 9th ed., p. 163. In cases of necessity where an operation is necessary and the patient is unconscious and unable to consent, and no person entitled to consent on behalf of the patient is available, the operation is probably justifiable (ibid., p. 172).

(a) See pp. 874, 875, post.

(b) See p. 872, ante.

(c) See title DAMAGES, Vol. X., pp. 302, 341.

(d) Tullidge v. Wade (1769), 3 Wils. 18; Merest v. Harvey (1814), 5 Taunt. 442, per HEATH, J., at p. 444. As to evidence in mitigation of battery may justify the act on the ground that it was committed in the defence of his own person and that he used no more force than was reasonably necessary; such an act may also be justified by a husband in defence of his wife, by a father in defence of his child, by a master in defence of his servant, and vice versa (c).

An assault committed by a man in defence of his property is justifiable, provided that no more force is used than is reasonably necessary (f).

SECT. 2.
Assault and Battery.

Defence of property.

1546. If a person is in possession of a house or land and someone else enters with force and violence, or behaves with force and violence on the land, the person in possession may resist and turn him out without requesting him to leave, and may use such force as is necessary (g).

Expulsion of trespasser.

If anyone enters or is on land peaceably but without right, the person in possession may request him to leave, and on his refusing to leave may turn him out and use such force as is reasonably necessary (h).

If a trespasser is in occupation of land without title, the rightful damages, see Fruiser v. Berkeley (1836), 7 C. & P. 621 (libel on defendant published by plaintiff). As to remoteness of damages, see title DAMAGES, Vol. X., pp. 318 et seq.

(e) 3 Bl. Com. 3; see title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 609. A mere assault without a battery is a sufficient justification for a battery (Buller, Law of Nisi Prius, 18; R. v. Deana (1809), 73 J. P. 255, C. C. A.). A justification to be a defence to the action must be specially pleaded (R. S. C., Ord. 19, rr. 4, 15; but see Syers v. Chapman (1857), 3 C. B. (N. S.) 438). If the plaintiff can justify the first assault, the justification should be replied specially (R. v. Phippard (1694), Carth. 280). The justification must be proved as pleaded sufficiently to cover the wrong complained of (Gaylard v. Morris (1849), 3 Exch. 695; Phillips v. Howgate (1821), 5 B. & Ald. 220; Atkinson v. Waine (1835), 1 Cr. M. & R. 827). A defendant in an action of false imprisonment may plead and prove a good cause of justification, though in fact he alleged and acted upon another at the time of the trespass (Baillie v. Kell (1838), 4 Bing. (N. C.) 638, 650). The right of a person to do an act depends upon the authority or excuse which he in fact had, not on that which he alleges at the time; see note (b), p. 859, ante.

SECT. 2. owner may enter and turn him out by force, provided that he does no injury to the trespasser's person, goods, or family (i), but if any assault and battery is done an action lies in respect of it (k).

1547. The owner of goods which are wrongfully in the possession of another person who refuses to deliver them up on request may retake the goods by force, so long as he uses no more force than is reasonably necessary (l).

1548. An act which otherwise would be an assault may be justified, if it is done in the course of lawful correction or punishment, as in the case of a child by his parent, of an apprentice or scholar by his master, of a seaman by the master of his ship, of a soldier or sailor by the order of his superior officers, or of a convicted criminal according to law (m).

1549. An act which would otherwise be an assault may be justified on the ground that it was necessary for the preservation of peace and order. A person who commits a breach of the peace or a felony or treason may be lawfully arrested (n). A person who disturbs public worship in a church or chapel (o), or who disturbs a public meeting (p) or a lawful game (q), may be lawfully removed, if he refuses to desist from his disturbance.

Manson* (1875), L. R. 10 Exch. 251, 254); but such annoyance and disturbance as crying "hear, hear" and putting questions to a speaker and making observations on his statements does not warrant the chairman in giving the person into custody (*Wooding v. A defendant in an action of assault is entitled to succeed if he pleads and proves that the action is barred by the lapse of time, that is, four years from the accrual of the cause of action (s).

SECT. 3.—False or Illegal Imprisonment.

SUB-SECT. 1.—In General.

1551. An action of false imprisonment lies at the suit of a person unlawfully imprisoned against the person who causes the imprisonment.

Any total restraint of the liberty of the person, for however short a time, is an imprisonment. To compel a person to remain in a given place or to go in a given direction against his will is an imprisonment. It is not necessary that the person should be touched, but force must be used or threatened or submitted to, and the restraint must be total. To obstruct a person attempting to pass in a particular direction or to prevent him from moving in any direction but one is not an imprisonment (t).

The gist of the action of false imprisonment is the mere imprisonment (u); the plaintiff need not prove that the imprisonment was unlawful or malicious, but establishes a prima facie case if he proves that he was imprisoned by the defendant; the onus then lies on the defendant of proving a justification (w).

1552. The imprisonment for which the action of false imprisonment lies must be the direct act or the result of the order of the person sued or of someone for whose acts he is liable (x). No

(t) Bird v. Jones (1845), 7 Q. B. 742; Innes v. Wylie (1844), 1 Car. & Kir. 257; Wright v. Wilson (1699), 1 Ld. Raym. 739; Rowe v. Hawkins (1858), 1 F. & F. 91; Robinson v. Balmain New Ferry Co., Ltd., [1910] A. C. 295, P. C. If A., with the intention of detaining B., locks the door of a room in which B. is, this is an imprisonment (Williams v. Jones (1736), Lee temp. Hard. 298, 300). To place a sentinel at the door of the plaintiff's house and prevent him from leaving the house is an imprisonment (Glynn v. Postoun (1841), 2 Scott (N. R.), 548). Mere words cannot constitute an imprisonment. If C. gives D. in charge to a police officer, but the officer does not take D. into custody, there is no imprisonment (Simpson v. Hill (1795), 1 Esp. 431; see Berry v. Adamson (1827), 6 B. & C. 528; George v. Radford (1828), 3 C. & P. 464; Birten v. Burridge (1811), 3 Camp. 139; Horner v. Battyn (1739), Buller, Law of Nisi Prius, 61). To constitute an imprisonment there must be a detention (Whalley v. Pepper (1836), 7 C. & P. 506; Bristow v. Heywood (1815), 1 Stark. 48). If a police officer tells the person charged that he must go with the officer, and the person charged submits and goes, this is an imprisonment, although there is no touching of the person (Lacock v. Moore (1825), Ry. & M. 321; Chinn v. Morris (1826), 2 C. & P. 361; Horner v. Battyn, supra; see Wood v. Lane (1834), 6 C. & P. 774; Grainger v. Hill (1838), 4 Bing. (N. C.), 212). If a person charged goes voluntarily with a police officer to the police station without being taken in charge or told that he must come, this is no imprisonment (Cant v. Parsons (1834), 6 C. & P. 504; Arrowsmith v. Le Mesurier (1804), 2 Bos. & P. (N. R.) 211; Peters v. Swanway (1835), 6 C. & P. 737). If a person who is charged with an offence is bailed and not committed to prison, the fact that he is in the custody of his bail and may be arrested at any time by his bail (see title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 323) does not constitute an imprisonment for which an action will lie (Syed Mahamad Yusuf-ud-Din v. Secretary of State for India in Council (1903), 19 T. L. R. 496, P. C.).

(u) Brandt v. Craddock (1858), 27 L. J. (EX.) 314.

(w) Holroyd v. Doncaster (1826), 3 Bing. 492. In an action of malicious prosecution, the burden lies on the plaintiff to prove malice and absence of reasonable and probable cause; see title MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND PROCEDURE, Vol. XIX., p. 683.

(x) A master is liable for a false imprisonment which is the act of his ction lies against a person who takes proceedings before a magistrate or judge in respect of an imprisonment which is caused by the orders of the magistrate or judge; the remedy of the person imprisoned in such a case, if any, is an action for malicious prosecution against the person who institutes the proceedings (a).

SECT. 3.
False or Illegal Imprisonment.

1553. A private person is liable if he himself unlawfully detains another, or if he gives another in charge to a police officer who thereupon arrests the other, or if he causes a police officer to arrest or detain the other, or if he participates in the arrest or detention (b).

Arrest by private person.

A private person, however, has at common law the power to arrest in cases where treason or felony has been actually committed and there is reasonable and probable cause of suspecting the person arrested, or where there is immediate danger of treason or felony being committed, or where a breach of the peace has been actually committed by the servant, if such act is within the scope of the servant's employment; see Bank of New South Wales v. Owen (1879), 4 App. Cas. 270, P. C.; King v. Metropolitan District Rail. Co. (1908), 72 J. P. 294; and the cases cited in title MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND PROCEDURE, Vol. XIX., p. 674, note (c); and see title MASTER AND SERVANT, Vol. XX., p. 256. As to the liability of a husband for a false imprisonment which is the act of his wife, see title HUSBAND AND WIFE, Vol. XVI., p. 436. As to evidence showing the responsibility of a superior for an arrest by a subordinate, see Glynn v. Doustoun (1841), 2 Scott (N. R.), 548.

Smallwood* (1838), 3 M. & W. 418; Saunders v. Swansea Finance Co. (1905), 21 T. L. R. 317, C. A.; Lambert v. Great Eastern Railway, [1909] 2 K. B. 776, C. A.; Edwards v. Midland Rail. Co. (1880), 6 Q. B. D. 287, not following Stevens v. Midland Counties Rail. Co. (1854), 10 Exch. 352; Goff v. Great Northern Rail. Co. (1861), 3 L. & E. 672; see title MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND PROCEDURE, Vol. XIX., p. 671. An action of false imprisonment does not lie against the person originating the charge in respect of a lawful remand which is the act of the magistrate (Lock v. Ashton, supra; Brown v. Chapman, supra). A magistrate, however, who remands a person charged for an unreasonable time is liable to an action of false imprisonment (Davis v. Capper (1829), 10 B. & C. 28).

(b) Warner v. Riddiford (1858), 4 C. B. (N. S.) 180; Peters v. Stanway (1835), 6 C. & P. 737; Boyce v. Douglass (1807), 1 Camp. 59; heard after Boyce v. Bayliffe (1807), 1 Camp. 58, 60. The mere giving of information to a police officer, although it may lead to an arrest, does not make the giver of the information liable for the imprisonment (Gooden v. Elphick (1849), 4 Exch. 445, dissenting from Flewster v. Royle (1808), 1 Camp. 187; Danby v. Beardsley (1889), 43 L. T. 603). The mere signing of the charge-sheet at the police station is not evidence sufficient to support an action of false imprisonment against the person who signs (Newell v. National Telephone Co., Ltd., [1907] 1 K. B. 557, C. A.; Grinham v. Willey (1850), 4 H. & N. 496; but see Harris v. Dignum (1859), 29 L. J. (EX.) 23); but if a police officer states to a person that he will not detain the accused unless the other person makes a distinct charge and signs the charge-sheet, and if the other person thereupon signs the charge-sheet and the accused is detained, this is evidence of an imprisonment by the person who signs (Austin v. Dowling, supra). If a person who is lawfully arrested is detained for an unreasonable time without being taken before a justice, the person responsible for the arrest is liable to an action of false imprisonment; see title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 306. As to imprisonment by a foreign Government or its officer at the instance of the defendant, see Rafael v. Verelst (1776), 2 Wm. Bl. 1055; Aitken v. Bedwell (1827), Mood. & M. 68.

committed or is apprehended (c), and he has also certain powers of arrest by statute (d). When, therefore, he may justify the detention on one or other of these grounds no action of false imprisonment lies against him (e).

1554. A police constable may by common law arrest without warrant any person in those cases where a private person may lawfully arrest by common law without a warrant (f). He may also within his district arrest without warrant on reasonable suspicion of felony, whether a felony has or has not been committed (g). Under various statutes he has powers to arrest without a warrant in certain cases (h). He is bound on a reasonable charge of felony being made to him by a private person against a supposed offender to take the latter into custody (i), and is justified in receiving into custody from a private person a supposed offender whom the private person has lawfully arrested (k).

A police constable who unlawfully arrests or detains another person without a warrant is liable to an action for false imprisonment (l). He is also liable, if he lawfully arrests another person and detains him for an unreasonable time without taking him before a magistrate (m).

(c) As to arrest without warrant, see, further, title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., pp. 296, 297, 323; Ball v. Azten (1866), 4 F. & R. 1019; *Williams v. (e) A justification for an imprisonment must be specially pleaded (R. S. C., Ord. 19, rr. 4, 15). As to the form of the defence, see Allen v. Wright (1838), 8 C. & P. 522; Mure v. Focall (1758), 2 Keny. 308. The justification pleaded may be different from that which the defendant alleged and acted upon at the time of the trespass (Paillie v. Kell (1838), 4 Bing. (N. C.) 638, 650). If the plaintiff in an action of false imprisonment has been tried and acquitted on a charge of felony, the defendant in the action is not precluded from proving that the plaintiff was actually guilty of the felony (Cadhill v. Fitzgibbon (1835), 16 L. R. Ir. 371; see Richards v. Turner (1840), 4 Car. & M. 414). The question of reasonable and probable cause for an arrest is one to be decided by the judge on the facts found by the jury (Lister v. Perryman (1870), L. R. 4 H. L. 521; Hailes v. Marks (1861), 7 H. & N. 56; West v. Barendale (1850), 9 C. B. 141; Musgrove v. Newell (1836), 1 M. & W. 582); see title MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND PROCEDURE, Vol. XIX., pp. 680, 686. SECT. 3.
False or Illegal
ment.

If a police constable or other officer is charged with the execution of a lawful warrant and executes it in a lawful manner, he can plead the warrant as a defence to an action of false imprisonment (u). He, however, is liable if in a case where he cannot arrest without a warrant he obtains a warrant but does not have it in his possession, when he arrests the person named in it (o), or if he arrests a person other than the one named in the warrant, even when the person arrested is the one intended to be named in the warrant (p).

A police constable acting in obedience to an illegal warrant and arresting the person named in it, is not liable to be sued for false imprisonment, unless demand in writing has been made by the plaintiff for perusal and a copy of the warrant and perusal and the copy have been refused or neglected for six days after demand (q).

1555. The keeper of a prison is protected in obeying a warrant of commitment, valid on the face of it addressed to him, and is not liable to an action for false imprisonment if he detains a person in pursuance of the warrant (r). He is, however, liable if he detains a prisoner in custody without a sufficient warrant of commitment (s) or for a longer time than is lawful (t); or if he treats a prisoner as a criminal who ought not to be so treated (a); or if he removes a prisoner from one part of the prison to another part in which the prisoner ought not by law to be confined (b); or if he without lawful authority removes a prisoner in custody from the prison to another place (c). It is no defence that in doing any such unlawful act the keeper of a prison was obeying the order of a Secretary of State; if such orders are invalid, the Secretary of State who issued them is also liable to an action for false imprisonment (d).

1556. A magistrate or other person in a judicial capacity is liable to an action for false imprisonment if he unlawfully commits a person to prison in a matter in which he has no jurisdiction, provided that he is not misinformed as to the facts upon which his jurisdiction depends (e). A magistrate is also liable, if he commits an accused person for re-examination for an unreasonable time (f). A magistrate or other person in a judicial capacity is not liable in respect of a matter within his jurisdiction (g). A magistrate or judge with a limited jurisdiction is not liable for a judicial act done by him without jurisdiction, unless he had the knowledge or means of knowledge of which he ought to have availed himself of that which constitutes the defect of jurisdiction (h).

A magistrate or other person in a judicial capacity is not liable for the mis-execution of a lawful warrant properly issued by him, unless he makes himself a party to such mis-execution (i).

A ministerial officer who acts under the orders of a person in a judicial capacity is not liable to an action for false imprisonment merely because he signs an unlawful warrant issued by a person acting in a judicial capacity (k).

Magistrates are justified in acting upon a complaint made to them upon oath by the terms of which they have jurisdiction, although the real facts of the case might not have supported such a complaint, if the real facts were not laid before them at the time by the party complained against, and if such party was properly summoned (*Lowther v. But where it appears on the face of the summons that the magistrates had no jurisdiction to entertain the matter, it is immaterial that the want of jurisdiction was not brought to his knowledge at the hearing of such summons (Polley v. Fordham (No. 2) (1904), 91 L. T. 525).

1557. A sheriff or other officer to whom a warrant for the arrest of a person under civil process is directed, and who lawfully executes the warrant, is justified by the warrant (l). He is, however, liable to an action for false imprisonment if he arrests the wrong person (m), or if he arrests the right person in an unlawful manner (n).

1558. If a person is unlawfully arrested under an illegal warrant issued by a judge in a matter over which he has no jurisdiction, and where he is not misinformed as to the facts upon which his jurisdiction depends, an action of false imprisonment lies against the judge and against the person at whose instance the warrant was issued (o).

An action, it seems, will not lie against a member of the naval or military forces for acting under the order of his superiors, unless such order is manifestly illegal (q).

The ordinary courts of the realm have no jurisdiction over the action of naval or military authorities taken in a place where and at a time when war is actually raging (r).

1560. The master of a merchant ship is justified at common law in arresting and confining in a reasonable manner and for a reasonable time any sailor or other person on board his ship, if he has reasonable cause to believe that such arrest or confinement is necessary for the preservation of order and discipline or for the 1562. A person may justify the detention and confinement of a dangerous lunatic until there is reasonable ground to believe that he has ceased to be dangerous (a).

No action lies for the detention of a lunatic who is detained under the Lunacy Act, 1890 (b), if the person detaining acted in good faith and with reasonable care (c).

An action for false imprisonment will lie against any person who without acting under the Lunacy Act, 1890 (d), unlawfully detains another as a lunatic (e).

1563. If a person is unlawfully imprisoned, he may use force to release himself (f). He may also obtain his release by an application made on his behalf for a writ of habeas corpus (g).

False imprisonment is an actionable wrong and is also an indictable offence, even if no violence is used (h).

Damages.

1564. In an action of false imprisonment the plaintiff is entitled to recover general damages for the imprisonment and, by way of special damages, compensation for any loss which he has incurred, if such loss is the direct and immediate result of the trespass (i).

The fact that the plaintiff was charged with a criminal offence or that he was put to expense in defending himself is not a matter to be considered in assessing the damages in an action of false imprisonment; such matters form the subject of damages in an action for malicious prosecution (Chivers v. Savage (1855), 5 E. & B. 697; see Guest v. Warren (1854), 9 Exch. 370).

Part I.—Interpretation of Terms.

SECT. 1. Definitions.

Detinue.

1566. Detinue is the form of action which lies when one person wrongfully detains the goods of another. The gist of the action is the unlawful detention of goods, that is, the unlawful failure to deliver them up when demanded (a). It is the appropriate form of action when the return of title deeds or other specific chattels is desired (b). It was originally, it seems, an action chiefly used against bailees (c), though it did not afford a remedy, if the bailee misused the goods, or if he restored them in a damaged condition (d).

Trover.

1567. Trover is a form of action later in origin than detinue, and provides a more extensive remedy. It was a form of trespass on the case (e), and derived its name from and was based on a fiction that the defendant had found the goods and afterwards converted them to his use (f). Trover lies when one person is guilty of the conversion of the goods of another by wrongfully appropriating them to his own use or wrongfully depriving the owner of the use and possession of them permanently or for a substantial time (g), or by destroying them or changing their quality (h).

SECT. 2.—Subject-matter.

Personal property.

1568. The subject-matter of both trover and detinue must be specific personal property (i). Neither trover nor detinue lies for money, unless it is specifically identified (k).

(b) See p. 917, post.

(c) Holdsworth, History of English Law, Vol. III., p. 274. Detinue was formerly considered an action ex contractu (Danby v. Lamb (1861), 11 C. B. (N. S.) 423); but it is now reckoned as an action founded on tort; see Bryant v. Herbert (1878), 3 C. P. D. 389, C. A.

Trover is the name of the form of action, conversion of the tort. The declaration per inventionem was described in 1455 by LITTLETON, J., as a "new found haliday" (Malpas's Case (1455), Y. B. 33 Hen. 6, 26, pl. 12). The fictitious allegations of loss and finding were abolished by the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, which substituted an allegation that the defendant converted to his own use or wrongfully deprived the plaintiff of the use and possession of the plaintiff's goods; see Day's Common Law Procedure Acts, 4th ed., p. 239; Law Quarterly Review, Vol. XXI., p. 43.

Lipscomb* (1841), 1 Q.B. 776, the lord of a manor who was entitled to five best beasts as heriots marked seven beasts and left them in the possession of the defendant and afterwards applied for the beasts, but the defendant refused to give them up; and it was held that the lord could not sue for any of the beasts, it not being ascertained that any particular five were legally chosen. Drake* (1859), 6 C.B. (N.S.) 798). A tenant may sue in trover for things which, though slightly attached to the freehold, are personal chattels, and does not lose his property in them by giving up possession of the premises (*Davis v. of the person sued that the goods converted belong to someone else (r).

A wrongful sale of the goods of another person, if accompanied by delivery of the goods, or documents of title, amounts to conversion, and both the seller and the buyer in such case are liable to be sued (s).

A mere sale of goods not in market overt, if unaccompanied by delivery, is not conversion (t). A sale of goods in market overt changes the title to the goods, and is therefore conversion if it is wrongful (u).

Other dispositions.

Any other wrongful disposition of goods, if it has the effect of depriving the owner of the use of them permanently or for a substantial time, is conversion; thus, if a person pawns the goods of another (a), or hands them over to someone other than the true owner (b), or signs an order for the delivery of the goods and the goods are delivered under the order (c), such person is guilty of conversion.

Bos. & P. 438. A mere failure to carry out a contract unaccompanied by any tortious act is not conversion (Dufresne v. Hutchinson (1810), 3 Taunt. 117). As to the effect of the relation back of title in trover, see Smith v. Miles (1786), 1 Term Rep. 475; Cooper v. Chitty (1756), 1 Burr. 20; Young v. Billiter (1860), 8 H. L. Cas. 682. If a person at the time of the conviction of the thief is in possession of stolen goods which have been sold in market overt, he may be sued in trover. 1570. If the goods of a person are wrongfully taken by force or fraud and converted to the use of the taker or of a third person, the taker is guilty of conversion. Thus, it is conversion to take a person's goods wrongfully in execution (d) or otherwise (e), or to distrain goods wrongfully (f). On the other hand, a mere threat to prevent an owner from removing his goods does not amount to conversion if it is not followed by any act of taking (g).

An infant who obtains goods by means of a fraudulent misrepresentation that he is of age is not liable to be sued for conversion, but it appears that there is an equitable remedy against him to compel him to restore the goods if they are in his possession, or if he has obtained money for the goods to refund it (h).

B. & E. 507); see title DISTRESS, Vol. XI., p. 154. It is not evidence of conversion if the tender is made after impounding (Singleton v. Williams (1862), 7 H. & N. 747), or if some rent is due and a distress is made for more than is due (Whitworth v. Smith (1832), 5 C. & P. 250). If there are other goods on the premises, and goods, such as sheep, are distrained which can only be lawfully seized if there are no other goods to seize, trover or detinue lies (Keen v. Piest (1859), 4 H. & N. 236). As to an unlawful act or irregularity by a distrainer, see Distress for Rent Act, 1737 (11 Geo. 2, c. 19), s. 9; *Plasycod Collieries Co., Ltd. v. A mere statement that the expenses of a bankruptcy would fall on the plaintiff, if he did not deliver up certain goods, is not duress, and does not make the obtaining the goods a conversion (*Powell v. such agent has no authority to dispose of the goods, is not guilty of conversion of the goods (k).

1572. The destruction of goods or the changing of their quality, if wrongful, is conversion (l).

1573. A mere wrongful taking of goods, although it may amount to a trespass, does not amount to a conversion, unless the goods are taken with intent to convert them to the use of the taker or some third person, or unless the wrongful act has the effect of either destroying or changing the quality of the goods (m); thus, a carrier (n), wharfinger (o), or packer (p), who ships or warehouses or removes goods, is not liable in trover merely for the shipping or warehousing or removal, as he only purports to change the position of the goods and not the property. Mere non-delivery without negligence by a carrier or wharfinger is not conversion (q), but misdelivery by such a person may amount to conversion (r).

Atkinson* (1723), 1 Stra. 576 (drawing part of the liquor out of a vessel and filling it up with water is a conversion of the whole of the liquor). But a person who is sued for taking away or destroying part of property which remains in his hands cannot raise as a defence that the taking or destroying of the part was a taking or destroying of the whole so that time began to run against the owner's right to sue from the time of the taking or destroying of the part (Philpott v. Kelley (1835), 3 Ad. & El. 106). As to a case where destruction is justifiable or excusable, see Simmons v. Talystone (1853), 8 Exch. 431. In Heald v. Carey (1852), 11 C. B. 977, goods were sent from abroad deliverable to the defendant to hold at the disposal of the consignee upon payment of freight: on the arrival of the goods the defendant paid the duty on them and placed them in a free warehouse—a usual and proper place for such purpose: the wharfinger afterwards for his own convenience and without the knowledge of the defendant removed the goods to another warehouse, where they were destroyed by accidental fire: it was held that the defendant had not exceeded his duty in landing and warehousing the goods, and that he was not guilty of conversion or responsible for the loss of the goods, although the jury found that he was not acting with a view to do his best or as a prudent man would have acted intending to do his best for the owner of the goods. Similarly a broker or auctioneer, who only settles the price between the vendor and purchaser of goods and takes his commission, is not liable for conversion if the vendor is not entitled to sell; but where an auctioneer receives goods into his custody and sells and hands them over to the purchaser with a view of passing the property in them, he is liable as having converted the goods (s).

1574. If a person who is not a holder in due course of a negotiable instrument wrongfully pays it into a bank or otherwise transfers it, he is guilty of conversion (t); a holder in due course of such an instrument who takes or deals with it is not guilty of conversion (u).

If an instrument or security is not negotiable, any person who receives it from a wrongdoer and deals with it in such a way as to deprive the true owner of the possession of the instrument is guilty of conversion, unless protected by some special statutory provision (v).

SECT. 2.

Demand
and Refusal.Failure to deliver or to demand.

SECT. 2.—Demand and Refusal.

1575. The mere keeping of another person's goods does not amount to conversion (x). Where, however, a person has possession of the goods of another and a valid demand is made for them by the owner, an unqualified and unjustifiable refusal to deliver them up entitles the owner to sue in detinue and is evidence of conversion in an action of trover (a).

Bank v. Gordon, London City and Midland Bank v. Gordon, [1903] A. C. 240). If a cheque is crossed and it is paid in good faith and without negligence by the banker on whom it is drawn, then, even if it bears a forged indorsement, the banker cannot be sued for conversion, nor can the drawer of the cheque, if it has reached the hands of the payee (Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), s. 80). A banker who in good faith and without negligence receives payment of a crossed cheque for a customer who has no title or a defective title is not liable to be sued by the true owner of the cheque merely by reason of having received such payment (ibid., s. 82; see Bills of Exchange (Crossed Cheques) Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 17), s. 1; Revenue Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 55), s. 17; Great Western Railway v. London and County Banking Co., [1901] A. C. 414; Akrockerri (Atlantic) Mines, Ltd. v. Economic Bank, [1904] 2 K. B. 465; Bevan v. National Bank, Bevan v. Capital and Counties Bank (1906), 23 T. L. R. 65). But a banker is not protected who presents a cheque with a forged indorsement for payment or credits his customer with the amount of the cheque; in such a case the banker may be sued in trover by the true owner of the cheque (Gordon v. London City and Midland Bank, Gordon v. Capital and Counties Bank, [1902] 1 K. B. 242, C. A.; Capital and Counties Bank v. Gordon, London City and Midland Bank v. Gordon, supra, at p. 241; Bavins, Junr., and Sims v. London and South Western Bank, [1900] 1 Q. B. 270, C. A.; La Caze & Co. v. Crédit Lyonnais (1896), 2 Com. Cas. 17; Kleinwort, Sons & Co. v. Comptoir National d'Escompte de Paris, [1894] 2 Q. B. 157; Arnold v. Cheque Bank, Same v. City Bank (1876), 1 C. P. D. 578; Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), s. 24; Revenue Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 55), s. 17). If the holder of a negotiable instrument loses it and the bank where it is payable, after receiving notice that it has been lost, discounts the bill, debits the customer on whom the bill was drawn with the amount, writes a discharge on it and delivers it up to the customer, the bank is guilty of conversion (Lovell v. Martin (1813), 4 Taunt. 799). If an uncrossed cheque or promissory note payable to order on which there is a forged indorsement is paid at the bank where it is payable and is returned to the drawer or maker, the true owner may, it seems, sue the drawer or maker in trover (Johnson v. Windle (1836), 3 Bing. (N. C.) 225); he may also sue the drawer of a crossed cheque with a forged indorsement if the cheque has been paid but never reached the hands of the payee (Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), s. 80); see BANKERS AND BANKING, Vol. I., p. 615; BILLS OF EXCHANGE, PROMISSORY NOTES AND NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS, Vol. II., pp. 495, 512. The demand must be specific; a general demand on behalf of an executor for the delivery of "the goods of the deceased" is insufficient (Nixon v. Sedger (1890), 7 T. L. R. 112, C. A.; Loring v. Warburton (1858), E. B. & E. 507; Helby v. Matthews,

To make a demand and refusal sufficient evidence of conversion the party who refuses must at the time of the demand have it in his power to deliver up or detain the article demanded in the condition in which the delivery is demanded (b).

SECT. 2.
Demand
and Refusal.

- The demand must be made by the owner of the goods or by some person in his name and with his authority (c). If the demand is made by some person on behalf of the owner, the person on whom the demand is made must have a reasonable opportunity to inquire into the authority of the person making the demand (d). A qualified or justifiable refusal to deliver up the article demanded is not evidence of conversion (e); thus, there is no evidence of conversion where the person in possession of the goods refuses to deliver them up on the ground that he does not know to whom they belong and keeps them until he can ascertain the owner (f).

Young* (1808), 1 Camp. 439) or a demand in writing left at the house of the defendant (Logan v. Houlditch (1793), 1 Esp. 22) is sufficient. If an oral demand and a demand in writing are made at the same time and the one has no reference to the other, evidence may be given of the oral demand without the production of the writing (Smith v. Young, supra). A notice of demand of property is not a notice within the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 16), s. 135, and is not one that may be served on the secretary of the company under that provision (Glover v. London and North Western Rail. Co. (1850), 5 Exch. 66); see title COMPANIES, Vol. V., p. 678. If the defendant has done an act which amounts to a complete conversion, a demand is not necessary (Loxell v. Martin (1813), 4 Taunt. 799; Forsdick v. Collins (1816), 1 Stark. 173; *Grainger v. When two or more persons who are jointly interested in a chattel deposit it with a stranger, a demand by one in his own name and not on behalf of all will not enable him to sue for its recovery (Atwood v. Ernest (1853), 13 C. B. 881; Harper v. Goldsell (1870), L. R. 5 Q. B. 422). If a person deposits goods with a bailee and there are other persons entitled to a part of the goods, such persons are not necessary parties to an action to recover them (Saville v. Watt (1840), 6 M. & W. 492 (a mere refusal to deliver by a pawnbroker is not conversion; it is a question for the jury whether the defendant meant to apply the property to his own use or assert the title of a third party in it, or whether he only meant to keep it in order to ascertain the title to it and clear up the doubts he then entertained on the subject, and whether a reasonable time for doing so had not elapsed without which refusal to deliver would not be conversion); *Canot v. Refusal.

Similarly, where the goods are in the possession of a servant, who refuses to deliver them up without an order from his master, the servant's refusal is not evidence of conversion against the master (g). Where, on the other hand, the person in possession of the goods refuses to deliver them up on the ground of a claim of right by a third party, which, in fact, does not exist (h), or where he refuses to deliver them up unless the owner complies with some condition which the person in possession has no right to impose (i), or where he fails, without lawful excuse, to deliver them up (k), this is evidence of conversion.

If there is no refusal before action brought and there is no other conversion alleged, neither trover nor detinue will lie (l).

Machin* (1818), 2 Stark. 311 (if a wrongdoer sends goods to an auctioneer to be sold, and the auctioneer refuses to deliver up the goods to the owner except on payment of expenses, this is conversion by the auctioneer). If a person who has possession of the goods of another is desired by the owner to send them to a particular place, and not only refuses to send them to that place, but says generally that he will not deliver them up, unless payment of a debt due from the owner to him is guaranteed, such general refusal is evidence of a conversion, although he might not be bound to send the goods to any particular place (*Sharp v. To make a person liable in trover it must be proved that the act of conversion was committed by him or by a person for whose acts he is responsible, or by a person acting under his orders, or by a servant or agent of his acting within the scope of his authority (o). The servant or agent can be sued in trover, whether he has or has not authority from the master or principal for his act (p). Conversion plaintiff's solicitor called at the defendant's shop, and on being shown the watch demanded that it should be then and there handed over to him, and on this being refused he then served the defendant with a writ of detinue which had been taken out two hours before: held, that there had been no wrongful refusal to return the watch to the plaintiff before the issue of the writ, and that the plaintiff had no cause of action at the date of such issue against the defendant; see Norton v. Hatton (1864), 2 H. & C. 822 (if a principal ratifies the purchase by his agent of a chattel which the vendor had no right to sell, the principal is guilty of conversion, although at the time of the ratification he had no knowledge that the sale was unlawful). As to the liability of a husband for a conversion by his wife, see Catterall v. Kenyon (1842), 3 Q. B. 310; Keyworth v. Hill (1820), 3 B. & Ald. 685. In a case of conversion by the wife an action lies against both husband and wife (ibid.). If goods are delivered to a husband and wife, the action is against the husband alone, as the wife in such a case cannot detain (Isaack v. Clark (1615), 2 Bulst. 306). An execution creditor is not liable for a wrongful seizure and sale by the sheriff, unless the creditor personally intermeddled in the execution (*Whitmore v. 1578. If two or more persons act together in doing what amounts to a conversion, they may be jointly sued (q).

A co-tenant in common of property is guilty of conversion as against his co-tenant if he destroys the common property or directly or positively excludes his co-tenant from the common property, or so disposes of it as to render it impossible that the co-tenant should ever take and use it or enjoy the proceeds, the co-tenant seeking to exercise his rights and being denied their exercise (r). Slater* (1844), 1 Car. & Kir. 356 (written notice of demand to deliver up deeds was served on three defendants at different times and places; the defendants separately refused to deliver up the deeds: held that it was for the jury to say on the whole of the evidence whether the defendants had not previously agreed to act in such a manner with reference to the deeds as to render their refusal, though separately given, evidence of a joint conversion): see Garth v. Howard (1832), 5 C. & P. 346. If two or more persons are liable to be jointly sued in trover or detinue, and only one is sued and judgment is recovered against him, the judgment, though unsatisfied, is a bar to an action against the others (*Brinsmead v. A grant of this is a sort of family document in which every member of the family has an interest; whatever member of the family has possession of it is entitled to keep it, but may be called upon by the other members to produce it; trover or detinue will not lie against anyone interested in it (*Stubs v. 1580. A bailee of goods for hire who sells or pledges the goods thereby determines the bailment, and an action of trover lies against him or a purchaser or pledgee from him (a). If by agreement a person is to have the use of certain goods for a specific purpose for a certain time and the goods are applied by such person during the term for purposes in contravention of the agreement, the improper use of the goods determines the bailment and the bailee may be sued in trover (b). If a bailee for safe custody wrongfully deals with them, as by selling and delivering them, an action of trover lies against him, and may be brought immediately upon the conversion; the bailor may also demand the re-delivery of the goods, and may sue the bailee in detinue for breach of his duty to deliver upon request (c). If goods are mortgaged and it is agreed that the mortgagor should hold the goods up to the day fixed for payment of the mortgage debt and the mortgagor before that date sells the goods, the sale destroys the bailment and the mortgagor may be sued in trover (d).

• If a person who has a mere lien on goods wrongfully disposes of them, he waives his lien by parting with the goods and may be sued in trover (e). On the other hand, a pledgee or mortgagee in lawful possession of goods by virtue of the pledge or mortgage cannot be Part III.—Enforcement of Liability.

SECT. 1.—Who may Sue.

SUB-SECT. 1.—In General.

Plaintiff in trover or detinue.

1582. If goods have been converted or detained, and both the right of property and the legal possession of the goods or the right to the immediate possession at the time of the conversion or detention (h) are united in the same person, that person is the proper plaintiff in an action of trover or detinue.

A person cannot sue in trover if he has no right of property in the goods converted (i), or if he has parted with the property in the (f) Halliday v. Holgate (1868), L. R. 3 Exch. 299, Ex. Ch.; Donald v. Suckling (1866), L. R. 1 Q. B. 585. As to the remedy of the pledgor or mortgagor, see p. 906, post. As to the power of a pawnee to deal with the article pawned, see generally title PAWNS AND PLEDGES, Vol. XXII., p. 244.

(g) Jones v. Dowle (1841), 9 M. & W. 19; Hinscliffe v. Sharpe (1898), 77 L. T. 714. A person who has had possession of the goods and has improperly parted with the possession of them may be sued (Jones v. Dowle, supra; Reeve v. Palmer (1858), 5 C. B. (N. S.) 84). An administrator cannot bring detinue against a person who had possession of the goods after the death of the intestate but parted with them before the grant of administration (Crossfield v. Such (1853), 8 Exch. 825; but see Goodman v. Boycott (1862), 2 B. & S. 1); but the defendant in such a case might be sued in trover (Tharpe v. Stallwood (1843), 5 Man. & G. 760; approved in Foster v. Bates (1843), 12 M. & W. 226; Barnett v. Guildford (Earl) (1855), 11 Exch. 19; Goodman v. Boycott, supra; compare Crossfield v. Such, supra; and see title EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, Vol. XIV., p. 146). If a defendant misleads the plaintiff by telling him that he had the goods sought to be recovered, the plaintiff is entitled to a verdict, although the statement was a fraud on the defendant's part (Hall v. White (1827), 3 C. & P. 136).

(h) Gordon v. Harper (1796), 7 Term Rep. 9; Bradley v. Copley (1845), 1 C. B. 685; see Clerk v. Adam (1832), 1 Cl. & Fin. 242, H. L. The rules as to the relation back of the plaintiff's title in trover are the same as in trespass; see title TRESPASS, p. 865, note (o), ante; Elliott v. Kemp (1840), 7 M. & W. 306.

(i) Melling v. Kelshaw (1830), 1 Cr. & J. 184; Crocker v. Molyneux (1828), 3 C. & P. 470; Makepeace v. Jackson (1813), 4 Taunt. 770. Thus, the buyer of a specified quantity of goods cannot sue in trover till they are appropriated to him (Wait v. Baker (1848), 2 Exch. 1 (delivery of the specified quantity of goods on board a ship under a bill of lading by which the cargo is deliverable to the vendor or his assigns is not an appropriation); Evans v. Nichol (1841), 3 Man. & G. 614 (if B's ships goods for the specific purpose of placing funds in the hands of A. to meet a bill drawn by B. upon A., A. has sufficient property in the goods to maintain trover, although goods at the time of the conversion (k), or if at the time of the conversion his title to the goods has been divested by a disposition which is valid under the Factors Act, 1889 (l).

SECT. 1.
Who may
Sue.

If the owner of goods is induced by the fraud of a person to purport to enter into a contract with and to dispose of goods to that person in the belief that he is another person, there is no contract; no property, therefore, passes, and the owner of the goods may sue in trover the defrauder or any person in possession of the goods, although the latter may have obtained them bond fide and without notice of the fraud, provided that the goods have not been sold in market overt (n).

Contract
fraud.

SUB-SECT. 2.—Effect of Fraud and Mistake.

1583. If an owner of goods is induced by false pretences or other fraud to enter into a voidable contract with another person, the owner is entitled to repudiate the transaction, and may then sue in trover the defrauder or any agent of his or any person in possession of the goods who has taken them with notice of the fraud or otherwise than for value and without notice (n); but in the case of such a contract, if the defrauder, before repudiation, disposes of the goods to a third person who takes them bond fide for value and without notice of the fraud, the third person acquires a good title and cannot be sued by the owner (o).

Repudiation

1584. No person can sue to set aside a completed transaction entered into by his own fraud (p); if, however, an owner of goods hands over his goods to another person with a fraudulent purpose and the fraudulent purpose is not carried out, the owner may repudiate the transaction and demand the goods from the other person, and on refusal may sue him in trover. If the person to whom the goods have been handed over assigns them to a third person who is cognisant of the fraud and the fraudulent purpose is not carried out, the owner may take the same course as regards the third person (q).

Theft.

1585. If goods other than money or negotiable securities are stolen, the theft or any subsequent disposition of the goods, except a sale in market overt, effects no change in the property, and the owner may sue the thief or any person into whose hands the goods pass, except a purchaser in market overt (r), or the police authorities in whose hands the goods are for the purposes of a restore the decision in Moyce v. Newington (1878), 4 Q. B. D. 32, except as to choses in action, to which the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), does not apply (see ibid., s. 62 (1); and title SALE OF GOODS, Vol. XXV., p. 112); the owner who has been deprived of any other chose in action except a negotiable security by a contract voidable on the ground of fraud, may, on the conviction of the defrauder, sue the person in possession, even if he has taken the chose in action bond fide and without notice (Bentley v. Vilmont (1887), 12 App. Cas. 471; Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 24 (2)). If there is no conviction, the bond fide possessor of the chose in action cannot be sued (Sheppard v. Shoolbred (1841), Car. & M. 61). As to negotiable securities, see note (r), infra.

(p) Jones v. Yates (1829), 9 B. & C. 532. The rule applies not only to the person himself, but to those claiming under him. As to rescission generally, see titles CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 356; MISREPRESENTATION AND FRAUD, Vol. XX., pp. 737 et seq.; MISTAKE, Vol. XXI., pp. 17 et seq., 111 et seq.

(q) Taylor v. Bowers (1876), 1 Q. B. D. 291, C. A.

(r) The rule of law that the owner of goods cannot sue the thief in a civil action until he has prosecuted him criminally does not seem now to be of any practical importance; see title ACTION, Vol. I., pp. 27 et seq. It is clear that a third person in possession of the stolen property can be sued, although the thief has not been prosecuted (Lee v. Bayes (1856), 18 C. B. 599; White v. Spettigue (1845), 13 M. & W. 603). If the stolen property consists of money, no action of trover or detinue can be brought (see p. 888, ante, p. 903, post); but, it seems, the thief or any person who received the money from him otherwise than for value could be sued for money had and received; if the stolen property is a negotiable security, the thief or anyone receiving it from him otherwise than for value and without notice could be sued in trover or detinue. No action lies against anyone who receives stolen money from the thief in currency for value (Moss v. Hancock, [1899] 2 Q. B. 111 (where a Jubilee £5 piece was bought as a curiosity)), or against anyone who takes from him or any intermediate transferor a negotiable security bond fide and for value without notice of the theft (Goodwin v. Roberts (1876), 1 App. Cas. 476; Chichester v. Hill & Son (1882), 52 L. J. (Q. B.) 160; Middleton v. Barned (1849), 4 Exch. 241). As to the recovery of stolen property, see, further, titles CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., pp. 684 et seq.; PAWNS AND PLEDGES, Vol. XXII., p. 247; see p. 903, post. prosecution, or a person entrusted by the police with the custody of such goods while the prosecution is pending (s).

If stolen goods are sold in market overt, the first person who so sells can be sued in trover (t). On the conviction of the thief on the prosecution of the owner, the property sold in market overt reverts in the owner, who can obtain an order for the restitution of the stolen property from the court by which the thief is convicted, and may, with or without an order for restitution, sue in trover of detainee anyone who is in possession of the goods, even although the person in possession is a purchaser in market overt (a). The property in money which has passed in currency or in a negotiable instrument which is in the hands of a bona fide holder for value does not revert on the conviction of the thief, and no action can be brought to recover such property (b).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Persons Entitled to Possession.

1586. The owner of goods cannot sue in trover or detainee unless he is in possession of them or has the immediate right to the possession (c). He does not, however, lose his possession of them

Immediate right to possession.

(s) Tyler and Witt v. London and South Western Rail. Co. (1884), Cab. & El. 285. When the prosecution has determined, the police authorities cannot detain the property from the true owner, unless within a reasonable time they make an application to a court of summary jurisdiction under the Police (Property) Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 30), s. 1, for an order with respect to the property in their hands; pending the hearing of such an application the owner cannot sue the police authorities for the recovery of the property (Bullock v. Dunlap (1876), 2 Ex. D. 43). If no such application is made, a policeman who, after the prosecution is determined, detains the property from the owner or hands it over to anyone not the owner who claims the goods is liable to an action by the owner, even if the policeman acted under the order of his superiors (Golightly v. Reynolds (1771), Loft, 88; Winter v. Banckes (1901), 17 T. L. R. 446); such an action can be brought by the owner, even if the person accused of the theft has been tried and acquitted, provided that there has been no sale in market overt (Winter v. Banckes, supra). As to the owner of stolen goods being estopped by his negligence or other conduct from setting up his title to the goods, see Beckwith v. Corral (1826), 3 Bing. 444; *Morrison v. A person who purchases stolen goods in market overt, and sells and parts with them before conviction of the thief, cannot be sued by the owner of the goods, even though the owner gave him notice of the theft while the goods were in his possession (Horwood v. Smith (1788), 2 Term Rep. 750). A purchaser in market overt who has possession of the goods at the time of the conviction may be sued in trover (Scattergood v. Sylvester, supra). by their being taken wrongfully from him, as under process which is issued without jurisdiction; in such a case he may sue the taker or holder of the goods in trover (d). Similarly, if he loses them, he retains his title to them and may sue anyone who converts or detains them from him, unless he has after the loss estopped himself by his negligence or otherwise from setting up his title (e).

The owner of goods who has parted with the possession for a time can maintain an action for injury to his reversionary interest, although he cannot sue in trover or detinue; in the case of the seizure of such goods under an execution against the person who has a right to their immediate possession, the owner of the goods must apprise the sheriff as soon as they are seized that the person in possession has only a limited interest in the goods (*Dean v. SECT. 1.

Who may Sue.Wrongful
possession.

1593. A wrongful possession, or, except in the case of negotiable securities or money that has passed in currency, a possession derived from a person who has wrongful possession, confers no title (n).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Bailees, Pledges, and Mortgagees.

Bailment.

1594. Where goods are bailed simply without reward, either the bailor or the bailee may sue in trover, if they are wrongfully taken out of the bailee's possession (o).

A person who as against the owner is entitled to the possession of goods can sue in trover or detinue a wrongdoer who takes them away, and can even sue the owner, if the owner deprives him of the goods (p).

Bailment
for hire.

If goods which are in the possession of a bailee for hire are converted, the bailee is the proper person to sue in trover, but if the bailee sells them, the owner can sue the purchaser in trover, though the purchase was made bonâ fide (q).

Mortgagor in possession.

1595. Where the mortgagor of goods is allowed to hold them up to the day fixed for payment, he is the proper plaintiff to sue in trover, but if he sells the goods, the owner may sue him or a purchaser from him (r).

Pledge.

1596. Where goods are pledged, the pledgee has the right to their possession, and, until the money for which the pledge is a security is tendered or paid, is the only person who can sue in trover or detinue (s).

A claim by the pledgee to be the absolute owner of the goods pledged does not excuse the pledgor from the necessity of tendering the amount due, and does not revert in him the right to the immediate possession of the goods without payment or tender of the amount due (t). An unlawful sale by the pledgee does not determine the pledge and does not enable the pledgor to sue in

(t) Yungmann v. Briesemann (1892), 67 L. T. 642, C. A. There is a difference in this respect between a lien and a pledge. If the bailee of trover or detinue, although the pledgor may have a remedy by a special action, if the pledgee professes to dispose of the reversionary interest in the pledge or does the pledgor any real damage by making it more difficult for him to recover the property on payment of the debt (a). If a pledgee refuses a tender of the sum due, he loses his property in the goods, and the pledgor can then sue him in trover or detinue (b).

SECT. 1.

Who may
Sue.

1597. Where goods are mortgaged and are in the possession of the mortgagee, the mortgagor cannot sue in trover or detinue, until he pays the mortgage debt; his remedy is to sue for redemption or to make a summary application for the delivery of the goods on terms of substituting for the security a sum of money equal to the amount secured with a proper margin. A tender properly made is not in the case of a mortgage equivalent to payment, and the refusal of a tender does not, as in the case of a pledge (c), deprive the mortgagee of his property in the goods (d).

Mortgagee in possession.

SUB-SECT. 5.—Sellers and Buyers.

1598. Where specific goods are sold and nothing is said as to the time of delivery or payment, and everything that the seller has to do with them is complete, the property vests in the buyer, and the seller is bound to deliver them, whenever they are demanded, on payment of the price, but the buyer has no right to the possession till he pays the price (e). Where specific goods are sold upon credit and nothing is agreed upon as to the time of delivering them, the buyer is immediately entitled to the possession, and the right of possession and the right of property vest at once in him; but his right of possession is not absolute, but is liable to be defeated if he becomes insolvent before he obtains possession (f). An insolvent buyer, therefore, who has not paid or tendered the price is not entitled to

S.) 70, it was held that the pledgor could sue in trover on an unlawful sale by the pledgee, but in that case the amount of the debt was tendered after the sale, and the decision might perhaps be supported on the ground that there was an agreement not to sell till a certain time. Who may bring trover or detinue for the goods; his only right is to have possession on payment of the price (g).

If the seller retains possession of the goods with a lien for unpaid purchase-money, the buyer cannot maintain trover against a person who tortiously removes the goods; the seller is the only person who can sue in trover in such a case (h).

Conditional delivery.

• 1599. Where there is a contract that the seller should deliver goods on a condition and delivery is made of part of the goods, but the condition is broken, the delivery is only conditional, and the seller is entitled to stop further delivery and sue in trover for the goods already delivered (i). Similarly, where a seller sells goods to be paid for on delivery and by mistake delivers the goods without receiving payment, the seller may, after demand and refusal to return the goods or pay, sue the buyer in trover (j).

If goods are sold to be paid for by instalments, the balance to be paid before removal, and the seller allows the buyer to place the goods on the buyer's premises under lock and key, but the seller retains the key of the external inclosure, and the balance is unpaid, the buyer has not such a possession as will enable him to bring trover against the seller upon a wrongful removal and sale of the goods (k).

Seller as buyer's agent.

1600. If goods are sold and the seller remains in possession of them as the agent for the buyer and there has been no default on the part of the buyer and the seller converts the goods, the buyer can sue the seller in trover, as he has both the right of property and possession, which are necessary to maintain the action (l).

SECT. 2.—Remedies.

SUB-SECT. 1.—In General.

Recapture.

1601. If goods have been wrongfully taken out of the possession of the owner, he may lawfully retake them, and is justified in the use of reasonable force against a person who resists him (m).

Action.

The owner may also after demand and refusal (n) sue the taker or any person who has possession of the goods in trover or detinue (o), or he may waive the tort and sue as upon an implied contract for money had and received (p).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Measure of Damages.

Damages.

1602. If the plaintiff succeeds in an action of trover, he is in general entitled to recover by way of damages the value of the goods converted (q). The jury, in assessing the damages, is not limited to the value of the property at the time of conversion, but may find as damages the value at a subsequent time (r). If an inquiry is directed as to damages and a receiver of the property is appointed, damages cannot be given in respect of detention after the appointment of the receiver (s).

SECT. 2.

Remedies.

Special damages may be given besides the value of the goods, if such damages have been sustained and are not too remote and are claimed in the statement of claim (t). Vindictive damages cannot be awarded in an action of trover or detinue (a).

Special damages.

In an action for the conversion of fixtures the plaintiff cannot recover the value of the fixtures in their affixed state, but is entitled to have the value of the articles estimated at a fair price as chattels (b).

Fixtures.

In trover for an unstamped document, which cannot be sued on, unless it is stamped, but which can be stamped upon payment of a penalty and the stamp duty, the plaintiff is entitled to such damages as he might have recovered in an action on the document (c).

Unstamped documents.

In trover for a bill of exchange the damages are the amount of principal and interest due (d).

The rule in detinue is the same (Williams v. Peel River Land and Mineral Co., Ltd. (1886), 55 L. T. 689, C. A.; Williams v. Archer (1847), 5 C. B. 318, Ex. Ch; *Archez v. The jury may take into consideration the value of the goods even after action brought (Williams v. Archer, supra; but see Leader v. Rhys (1861), 2 F. & F. 399). Damages must be limited to detention for which the defendant is responsible (Serrao v. Noel (1885), 15 Q. B. D. 549, C. A.).

(a) Finch v. Blount, supra. In Thurston v. Charles (1905), 21 T. L. R. 659, vindictive damages were awarded in an action for detention and conversion of a letter, but the judgment in that case may perhaps be supported on the ground that the action was in substance one of trespass in which vindictive damages may be awarded; see title TRESPASS, p. 867 ante. In an action of detinue the jury might formerly give such damages as would compel the defendant to deliver up the goods detained; see Hall v. White (1827), 3 C. & P. 136. As to what are vindictive damages, and when they may be awarded, see title DAMAGES, Vol. X., pp. 303 et seq. But the defendant in an action of detinue may now be ordered to deliver up the goods detained without having an option to pay damages; see p. 917, post.

SECT. 2.

Remedies.

When plaintiff's loss is measure of 1603. In some cases of trover and detinue the measure of damages is not the value of the goods, but the loss that the plaintiff has sustained. Thus, if a buyer of goods for which he has not paid sues the seller in conversion, the measure of damages is the real loss that the buyer has sustained, that is, the difference between the price which he would have to pay and that for which he could sell the goods; but in an action against a stranger the buyer, although he has not paid the price, is, if he is liable to the seller for the price, entitled to recover from the stranger the whole value of the goods (e). So if a person with a limited interest in goods is suing the owner in conversion, as, for instance, if a mortgagor is suing a mortgagee for a premature seizure of goods, the measure of damages is the value of the interest of the plaintiff, although if such a person were suing a wrongdoer, he would be entitled to recover the whole value of the goods (f).

If goods have been detained under an illegal claim to a sum of money in respect of them, upon payment of which the plaintiff might have recovered possession of his property, the measure of damages is not necessarily that sum, but the circumstance that the plaintiff might, by paying that sum, have obtained the goods is an element for the consideration of the jury in assessing the damages (g).

Nominal damages.

1604. In some cases in an action of trover or detinue the plaintiff may only be entitled to recover nominal damages (h).

v. London and South Western Bank, [1900] 1 Q. B. 270, C. A. As to the measure of damages for the conversion of a deposit note, see Olegg v. Baretta (1887), 56 L. T. 775.

Gorton* (1858), 1 F. & F. 359 (the payment of money on demand by plaintiffs as bailees of goods to the owner is admissible evidence of damages sustained in an action of trover against persons to whom the plaintiffs had entrusted the goods for conveyance).

(h) Hort v. London and North Western Rail. Co. (1879), 4 Ex. D. 188, C. A. (defendants held goods as warehousemen for the plaintiffs; an agent of the plaintiffs obtained the goods from the defendants, promising to forward them a delivery order from the plaintiffs; the delivery order was afterwards forwarded to the defendants; the plaintiffs were unable to obtain payment for the goods; held that the defendants, although they had been guilty of conversion, were only liable for nominal damages); Cameron v. Wynch (1846), 2 Car. & Kir. 264 (plaintiff had been endeavouring to baffle his creditors by a merely ostensible transfer of his goods to another; held that the measure of damages was the plaintiff's real and bona fide interest in the goods, and not the full value); Wills v. Wells (1818), 2 Moore (C. P.), 247 (A. effected an insurance on the life of B., and after an act of bankruptcy assigned the policy to C., who was aware of the assignor's circumstances. On the death of B. it was discovered that the life was not insurable, but the insurance company paid half of the sum for which the life was insured to C. as a gratuity and the policy was cancelled and remained in the hands of the company. In an action of trover brought by the assignee in bankruptcy of the bankrupt against C. to recover the value of the policy it was held that the assignee in bankruptcy was only entitled to the parchment on which the policy was written, and not to the sum paid to C., as it was a mere gratuitous and voluntary payment).

1605. Where the defendant in an action of trover or detinue has not been guilty of fraud or negligence and has bond fide incurred expenses with respect to the goods and the plaintiff has the benefit of such expenses, if the goods are delivered up to him, the defendant is entitled to reduce the damages awarded against him by the amount of such expenses (i); but a defendant who has wrongfully detained goods cannot show, in mitigation of damages, that he has sold the goods and applied the proceeds in satisfaction of a debt owing to him, by the plaintiff (k).

SECT. 2.

Remedies.

Expenses incurred by defendant.

1606. If the goods are delivered to the plaintiff ter action brought, the plaintiff is not entitled to more than nominal damages, unless he proves that he has suffered some damage by the detention or conversion (l).

Delivery of goods after action.

If the goods are returned in an injured state, the plaintiff is entitled to damages for such injury (m). If the goods have depreciated in value at the time of their return, the plaintiff is entitled to damages for the depreciation (n). The owner of a chattel who has been wrongfully deprived of its use may recover substantial damages, although he may not have incurred any out-of-pocket expenses (o).

Damages for injury.

If the defendant restores the chattel converted or detained to the plaintiff and the plaintiff claims no special damage, the court may stay proceedings on payment of nominal damages and costs (p). In a proper case, if the value of the chattel is ascertained, and no special damages are claimed, the court may order a stay of Bl. 902), but if he fails to get substantial damages, he may be made to pay the costs of the action (Hiori v. London and North Western Rail. Co., supra). In Earle v. Holderness (1823), 4 Bing. 462, an action of trover for a packet of letters, the defendant was allowed a stay of proceedings as to one of them upon delivering it up and paying costs; but in Philipps v. Hayward (1835), 1 Har. & W. 108, the court refused except by consent to assess the damages as to one of several articles claimed and strike it out of the declaration on its being delivered up to the plaintiff.

SUB-SECT. 3.—Waiver of Tort.

Effect of waiver.

1607. If a person's goods have been converted or detained and are sold by the wrongdoer, the owner may waive the tort and sue for money had and received (r), but if he does so, he cannot subsequently sue in trover or detinue (s). If the owner sues in trover and recovers judgment, the judgment is a bar to an action for money had and received in respect of the same goods (t).

If the captain of a ship wrongfully sells a cargo and the owner of the cargo sues the shipowner in trover and recovers a verdict to the extent only of the value of the ship and freight which represents only a part of the value of the cargo, the owner of the cargo is not precluded from suing the purchasers for money had and received for the residue (a).

Acceptance of part proceeds.

1608. Acceptance of part of the proceeds of goods converted may in some cases amount to a waiver of the tort (b). Where, however, a banknote which has been lost is converted by the finder to his own use, the subsequent acceptance by the owner of part of the proceeds is not such an affirming of the conversion as to amount to a waiver of the tort, and the owner may sue in trover for the balance, but the amount accepted will go in reduction of the damages (c).

Where no
waiver.

1609. If a person converts the goods of a bankrupt and the trustee in bankruptcy demands payment from such person as upon a sale by the bankrupt and payment is refused, the trustee is not precluded from suing in trover (d). If goods are converted by two persons and the owner accepts a sum of money, part of the proceeds of the

Appendix, 1, an action of detinue, where no special damages were claimed, the court compelled the plaintiff to elect whether he would stay all proceedings on delivery of the chattels in dispute on payment by the defendant of nominal damages and all costs, or would proceed for greater damages at the risk of all costs.

conversion, from one of the wrongdoers without prejudice to his claim against the other, this is not an election to affirm the wrongful act and waive the tort as against the other wrongdoer, and does not preclude the owner from suing the other wrongdoer in trover (e).

SECT. 2.
Remedies.

SECT. 3.—Defences.

SUB-SECT. 1.—In General.

1610. The defendant may deny that he converted or detained the goods in dispute, and thus put in issue not only the act alleged to constitute the conversion or detention, but also the circumstances alleged to make such act wrongful (f). Thus, he may show that the goods were lawfully taken under a distress or under an execution or with the leave and licence of the plaintiff (g). In detinue the detention may be denied or justified; in trover the conversion may be denied or the defendant may show that his acts did not amount to conversion; conversion is always a wrongful act, and cannot be confessed and avoided (h). It is a good defence in trover or detinue if the defendant shows that he never had possession of the goods, but it is no defence, if the defendant had possession of the goods, to show that he has lost them or parted with the possession, unless such loss or parting with the possession can be justified (i).

Denial of conversion.

1611. The defendant in an action of trover or detinue may deny the plaintiff's property in the goods or that he was entitled to the possession of the goods. This defence puts in issue the plaintiff's right to the possession of the goods at the time of the alleged conversion or detention (k). The defendant may show that he is entitled to a lien on the goods in respect of a debt or liability of the plaintiff (l), or that he is otherwise entitled to retain the goods as mortgagee, or pledgee, or owner or part owner, or as a person with a right to their possession (m). Defences.

as, for instance, by paying freight, in order to obtain possession of goods, he cannot insist on the owner's liability to tender these expenses as a defence in an action of trover (a).

Lien.

1612. If a defendant claims to retain the property sued for by virtue of a lien or otherwise as security for any sum of money, the court or a judge may order that the plaintiff be at liberty to pay into court, to abide the event of the action, the amount of money in respect of which the lien or security is claimed and a further sum, if the court or a judge so directs, for interest or costs, and that upon such payment into court being made the property claimed be given up to the party claiming (b).

Jus tertii.

1613. If the property in the goods is clearly proved in the action to belong to some person other than the plaintiff, he cannot succeed in an action of trover or detinue (c), but if a person in possession of goods sues in trover or detinue, the defendant cannot set up as a defence a title in some third person under whom he does not claim (d). A bailee of goods is precluded from questioning the title of his bailor or showing a property in any other person through whom he does not claim (e). If the plaintiff was not in possession of the goods at the time of the conversion, the defendant is entitled to set up the right of a third person (f).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Plaintiff's Conduct.

Estoppel.

1614. The plaintiff in an action of trover or detinue may be estopped by his conduct from setting up his title to the goods (g). Thus, if the owner of goods allows another to represent the goods as his own and by his words or conduct intentionally induces a third person to buy them bonâ fide, the owner cannot recover them from

Thomas*, supra. If a defendant who has taken goods out of pawn on being asked by the owner to deliver the goods says that he has not got them and refuses to say who has them, he cannot afterwards raise the defence that he has a right to insist on a tender of the money which he had advanced to take the goods out of pawn; a defendant can only insist on a tender of money due when on the tender being made the owner could obtain possession of the goods (Jones v. Clif (1833), 1 Cr. & M. 540).

the buyer (h). If the owner of goods is guilty of negligence which is the proximate cause of the wrongful delivery of the goods to an innocent person, the owner is estopped from setting up his title to the goods as against such person or those claiming under him (i). If the owner of lost or stolen goods is guilty of such negligence that third parties are thereby induced to acquire them bona fide and for value, the owner may be estopped from claiming the goods (k).

SECT. 3.
Defences

If the owner of goods affirms the taking possession of them by the defendant, as, for instance, where the defendant innocently takes possession of the goods and sells them bona fide and delivers on account of the sale and pays the balance after deducting expenses to the owner and the balance is accepted, the owner cannot treat the seller as a wrongdoer (l).

Ratification

1615. If the plaintiff in an action of trover or detinue has previously waived the tort by suing for money had and received or obtaining an order for the proceeds of the sale of the goods sought to be recovered, the defendant may avail himself of the waiver as a defence to the action of trover or detinue (m).

Waiver.

1616. If the plaintiff in an action of trover or detinue has previously sued the defendant or a person who is jointly liable in tort with the defendant, the judgment in such previous action, even if unsatisfied, is a bar to the second action (n).

Judgment.

1617. If the plaintiff in an action of trover or detinue has accepted a sum of money in full discharge of his claims against the defendant or against a joint tortfeasor with the defendant, such acceptance is a bar to the action (o).

If an action of trover is brought against B. and another action is brought for the same chattel against C., and the plaintiff succeeds in the action against B. and fails in the action against C. on a plea denying the plaintiff's property and C. is a party to the delivery of the chattel to the plaintiff under the judgment against B., but at the same time gives notice to the plaintiff demanding the chattel from him, C. is not estopped by being a party to the delivery from proving his title and recovering the chattel from the plaintiff (Sandys v. Hodgson (1839), 10 Ad. & El. 472). As to the defence of jus tertii, see, further, title MISREPRESENTATION AND FRAUD, Vol. XX., pp. 751, 752.

SECT. 3.

Defences.

Time of return.SUB-SECT. 3.—Return of Goods.

1618. The defendant may allege and show that he returned the goods either before or after action brought. If the goods were returned before action brought, the defendant is entitled to judgment in the action, unless the plaintiff proves that he has suffered special damage by being deprived of them for a time; if the goods were delivered after action brought, the plaintiff is only entitled to nominal damages, unless he shows he has actually suffered damage (p).

SUB-SECT. 4.—*Payment into Court.*When available.

1619. Payment of money into court cannot be pleaded in respect of a claim for the return of goods or their value (q), but it can be pleaded to a claim for damages for detention or conversion, and, in an action of detinue for the return of goods or their value, if the defendant returns the goods, even after action brought, and pays sufficient money into court in respect of damages for their detention, he is entitled to succeed in the action (r).

SUB-SECT. 5.—*Lapse of Time.*Lapse of time.

1620. An action of trover or detinue is barred at the expiration of six years from the accrual of the cause of action (s), and a defendant who raises and proves this defence is entitled to judgment in the action (t).

SECT. 4.—*Judgment.*Distinction between trover and detinue.

1621. Judgment for the plaintiff in trover is for the recovery of damages for the conversion; judgment for the plaintiff in detinue is for delivery of the chattel in dispute or for damages to be reduced, if the chattel is delivered up, or for the delivery of the chattel and damages, if any have been sustained (a).

Transfer of property.

1622. If a plaintiff has obtained judgment in trover or judgment in detinue for the return of the chattel in dispute or the payment of its value, the judgment, if satisfied by the payment of damages, vests the property in the chattel in the defendant (b).

4 Tyr. 485. A recovery in trespass is a bar to an action of trover for the same taking (Putt v. Roster (1682), 2 Mod. Rep. 318). If an application is made to a magistrate for an order for the delivery of goods and the order is, after inquiry, refused, the owner is not precluded by having taken these proceedings from bringing an action of trover or detinue for the goods (Dover v. Child (1876), 1 Ex. D. 172); but the right to take proceedings against a person in possession of property delivered under such order ceases on the expiration of six months from the date of the order (Police (Property) Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 30), s. 1 (2)^h); see title MAGISTRATES, Vol. XIX., p. 606.

(b) Brinsmead v. Harrison (1871), L. R. 6 Q. B. 534; Cooper v. Shepherd (1846), 3 C. B. 266. The judgment does not change the property until there is satisfaction of the value found by the judgment (Re Ware, Ex parte 1623. If an action of trover or detinue is brought in respect of several chattels and the plaintiff recovers in respect of some, but fails in respect of others, the issue is divisible, and the plaintiff is entitled to have the verdict entered generally for him with costs in respect of those chattels which he recovers, and the defendant is entitled to a verdict and to costs as to so much of the cause of action as he succeeds on (c).

SECT. 4.
Judgment.
Costs.

1624. Judgment may be given in detinue, at the discretion of the court, for the delivery of the chattel and for damages, if any have been sustained (d).

Delivery of chattel.

An order may be made by the court under its equitable jurisdiction for the specific delivery of a chattel without measuring its value, when from the nature of the chattel there can be no compensation in damages (e), or where the person in possession of Drake (1877), 5 Ch. D. 866, C. A.); see title JUDGMENTS AND ORDERS, Vol. XVIII., p. 209. If in an action of detinue the defendant becomes bankrupt, the plaintiff is entitled to apply in bankruptcy for an order upon the trustee to deliver up the chattel to him (Re Ware, Ex parte Drake, supra). Where a plaintiff obtains judgment in detinue for £100, to be reduced to nothing if the chattel is given up, and the chattel is tendered to him, he cannot prove in the bankruptcy of the defendant for its value (Re Scarth (1874), 10 Ch. App. 234). If a plaintiff recovers interlocutory judgment against a defendant in trover, but does not obtain satisfaction, he may waive the judgment and bring trover against a person to whom the defendant had sold the chattel (Marston v. Phillips (1863), 9 L. T. 289).

(c) Williams v. Great Western Rail. Co. (1841), 8 M. & W. 856. As to specific delivery of goods, see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 52; and title SALE OF GOODS, Vol. XXV., p. 272; but see Shannon v. Owen (1827), 1 Man. & Ry. (K. B.) 392.

(d) R. S. C., Ord. 48, r. 1; taken from the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 125), s. 78 (now repealed). Before that Act judgment in detinue gave the defendant an option to return the chattel or pay for its value; now the court has a discretion to make an order for the return of the chattel without giving the defendant an option to pay for its value; the discretion is subject to review (Chillon v. Carrington (1855), 15 Q. B. 730). Before the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 125), it was necessary that a judgment in detinue should ascertain the value of the chattel in dispute or give some means of ascertaining it (Phillips v. Jones (1850), 15 Q. B. 859, Ex. Ch.). Now an order can be made for a writ of delivery whether the value of the property has been assessed or not (R. S. C., Ord. 48, r. 1; Hymas v. Ogden, [1905] 1 K. B. 246, 250, C. A.; Ivory v. Cruickshank, [1875] W. N. 249); see title EXECUTION, Vol. XIV., pp. 74, 75. In an action of detinue brought in the county court the county court judge can make an order for the delivery of the chattel in dispute without giving the defendant the option to pay the assessed value (Winfield v. Boothroyd (1886), 54 L. T. 574). If the plaintiff so desires, he may issue a writ of fi. fa. to recover the assessed value of the chattels (Yearly Supreme Court Practice, 1914, p. 706, n.). The writ of delivery is only enforceable by distraint by the sheriff. If the specific delivery of chattels is required, it may be necessary to obtain a writ of assistance by which actual possession may be obtained (R. S. C., Ord. 48, r. 2; Wyman v. Knight (1888), 39 Ch. D. 165; Re Taylor, Taylor v. Rawson, [1913] W. N. 212; see title EXECUTION, Vol. XIV., p. 74).

Beljemann* (1862), 2 John. & H. 544, where the plaintiff had put a fixed price on a picture the restitution of which was sought, it was held that damages would be an adequate remedy, and that there was no jurisdiction in a court of equity to interfere by making an order for restitution. In Batey & Co. v. Morgan (1886), 2 T. L. R. 316, the court granted an injunction against the defendants to prevent them from repeating in the future wrongful acts of conversion which were the subject-matter of the action.
